England's Responsibility towards Armenia, by Canon Malcolm MacColl, is a very lucid essay on a subject of great present interest. The pages show that the horrors that have of late been enacted in Asia Minor are easily explicable in view of Mohammedan doctrine, and will assuredly recur so long as corrupt and cruel Turkish rule is fostered by the European Powers. Canon MacColl has written with his blood at boiling point, and his pamphlet should have many readers. (2s. 6d. Longmans.)

My Last Will and Testament, by Hyacinthe Loyson (Père Hyacinthe), contains three documents, written at interesting periods of an eventful life. In the first, issued in 1869, the celebrated preacher announced his withdrawal from the pulpit of Notre Dame; in the second, written in 1872, on the eve of his marriage, he renounces celibacy; and in the third, dated 1893, he affirms once more the principles on which he had acted for nearly twenty-five years. Some other documents on religious reform appear in an appendix. There is a good portrait of the author, and the work, which will have peculiar attractions for many, is introduced to English readers by Dean Farrar. (1s. Cassells.)

Is Your Name Written in the Lamb's Book of Life? This pointed question, asked by a beloved daughter of a careless friend, a few days before her death, is used by the compiler as the basis of a telling card, pressing home the serious personal interrogation. (S. W. Partridge.)

A Solemn Crisis. By Gerald Coultas. A re-issue of the "Vision of a Popular Minister" as to the analysis of his own zeal and the discovery that the component parts thereof are far from satisfactory. We trust it will yet again have a wide circulation, and be the means of stirring up many. (Marshall. 1d.)

Margate.—Friends visiting this health resort will be glad to hear that the noonday meeting, inaugurated last June, is still carried on at No. 4, Cecil-square.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. J. Albinson, evangelist, is obliged, through the strain of work, to seek rest and change for a time.

Mr. A. E. Fletcher, late editor of The Daily Chronicle, has undertaken the editorship of The New Age, to which he will contribute largely.

Rev. T. L. Johnson, we regret to hear, on account of continued ill-health, has been obliged to cancel all preaching engagements and take a three months' rest.

Mr. John Shrimpton, having now been able to return to England, desires to express his cordial and sincere thanks for our readers' kind inquiries and sympathy during his long illness.

Rev. Lancelot Holland, formerly of All Saints', Hatcham, and lately of St. Thomas's, Edinburgh, will preach in Talbot Tabernacle during June, in the beloved pastor's absence in search of health.

Mr. William R. Moody, elder son of Mr. D. L. Moody, who has special charge of the preparation of young men for college and business at Mount Hermon School, has been speaking at various places in the States with great acceptance.

Misses Wellington, of Evian-les-Bains, Haute Savoie, are now in England, and would be very glad of opportunities to speak of the Lord's work in Evian, in drawing-room or other meetings. Present address, House of Rest, 10, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. Charles Edwards, who for many years has been the Superintendent of Miss Perks's Soldiers' Home, Winchester, and whose recovery from his recent illness has gladdened many friends, was presented last week with a substantial token of esteem. The Mayor of Winchester, who presided, expressed strongly his sense of the good work done by the Home.

Mr. William Carruthers, well known as a Christian scientist and active leader in Presbyterian circles, is about to retire from his post as keeper of the department of botany in the British Museum. His important contributions to botanical science have long been widely recognised. He was president of the Linnæan Society during the four years 1886-9.

It is a curious coincidence (says Truth) that the late Lord Selborne made one in a trinity of Lord Chancellors, the others being Lords Hatherley and Cairns, who, succeeding one another on the Woolsack, were all equally distinguished by their personal piety and their strong religious views. It used to be said of them that they had all three been Sunday-school teachers.

Rev. Alexander Robertson, D.D., Scottish minister, Venice, had the honour of being received in private audience by His Majesty King Humbert during the recent Royal visit to Venice. The interview lasted some time, and was of a very cordial nature. Such an event is a proof of the noble character of King Humbert, and of his sympathy with Protestant writers and workers in Italy.

Mr. E. C. Newbery, of San Remo, who for sixteen years has been distributing tracts without let or hindrance in various parts of the Continent, finds himself face to face with a law which prohibits, under certain penalties, all such work. This law, which has never before been enforced against him, was passed originally with a view to check the spread of anarchist and socialistic propaganda. He is hoping to obtain a Government permit to secure him the same immunity he has hitherto enjoyed.

Mrs. Grace Stott.—A member of the C.I. Mission at Wenchow, sends an interesting account of special gatherings of native Christians in that city and district to celebrate Mrs. Stott's fiftieth birthday (March 12), and twenty-fifth anniversary of her beginning work in China. Many converts came from a distance, and various tokens of affectionate esteem were presented to Mrs. Stott. In the meetings held there were frequent loving references made to her late husband, Mr. Stott, and the devoted labours of both in the early days of the Mission. As a fruit of these labours, supplemented by those of later workers, there are now over 1000 church members in the city, besides 2000 others who meet regularly for instruction.

WOMEN'S WORK.—The annual united sale of work from industrial and benevolent institutions in connection with the Society for Promoting Female Welfare, will be held in the Royal Albert Hall on Thursday and Friday, May 16 and 17. The sale will be opened by the Countess of Chichester, at 12.30. Among the many excellent agencies having stalls will be the Y.W.C.A., the Factory Helpers' Union, the Cripples' Home, Princess Mary Village Homes, Mount Hermon Homes, Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, and the Belleville Mission, Paris. Miss De Broen trusts that friends will not forget to visit the "French Stall."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Canon Eyre commenced on Sunday his new duties at Sheffield.

A new mission chapel has been opened in Belle Vue, Wakefield.

A new church is about to be built in St. Thomas, a growing district of Exeter.

The Bishop of Liverpool celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday on Saturday.

Rev. Henry Sutton will be inducted to his new charge at Aston on Saturday next.

A correspondent of The Times has been laying stress upon the propriety of having an Industrial Mission in Uganda.

The Record has a special leader on the death of Lord Selborne, which it deplores as a well-nigh irreparable loss to the Church.

The Church of England Zenana Missionary Society reports a balance in hand. The income has been £39,963. The total number of missionaries is now 175.

Rev. Edgar Lambert, of Heene, has been appointed to the senior chaplaincy of the Mersey Missions to Seamen—a work in which he has long taken a warm personal interest.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone has gone to the West Indies to endeavour to arouse the Christian Africans to an intelligent interest in evangelistic work in West Equatorial Africa. He hopes to find among them many fresh workers.

The S.P.G. reports an income for last year of £122,327, being an increase of £9248 over the previous year, and largely from legacies. The number of ordained missionaries is 719, including 232 in Asia, 173 in Africa, eighteen in Australia and the Pacific, 209 in North America, thirty-eight in the West Indies, and thirty-nine chaplains in Europe.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. H. Towle has been recognised as pastor at Strood.

Plaistow Church reports 589 members, with 1006 Sunday scholars and a large amount of earnest work.

Rev. A. Pringle preached his farewell sermons at Maidstone, prior to entering on the pastorate at Caterham.

The new church at Kettering reports 130 members; in the Sunday-schools are 199 scholars and twenty-eight teachers.

Rev. W. H. Fox has intimated his intention of shortly resigning the pastorate at Malton, where he has ministered usefully for fourteen years.

The Colonial Missionary Society has entered upon its sixtieth year. A series of interesting meetings was held last week and this in celebration of the event.

As the result of mission services conducted at Broad Oak by members of Watling-street, Canterbury (Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion), a new church has been formed.

At the Quarterly Meeting of the North-West District of the London Union, at Queen's-park Chapel, Dr. Charles Leach gave an address on "Possibilities of Future Work."

The sale of the mission steamer, Good News, on Lake Tanganyika, Central Africa, to the African Lakes Corporation, has been approved by the directors of the London Missionary Society.

At the centenary meeting of the London Missionary Society, held in Northampton, Canon Hull, vicar, delivered an address, in which he congratulated the Society on the work it had been able to accomplish, and referred to two former pastors of Commercial-street Chapel, Revs. E. T. Prust and T. Gasquoine, as being among his best friends.

Calls.—Rev. W. A. H. Legg, of Mansfield, to Streatham; Rev. Joseph Henderson, of Dudley, to Oak-road, Leeds; Rev. S. Jackson, to Bishop's Castle, Shropshire; Mr. H. J. Howell, to Freemantle, Southampton.

Resignations.—Rev. J. Easton Browne, of St. Andrew's, North Shields; Rev. J. W. Houchin, of Ingatestone; Rev. T. R. Forbes, of Knottingley.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. R. Wood is now seeking rest and change in Italy.

Rev. Thomas Lewis and Mrs. Lewis have arrived from the Congo.

Rev. R. H. Roberts is still confined to his bed, the weakness in his limbs occasioning much anxiety.

Rev. S. B. Drake, of China, with Mrs. Drake and children, has reached this country on furlough, also Rev. E. C. and Mrs. Nickalls.

Princes-street Church, Northampton, reports thirty-one admissions to fellowship during the first year's pastorate of Rev. Arthur Morgan.

Great interest must have been felt by many in the service at Talbot Tabernacle on Wednesday week, when the venerable Rev. Charles Stirling was, with his wife, baptized by Dr. Gritton.

Rev. J. W. Barker, who left Wakefield in January, 1894, to undertake the pastorate of Middletown Springs Church, Vermont, U.S.A., has accepted the pastorate of Pitsford Church, Vermont.

In the last three months of 1894 the Baptist missionaries in Germany connected with the Missionary Union reported 145 baptisms, 1,594 sermons, and 1,437 meetings in 232 preaching stations.

The committee of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association appeal to ministers to secure petitions, signed by them on behalf of their respective congregations, in favour of the Liquor Traffic Local Control Bill now before Parliament.

Rev. J. R. M. Stephens, Rev. A. E. Scrivener and Mrs. Scrivener have left for Antwerp, there to embark with Rev. P. Davies in the s.s. Leopoldville for the Congo. A large number of friends assembled at Liverpool Station to say farewell.

At the meetings of the East Midland Association, held at Newark, Rev. E. E. Coleman read a paper on "The Foundations of Belief," with special reference to Mr. Balfour's new book. At the afternoon conference Rev. G. H. Bennett spoke of "Conditions Essential to Church Prosperity." The public meeting in the evening was presided over by Mr. Henry Ashwell.

The Baptist Extension Scheme has opened in Blackburn the first church erected by it. Sermons were preached by Revs. J. G. Greenhough and J. H. Shakespeare. There have been Baptists in Blackburn since 1726, but a meeting-place for regular services was not provided until 1757; a church was formed in 1760, and four years afterwards a chapel in Islington Croft, now occupied by the Strict Baptists, was erected. Since 1880 there has been a flourishing church under the pastorate of Rev. M. H. Whetnall. On Sunday, Rev. Walter A. Mursell (pastor) preached to large congregations.

Calls.—Rev. A. Duncan, of Garrow, to Waterfoot, Rossendale; Mr. H. C. Wagnall to Morecambe; Mr. J. L. Harvey, of Aberdeen, to Castlegate, Berwick.

Resignations.—Rev. T. Gardiner, of Penzance; Rev. W. Morgan of Castleton, Cardiff.

METHODIST.

A new mission-hall is being put up at Greengates, Bradford.

The Southport Convention is fixed for the first week in July.

Rev. Dr. Hodge, medical missionary of Hankow, is likely to be invalided home.

New chapels are being erected at Even Swindon, Laverton, and South Croydon.

Rev. Richard Hughes, from the West Indies, is coming home by reason of ill-health.

A Wesleyan committee is investigating the working of adult Bible-classes and P.S.A. gatherings.

Rev. Joseph Olphert, who has been absent on a voyage to New Zealand, has returned to his duties at St. John's Wood Mission.

The missionary meetings held in connection with the Wesleyan anniversary are considered as having been on the whole a decided success.

The "Out and Out Band" movement exhibits steady progress under the direction of Revs. J. Gregory Mantle, Thos. Cook, and others, useful work especially being done by the mission cars.

For nearly the twentieth year in succession the Methodist New Connexion is assured of a net income of members on the returns of the year. The exact figures are not yet known, but the increase will be between 150 and 200.

The vicar of Burwash Weald refers in his parish magazine to the death of Mr. E. Simes, the founder of the Wesleyan society in the village, commending and admiring Mr. Simes's earnestness and zeal in providing a place of worship for those whose religious convictions he shared.

A series of great meetings have been held in Leeds under the auspices of the Leeds Primitive Methodist Council, and in aid of the Central Mission, which, since its commencement in July last, has had an encouraging career. The congregation has almost trebled, the membership has increased quarter by quarter, conversions have been witnessed almost weekly, the church is active, and temperance and social agencies have had a distinctive place in the programme of work done.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new mission hall is about to be built by the Brondesbury congregation.

The foundation-stones of the new church being built in Heaton were laid last week.

The General Assembly of the U.S.A. Presbyterian Church, North, meets May 16, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

The mission stations at Bromley, Highfield, Smithdown-road, Liverpool, Whitley, and West Stanley are to be formed into organised churches.

Rev. A. N. Mackray, of Croydon, who is again troubled with his eyesight, wrote to the Presbytery last week that he would be shut up in the house of his oculist for the next month.

Bala College special fund has now reached £15,000. The students of the college are contemplating starting an industrial mission in Central Africa. There are seventeen students now at the college preparing for foreign mission work.

The following ministers have been appointed to serve this year as Synod evangelists:—Revs. J. Howie Boyd (Carlisle), J. Jeffrey Johnstone (Forest Hill), Dr. Thornton (Camden-road), Charles D. Kay (Woolston), and James Fraser (Birkenhead).

Calls.—Rev. A. B. Connor, of Aberdeen, to Forres; Rev. R. Primrose to Burnbank, Glasgow; Rev. W. Mackenzie to Alexander-parade, Glasgow.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At West Croydon, on 5th inst., Rev. E. J. Silverton, for many years a Baptist pastor, and in recent years well known in connection with ear trumpets.—At Worcester, on 30th ult., Mrs. William Davis, aged 88, well known among the Friends.—At The Hillyers, Osney-crescent, Camden-road, N.W., on 3rd inst., Miss F. Appeals.

Frazier-street Mission, Lambeth.—Rev. J. B. Barraclough, vicar of St. Thomas's, makes a special appeal for the rent and working expenses of a house in the Lower Marsh, which is being used for mission work in a very needy district. Gifts of suitable books for the library, and magazines for the reading-room, will be thankfully received at the Vicarage.

Holyhead has a population of about 9000 persons, the majority of whom are of the working class, and something like one thousand of the men are engaged on the railway, or on the railway company's steamers. In order to reach these men, the late Miss Crossle, of Dublin, formed a branch of the Railway Mission in 1890, and the work has been carried on ever since, but under considerable disadvantage, as the Mission has no room of its own. A lady now superintends the work, and an effort is being made to erect an iron hall, near the station, at a cost of £300, to seat 200. Unless friends outside render assistance, it will be many months, perhaps years, before the hall can be built; it is desired to build it at once, for the need is great.—Francis M. Cotton, Gorse Hill, Holyhead.

Dublin Visiting Medical Mission.—During the past winter months the work of this Mission has increased to such an extent that the workers find themselves face to face with a great difficulty. The patients are too numerous to be attended by one doctor, 117 being present on a recent occasion at the morning dispensary. They do not think it right to send any needy ones from the doors, especially as there seems such willingness to attend the Gospel services. It will be seen by these numbers that an assistant doctor is absolutely necessary, for whom additional space is needed for a second consulting-room. £135 are still needed for the purchase fund to buy out the middle landlord. They require immediately £300 to enable them to cope with the pressing needs of the Mission.—Mrs. E. J. Figgis, Jun., 6, Simmonscourt Villas, Donnybrook, Dublin.

Limehouse.—Mr. Ramsay Smith, 20, Prestage-street, Poplar, supt. of a ragged school in this district, greatly desires the help of three or four Evangelical brethren for an hour on Sunday evenings. He will gladly give particulars to any who can render this service.

CONSUMPTION,

ALL CHEST DISEASES.

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

EIGHTY-NINTH INTERVIEW,

With Mr. S. E. WORTON, R.A.M., South-end House, Elland, Yorks.

"COMPLETE AND PERMANENT RESTORATION TO HEALTH."

This case was published in the weekly journals of August 4th, 1892.

The reference above-mentioned as to Mr. Worton's case was very brief, and may well be reproduced here. The patient wrote: "Nearly thirteen years ago I was a patient of yours. I need hardly say how thankful I am that, under God, your treatment of me was blessed to my complete restoration to health. Two or three friends of mine have also benefited exceedingly from your treatment."

When I called upon Mr. Worton recently at Elland he was good enough to add to the foregoing the following facts:—

"There has been Consumption in my family. In 1879 I had a severe cough for six or eight months; the expectoration was sometimes mixed with blood. I got so ill that I was confined to bed for three weeks. I had three local doctors. After a time I got a little better, but the cough and expectoration continued. Then I wrote to Mr. Congreve, with the result that less than four bottles of his medicine quite cured me. Since that time I have had no return of chest trouble, except once when I caught cold, and then what I had left of the last bottle of the Elixir put me right."

Mr. Worton added that he knew of other cases where great benefit had resulted from Mr. Congreve's treatment, and gave me his permission to publish this testimony.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. Notes and Comments.

We hope no reader will overlook the stirring "News from Uganda," in our present issue, with its important testimony to native agency, and its earnest appeal for Bibles (p. 11).

Applications are now coming to us from workers among London children and London poor, for a share in our "Day in the Country" fund. At present the fund is non-existent, and we therefore remind our kind readers of the opportunity this movement affords them of throwing some rays of brightness into the lives of our City-bound folk. Those who unstintedly enjoy the healthy delights of country life might well act on the Christian motto: "Freely ye have received: freely give."

The annual meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children raised two points of interest at least. It showed that the punishing of parents may be their reclamation. A father of confirmed violent temper who was imprisoned for two months for twisting his little girl's arm till it was almost useless, came home a changed man; his wife has not known so much comfort in the house for thirteen years, and only wishes he had been prosecuted sooner. Punishment seems to awaken a sense of responsibility in some natures. Another point of interest was one raised by Mr. Rider Haggard, who said there was no instance of the ill-treatment of a child by savages. We should like to hear other testimony on the point, for the cruelty of the heathen to their children in such lands as China is notorious.

The Wesleyan Methodist leaders, or some of them, appear to be very unwilling to give women a place in their official gatherings. This is strange when we remember what honour Wesley himself put upon women, and what a debt the denomination owes to them. True, Wesley gave them no legislative power, but a great many things have happened since he died. According to Dr. Rigg there has been a development according to the spirit and needs of the times through which Methodism has passed. And the time seems to have fully come when all branches of the Church will be compelled to give women a higher place, and a more equal right in everything that concerns doctrine and practice. They have worked long enough and hard enough for the privilege and responsibility now enjoyed only by men.

The medical profession can be of more use in aiding persons to be temperate and continent than by any number of cures of diseases they effect; and we are glad to see that in New York as many as fifty-nine medical men have signed a declaration saying that a "pure continent life, for both sexes, is consonant with the best conditions of physical, mental, and moral health." A similar declaration has been signed by the medical faculty of the University of Christiania, as a reply to a declaration of an opposite kind recently issued. There will be necessity laid upon these professors of a noble art to take high moral ground. Any medical man who should rally the whole force of his profession to the side of morality would do an unspeakable service to humanity.

The publicans' and brewers' party are making a resolute stand for their interests; they have posted the streets of provincial towns with bills setting forth the superior condition of towns in which Sunday closing does not obtain, over towns where it does obtain. The number of convictions for drunkenness in Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, is far in excess of those in England. This method will, no doubt, mislead many of the uninformed. But, first, it should never be forgotten that charges for drunkenness depend entirely upon the laxity or vigilance of the police, and in England they are not "hard on a drunken man." And, second, it is curious that the Scotch, Welsh, and Irish people, speaking through their members of Parliament, prefer Sunday closing. They ought to know.

In one of our contemporaries the remark is made that at the late meeting of the L.M.S. too frequent and too emphatic mention was made of the deficit of the Society. The true way to put the case we believe to be this:—The Society has had a century of extraordinary blessing; within the last four years as many as sixty-nine fresh workers have been added to the staff; the ordinary income has been greatly augmented; a special fund of £60,000 has been already given or promised, and in all probability not less than £100,000 will be raised. This meets all deficiencies. The idea of failure comes from the Society not having sent out a hundred fresh workers in four years, and raised a proportionate income to meet the increased expenditure; it is a disappointment as to an ideal which may or may not have been wise. The facts are ample ground for thanksgiving.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson, the Wesleyan Connexional editor, says that after a forty years' ministry, and after reading by far the greater portion of the representative books of the generation, theological and philosophical, he holds substantially the great doctrines that were first of all taught him from his mother's lips; of course he expresses himself somewhat differently. He thinks that there is a great future for a living and Evangelical Church; and that where you have the widest creed you generally have the thinnest and feeblest church. He is also of opinion that theologians who strive after originality often give to the world their own vagaries instead of declaring the doctrines of that Evangelical Christianity that has created Christendom itself. These are wise and true words, and we only wish that the meaning and spirit of them might enter into the minds of younger men at the outset of their ministry, and keep them from possible years of barrenness over which they will bitterly wail when it is too late to recover them.

Now that the war between Japan and China is ended, we may well feel grateful that there has been no outbreak of fanatical hatred on the part of the Chinese against the Christians. The death of Mr. Wylie at the beginning of the war raised grave anxieties, but the good hand of God has prevented the doing of any further harm. The work of the missionaries has hardly been interrupted; indeed, it has had extension in one direction, viz., in the nursing and healing of wounded soldiers; and nothing appeals so powerfully to a Chinaman as kindness shown in this way. Said a Chinaman who had been successfully treated by a medical missionary, "Every countryman of yours shall be a friend of mine."

The whole subject of the treatment of animals will have to be pressed to the front by the Christian conscience. If animals are for man's use, it must be a use which will make him less selfish, less brutal, less hard and reckless. Does the present treatment of them in many respects tend in that direction? Does the war waged against birds, some of them of the richest plumage, some of the sweetest song, tend to humanise the hunter? Is it even fair hunting? Does vivisection, which means such things as animals baked to death, dogs skinned alive, crushing by degrees, pinching with pincers the most tender parts, does that tend to elevate man morally and religiously? Animals are a trust from God, and to treat them in this way is to betray the trust. The love of animals for those who are kind to them is a proof that man has a blessing in them which only a few know and enjoy. It is a disgrace to man that animals which have never found out his treachery and cruelty have no fear of him, but once they know him they shun him.

Rev. Charles Bullock, in last week's Record, points out that the Archbishop of Canterbury, in his invitation to prayer for unity, has unhappily classed Presbyterians and Nonconforming Protestants with the Pope and the members of the Roman communion. He remarks that this classification is not a step likely to promote uniformity in ecclesiastical matters, to say nothing of Christian unity. Mr. Bullock sees clearly what the Archbishop seems to have overlooked—Christian unity depends altogether on our individual spiritual union with Christ. He proceeds:—

> Let this be heartily acknowledged by us, without any reserve or qualification; and the world will then soon see how fully Christ's prayer for the unity of his people has been answered, and is really being answered to-day, in the realised unity of "the blessed company of all faithful people"—believing members of his one Church; and, moreover, this union in Christ realised will be the most effectual remedy for all sectarian division or bitterness in visible Protestant churches. On the other hand, nothing can be more dangerous than the vain attempt, so popular just now, to substitute for Christ's prayer for the manifestation of the spiritual unity, of true membership in Him, "as He is in the Father," our own prayer for the mere ecclesiastical supremacy of Episcopacy, Presbyterianism or Congregationalism as if the one or the other of these communions could be "the Body of Christ."

These are wholesome and timely words. A sense of the spirituality of the Church will save us from much confusion.

In the May issue of The United Service Magazine, Major-General Tulloch writes on the passage of the Red Sea by the Israelites. From a military examination of the actual district, and after considering what its condition was in ancient times, he declares the simple Bible narrative to be evidently a very graphic and correct account of what really took place. This is another addition to the long list of corroborations of Old Testament story.

Not often have we seen a distinction more admirably drawn than that by Principal Cave when he says, in "The Battle of the Standpoints":—

The "Higher Critics" are not the "Better Critics," as if they were gifted with a sort of genius in criticism. Nor are the utterances of the "Higher Critics" to be implicitly accepted, like the deliverances of a great painter on painting, or of a great poet on poetry. The Higher Critics claim to be scientists, not artists, and must be judged by the facts and arguments they adduce, not by their possession of a superior faculty.

The air of superiority which is generally, if not always, assumed by those who repudiate the orthodox views very easily misleads the uninstructed and timid; it is a "vain show" when anyone has the courage to go right up to it, and examine its pretensions. Objectors to the truth often strike us as men of singularly rigid minds and dogmatic tempers. Some of their interpretations reveal a singular lack of imagination.

Should the pulpit be used for the discussion of those points on which scholars and able men differ—the composition and authorship of the books of Scripture, the time when they were written, etc.? We are told that such questions are in the air, that young people read about them, and that ministers as honest guides are bound to give a judgment upon them. Now, we submit that for one who, in an ordinary congregation, takes an interest in them, a hundred do not. We all are apt to assume that things which interest us have the same fascination for others, but a pastor knows that the majority—the enormous majority—have no power to appreciate the points involved. And further, as Dr. Forsyth observes:—

Experience proves that you cannot do much in the pulpit, in the way of attack or destruction, without interesting the hearers much more in the negative than in the positive aspect of the case. Besides, the pulpit is there for another purpose. It is to utter and press Christ. It is not to preach like Christ, but to preach Christ.

Archdeacon Wilson, of Rochdale, asks in his Visitation addresses:—

Could that message of the Gospel heal our social diseases, reconcile class to class in true sympathy and brotherhood? Could it mitigate the cruel results of competition, inspire care for the children, correlate labour and capital, unite different bodies of Christians, educate the conscience of our congregations to see that God cared for the religion of service, and only for the religion of worship in so far as it trained for the religion of service? Could it, in a word, train men to live brotherly and beautiful lives? If not, it was doomed to pass away?

It can do all this—has done it, and will do it again. But we confess that the hardest of all seems to be "to mitigate the cruel results of competition." Will this ever be done perfectly until competition is abolished?

The every-day Englishman, who is busy with his business or work, is apt to imagine that his national affairs are in the hands of a body of perfectly disinterested gentlemen. Now and again, however, things occur to disturb him, but in the main he cherishes his faith, which is, unhappily, largely a delusion. Proof? See Mr. Escott's "Monograph" on Lord Randolph Churchill, where he treats of Lord Randolph's resignation of office:—

Churchill's personal following was nearly as numerous as, and possibly to himself seemed in weight more considerable than, that of the Premier. Within a few hours of his secession becoming publicly known, two hundred members of the House of Commons called at his private house in Connaught-place, suppliantly to ascertain how they stood with him in whom they recognised the fresh depositary of power and dispenser of patronage.

Can we wonder that moral questions in the House of Commons often fare so badly? If one party contained two hundred self-seeking members looking out for place and pelf, would the other party have fallen far short of the same number? Four hundred members of that sort out of 650 is a large proportion. This helps us to understand a great many things.

There is an interesting passage in the "Life and Letters" of Dr. Freeman, the historian, on his faith in Christianity:—

. . . You ask, am I still a believer? Certainly. That is, I believe the Christian religion to be from God, in a sense beyond that in which all things are from God. One cannot study history without seeing this. The fact that there was a Holy Roman Empire, that is, the fact that the Roman Empire could ever come to be holy in a Christian sense, is enough.

Islam succeeded by the most obvious causes, by appealing to all that was good and bad in the Arab of the seventh century. Christianity, on the other hand, went right in the teeth of all that was good and bad in the Roman of the fourth century. Yet it succeeded; and I cannot account for its success by any ordinary cause. As I said in one of my published lectures, for Cæsar Augustus to be led to worship a crucified Jew was a greater miracle than the cleaving of rocks or the raising of the dead.

The same line of remark would be true to-day, were Christianity compared with any other religion. It makes men holy as no other religion does; it goes right against their passions and delights, and brings them into a new world.

The Quarterly Review contains an article on "The Bible at Home and Abroad" which will have some tendency to counteract the unsettling views which are promulgated in so many quarters. The achievements of the Book remain its grand defence. The writer truly says:—

Let the reader consider the little streamlets of versions, stealthily opened and sedulously choked up again, as men, at the peril of their lives, risked all to give their fellows a taste of the living waters which others in their blindness as eagerly withheld, and it will, we think, be acknowledged that the story is unrivalled in thrilling romance and chivalrous endeavour.

Bishop Steere materially helped, by his labours in the Swahili, to make that language the lingua franca across the entire Continent of Africa.

One of the most remarkable results of the Bible has been its preservation of languages which are now dead.

Think of the languages the Bible has embalmed—the Hebrew, the Mœso-Gothic, the Old Syriac, the Gothic, the Old Slavonic—some to remain the sole monuments of the speech of dead and buried nationalities, others after the trance of centuries possibly (as in the Nestorian Churches of Armenia) to awake and speak with a tongue of fire to hearts that it alone could move.

A similar process is now going on in the South Seas, where several of the tribes for whom the Scriptures have been translated are passing away; the grand Book they learned to read and to love will probably remain their most enduring monument. Is this lost labour—to translate a book for a dying people? Not so. The great end of life is to know God; and no labour is in vain which secures that object.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

The Summary of Work for last year in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews tells of many and varied efforts. The workers are numerous, and they have met with much encouragement. In the introduction, the director, Rev. John Wilkinson, says:—"The Mission has now been in existence eighteen and a-half years, and has experienced from its commencement evident tokens of the Lord's guidance and blessing. God has graciously entrusted to our stewardship in the interest of the Mission, for general and special objects, about £115,000."

The cost per annum of maintaining the home work is about £9000. The work abroad consists chiefly in the widespread distribution of the New Testament Scriptures in Hebrew and other languages. The medical mission work is full of interest. Dr. Dixon gives extracts from his journal, and writes:—"I feel a sense of regret as I look back over the golden opportunities which have been afforded us during the past year of preaching to the people and putting the Gospel before them, and realise that owing to the pressure of work in prescribing for patients, and setting them free to go to their homes as early as possible, there has been less spiritual dealing with them individually than we would have desired. The Convalescent Home still proves a most valuable help to the Mission in giving increased health to those who go, and not unfrequently spiritual life." Dr. Roberts also gives some testimonies, and says:—"We cannot be always certain whether the statements made express a heart belief. It is a great step for a Jew to acknowledge that he is convinced that Jesus is the Messiah; and we may confidently hope that the belief in the understanding is only the forerunner of a belief in the heart also."

The missionaries describe their own work. Rev. James Adler, the senior missionary, says: "Except on the great Day of Atonement, when all Jews (even the most indifferent ones) go to the synagogue, our Gospel meetings are better attended than the synagogue services. House visitation is still very hard, but even in this line it is much easier than it used to be. The poor, at least, urge us to visit them—a thing they would not have done some years ago." Mr. Levinsky, missionary among immigrants arriving in London, says he has frequently heard Jews remark, "When I get to my friends and have rested awhile, I must write home and tell them that the first man we met in London was a missionary, who tried to persuade us to become Christians, even before we landed!"

During the year 21,409 Hebrew New Testaments were forwarded to different parts of the world for distribution. Dr. Althausen, of Wilna, who has much to do with the Continental distribution, writes that Dr. Hermann, one of Israel's learned and religious men, has said: "The history of Israel will only attain its true position in the world, and Israel herself her better future—when she has accepted Christ. That will be the true and only way of solving Israel's problem. The cause of Israel's rejection is their rejection of the Messiah, Jesus; and their restoration to favour, and to their original destination, will only take place when they will have accepted Him as their Saviour."

Copies of the Report (price 6d. to non-subscribers) may be had from the office of the Mission, 79, Mildmay-road, N.

ASCENSION DAY.

Thy sufferings ended, Risen Lord,
Ascend thy Father's throne:
Assume, O Man of Nazareth,
Thy royal robe and crown!

Thy face once marred, now like the sun
Glows with the Godhead's might;
The seamless robe of Deity
Wraps Thee in dazzling light.

The winepress trodden, enter Thou
Through heaven's eternal arch;
Earth's ransomed millions follow Thee
In thy triumphal march.

In lines of light the endless train
Fill heaven, and chant and sing:
O Man of sorrows, it is Thou
Who now art glory's King!

THE UNVEILING.—20.

THE LITTLE OPENED BOOK.

With inimitable fitness the two "consolatory visions" of the 144,000 sealed and the innumerable multitude before the throne, were interposed between the Seals and the Trumpets. With equal fitness, between the Second Woe which leaves the inhabiters of the earth unrepentant, and the Third Woe which is the judgment of the living and the dead, are interposed visions of the Redeemer and of his faithful Witnesses.

In reference to the angel who now appears, let it be premised that "angel is a name not of nature but of office." An angel is a messenger, and the term is applied to good and bad alike—to the angel of the abyss and the Angel of the Covenant. In the Old Testament the Angel of Jehovah (as in Gen. xxi. 17; Judg. vi. 12; xiii. 3) is the second person in the Godhead.

The strong Angel whom John saw, coming down out of heaven, arrayed with a cloud; the rainbow upon his head, and his feet as pillars of fire—is already by these particulars identified as Jesus, the Son of God, our great High Priest. He is the ascending and returning One, for He was arrayed in a cloud, which received Him out of his disciples' sight, and in which He will come again. He is the Angel of the Covenant, for the rainbow, the token of God's covenant with the earth, was upon his head. He is the Son of God, for no head but his could wear the rainbow which encircles the throne and Him that sitteth upon it. He is our great High Priest, for his face as the sun and his feet as pillars of fire connect this Angel with Him who walked among the golden candlesticks in John's first vision (i. 15, 16).

The little book opened in his hand was surely the Gospel, for until his death, resurrection, and ascension to the right hand of God, the Good Tidings of great joy to all people was not opened; "The Holy Ghost was not yet [outpoured, Isa. xxxii. 15; Joel ii. 28] because that Jesus was not yet glorified." But when He had been glorified, and the Spirit had been poured out at Pentecost, "with great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." "The God of our fathers hath raised up Jesus whom ye slew and hanged on a tree: Him hath God exalted with his right hand a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Israel and forgiveness of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts v. 30-32: Rev. x. 9; xi. 13). Jesus is called Arnion, the Little Lamb, and the same diminutive form of expression is appropriately used of the little book (biblaridion) which contains the Good Tidings of his suffering and glory. Read Rom. xvi. 25-27.

The promise to Joshua was, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses; only be thou strong and of good courage." And in this vision John sees a strong Angel, the true Joshua, come down from heaven (whither He had ascended as the First-fruits of the New Creation), and set his right foot upon the heaving tumultuous sea of nations, and his left foot on the consolidated earth, his holy nation, his spiritual house, his peculiar people; and He cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth over the prey which he has taken. For Jesus has taken the prey from the mighty, and He claims it as his own, against the Dragon, and against the secular Wild Beast which rises out of the sea, and the ecclesiastical Wild Beast which rises out of the earth, and against them who destroy the earth.

But when He had cried, the seven thunders uttered their own voices. When the typical Joshua was old, and recounted to Israel all that the Lord had done for them, the seven thunders of the Law still uttered their own conditional and condemnatory voices exactly as when Moses spoke.

When ye have transgressed the covenant of the Lord your God, which He commanded you, and have gone and served other gods, and bowed yourselves to them; then shall the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and ye shall perish quickly from off the good land which He hath given unto you. If ye forsake the Lord, and serve strange gods, then He will turn and do you hurt, and consume you, after that He hath done you good (Joshua xxiii. 16; xxiv. 20).

But now John is bidden to seal up those things which the thunders had uttered, and write them not. When Daniel had been taught concerning the future, he was commanded to "shut up the words, that he had heard, and seal up the book even to the time of the end." A time should come when those words should be opened and that book unsealed. This command is three times repeated (Dan. xi. 25; xii. 4, 9). But the things uttered by the voices of the seven thunders, John was commanded to seal up and write them not. They were not to be preserved for future reference.

The seven seals were opened by the Lamb as it had been slain, who had prevailed to open them by his death and resurrection. All heaven was intensely interested in the unsealing of the roll. At the end of his visions John is commanded—"Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand." But in the vision we are considering he is bidden to seal up the utterances of the seven thunders, and not to write them.

Why? Because the seven thunders of Sinai have had their day: "Christ is the end of the Law for righteousness, to every one that believeth." "Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, [He] took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross" (Rom. x. 4; Col. ii. 14).

The types and shadows of the Law are all fulfilled, and now withdraw. Often a hymn helps us to the true interpretation; and John Newton has, I believe, with an inspired insight, read aright the prohibition of John to write what the seven thunders had uttered:—

Let us love and sing and wonder,
Let us praise the Saviour's name;
He has hushed the Law's loud thunder,
He has quenched Mount Sinai's flame;
He has washed us in his blood,
He has brought us nigh to God.

Hymns which live, because they were written within the Holiest, are some of our safest commentaries.

All power has been given unto Jesus in heaven and on earth, and standing on the earth and sea, in token of his redeeming victory, and claiming that which He has won, He lifts up his hand to heaven and swears by the Eternal Creator that there shall be no longer delay in the assumption of his rights, beyond the time when the seventh angel sounds his Trumpet; but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when He shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished, as He hath declared good tidings to his servants the prophets. Then shall end the little season in which the souls under the altar rest until their fellow-servants and their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled. Accordingly, in the next chapter, when the seventh angel sounds, great voices in heaven proclaim, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever" (xi. 15).

But in the meantime John must eat up the little book; must, like Ezekiel, cause his inward parts to eat, and fill his bowels with its contents; must read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it; must meditate on these things, give himself wholly to them, that his profiting may appear in all things.

Ezekiel's roll was written within and without with lamentations, and mourning, and woe; yet it was in his mouth as honey for sweetness. So the Psalmist said, "The judgments of the Lord are sweeter than honey and the honeycomb"; "How sweet are thy words unto my taste; yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth." And Jeremiah—"Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart" (Ps. xix. 9, 10; cxix. 103; Jer. xv. 16). And when John ate up the little book it was in his mouth sweet as honey, but when he had eaten it his inward parts were made bitter. Yet this little roll was not written within and without with lamentations and mourning and woe; but with glad tidings of great joy to all people.

Was this the reason, or a part of the reason, why?—The prophets, inquiring and searching diligently what the Spirit in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of the Messiah, and the glories that should follow, expected that at last their stiff-necked people, yielding unfeigned obedience, would become the head of the nations and not the tail; and the promise to Abraham their father be thus fulfilled, that in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed.

But as Jesus wept over Jerusalem because she knew not the time of her visitation, and as Paul could even wish himself anathema from Christ for his brethren, his kindred according to the flesh, so John's inward being, from whence flowed rivers of living water, was made bitter by the conviction that not only the covenant people, but all the nations would reject the Gospel as they had disobeyed the Law; that "the inhabiters of the earth," "they that dwell upon the earth," who are earthly, sensual, demonish, in spite of judgments on their surroundings, in spite of inward remorse and a tormented conscience, in spite of the death of their fellow-sinners, whose iniquity had reached its limit, still would not repent of their idolatry and sorcery, their fornication and their thefts. Is that in whole or in part the reason why the little book was bitter in John's inward parts, after he had eaten and digested it?

Nevertheless, having eaten the little book, and experienced its sweetness and its bitterness, John must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

Doubtless this prophesying includes Luther and the Reformers, but why not also all God's witnesses before and since? Why not Wesley, Whitefield, Spurgeon, and all the unnamed faithful men and women of their day and ours?

Why not Baxter, and Tyndale, and Wickliff, and Augustine, and the martyrs who were contemporary with and who succeeded John? Surely it is accordant with the wide reach of the Scriptures of Truth to give to a vision seen in Apostolic days the larger rather than the more restricted view, characterising the whole dispensation, not merely one limited period. And whatever full-fillment this bright vision may have in days yet future, is it not well for us, in these days of contempt, and rebuke, and blasphemy, to fortify our souls against the Rabshakehs, and Sanballats, and Tobiahs, with the great unsealed roll of the Old Testament, and the little opened book of the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God?

In the Name of the Lord of Hosts.

1 Sam. xvii. 45.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Whilst the two armies, on either side of the ravine, waited expectant, every eye was suddenly attracted by the slight young figure, which, staff in hand, emerged from the ranks of Israel, and ran quickly down the slope to the torrent-bed. For a little it was hid from view, as it bent intent on the pebbles that lined the bottom, of which five smooth stones were presently selected and placed in the shepherd's bag. Then, to the amazement of the Philistines, and especially of their huge champion, it sprang up on the further bank, and rapidly moved towards him.

Goliath had apparently been sitting, and when he realised that the youth was daring to accept his challenge, he arose, and came, and drew near to meet David, cursing him as he did so, and threatening him that his blood should encrimson the mountain sward, whilst his unburied body feasted the wild things of earth and air. "Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a javelin; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hosts, whom thou hast defied."

I.—THE TALISMAN OF VICTORY.

"The Name of the Lord of Hosts." Throughout the Scriptures, a name is not simply, as with us, a label; it is a revelation of character. It catches up and enshrines some moral or physical peculiarity in which its owner differs from other men, or which constitutes his special gift and force. The names which Adam gave the animals that were brought to him were founded on characteristics which struck his notice. And the names which the Second Adam gave to the apostles either expressed qualities which lay deep within them, and which He intended to evolve, or unfolded some great purpose for which they were being fitted.

Thus the name of God, as used so frequently by the heroes and saints of sacred history, stands for those Divine attributes and qualities which combine to make Him what He is. In the history of the early Church the Name was a kind of summary of all that Jesus had revealed of the nature and the heart of God. "For the sake of the Name they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles." There was no need to specify whose Name it was—there was none other Name by which men could be saved, none other Name that could be compared with that, or mentioned on the same page. Stars die out and become invisible when the sun appears. That Name is above every name, and in it every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess, because it embodies under one all-sufficient designation everything that any single soul, or the whole race, can require, or imagine, or attain in the conceiving of God.

The special quality that David extracted from the bundle of qualities represented by the Divine name of God is indicated in the words, the Lord of Hosts. That does not mean only that God was Captain of the embattled hosts of Israel; that idea was expressed in the words that followed, "The God of the armies of Israel." But there was probably something of this sort in David's thought. He conceived of angels and worlds, of the armies of heaven and the elements of matter, of winds and waves, of life and death, as a vast ordered army, obedient to the commands of their Captain, Jehovah of Hosts. In fact, his idea was identical with that of the heathen centurion of the Gospels, who said he was a man under authority, having servants to whom he said, Come, or Go, or Do this or that.

To come in the Name of the Lord of Hosts did not simply mean that David understood Jehovah to be all this, but implied his own identification by faith with all that was comprehended in this sacred Name. An Englishman in a foreign land occupies a very different position, and speaks in a very different tone, according to whether he assumes a private capacity as an ordinary traveller, or acts as representative and ambassador of his country. In the former case he speaks in his own name, and gets what respect and obedience it can obtain; in the latter he is conscious of being identified with all that is associated with the term Great Britain. For a man to speak in the name of England means that England speaks through his lips, that the might of England is ready to enforce his demands, and that every sort of power which England wields is pledged to avenge any affront or indignity to which he may be exposed.

Thus, when Jesus bids us ask what we will in his Name, He means not that we should simply use that name as an incantation or formula, but that we should be so one with Him in his interests, purposes, and aims, that it should be as though He were Himself approaching the Father with the petitions we bear.

There is much for us to learn concerning this close identification with God, before we shall be able to say with David, "I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hosts." It is only possible to those who carefully fulfil certain conditions which were familiar enough to this God-taught youth. But it were well worth our while to withdraw ourselves from the activities of our life, to lay aside everything that might hinder the closeness of our union with the Divine nature and interests, and to become so absolutely identified with God, that his Name might be our strong tower, our refuge, our battle-cry, our secret of victory. Oh to be able to approach each high-handed wrong-doer, each confederacy of evil, each assault of the powers of darkness, each tribe of savages, each drink-sodden district, each congregation of the unsaved and impenitent with the words, "I come in the Name of the Lord of Hosts."

II. THE CONDITIONS ON WHICH WE ARE WARRANTED IN USING THE NAME.

(1) When we are pure in our motives.—There was no doubt as to the motive which prompted David to this conflict. It is true that he had spoken to the men of Israel, saying, "What shall be done to the man that killeth the Philistine?" but no one supposed that he acted as he did because of the royal reward. His one ambition was to take away the reproach from Israel, and to let all the earth know that there was a God in Israel.

We must be wary here. It is so easy to confuse issues which are wide asunder as the poles, and to suppose that we are contending for the glory of God, when we are really combating for our church, our cause, our prejudices or opinions. It has always been a temptation to earnest men to veil from their own eyes the selfishness of their motives and aims by insisting, with vehement asseveration, that they are actuated by pure zeal for the cause of God.

To fall into this sin, though unconsciously, is to forfeit the right to use his sacred Name. We may still conjure with it and invoke it, but in vain. The very demons we seek to bind as with a spell will deride us, and leap out on us, and chase us before them. How constantly we need to expose our hearts to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, that He may wholly cleanse them, and fill them with an all-consuming devotion to the glory of God, so that the words may be true of us, as of our Lord, "The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up."

(2) When we are willing to put God into his right place.—David said repeatedly that the whole matter was God's. He might gather up the spoils of the battle, but the overthrow of Goliath and the Philistine host was not in his province at all. "The battle is the Lord's. . . . This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hand. . . . The Lord saveth, and He will give you into our hand."

And David's attitude has been that of every man who has wrought great exploits in the behalf of righteousness. Moses said, "The Lord hath appeared unto me, and He will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt." Samuel said, "Prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and He will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistine." Paul said, "I will not dare to speak of any things save those which Christ wrought through me." We must recognise Jesus Christ as the essential warrior, worker, organiser, and administrator of his Church, through the Holy Spirit. Whatever is rightly done, He must do. We are not called to work for Him, but to let Him work through us. Of Him and through Him and to Him are all things. The battle is not ours but his. His skill must direct us, his might empower us, his uplifted hands bring us victory.

(3) When we take no counsel with the flesh. It must have been a hard thing for a youth to oppose his opinion to Saul's, especially when the King was so solicitous for his welfare. "Spare thyself, my son," he seemed to say, "be wise, take ordinary precautions, do not throw thy young life away." It was a dangerous moment. To meet scorn, hatred, wrong-doing with uncompromising defiance and resistance is so much easier than to refuse assistance or advice which are kindly meant. It was well for him, indeed, that David withstood the syren song, and remained unaffected by the blandishments of royal favour. He could not have served two masters so utterly antagonistic. To have yielded to Saul would have put him beyond the fire-ring of the Divine environment.

How perpetually does Satan breathe into our ears the soft words that Peter whispered to his Master, when He began to speak about the cross. "Spare thyself, that shall not come unto thee." There is so much talk about the legitimacy of means that no room is left on which the Almighty can act. Means are right enough in their right place, but that place is far from first. Both their nature and time have to be fixed by him who refuses helmets of brass and coats of mail, that no flesh should glory in his presence, but uses the rustic sling, the smooth stone from the brook, and the sword of Goliath.

III.—THE BEARING OF THOSE WHO USE THE NAME.

(1) They are willing to stand alone. The lad asked no comradeship in the fight. There was no running to and fro to secure a second. He was perfectly prepared to bear the whole brunt of the fray without sympathy or succour, so sure was he that the Lord of Hosts was with him, and that the God of Jacob was his refuge.

(2) They are deliberate. He was free from the nervous trepidation which so often unfits us to play our part in some great scene. Our heart will throb so quickly, our movements become so fitful and unsteady. Calmly and quietly he went down the slope, and selected the pebbles which best suited his purpose. In this quietness and confidence he found his strength. His mind was kept in perfect peace, because it was stayed on God. He did not go by haste or flight, because the Lord went before him, and the Holy One of Israel was his rereward.

(3) They are fearless. When the moment came for the conflict, David did not hesitate, but ran toward the Philistine army to meet their champion. There was no fear of the result in that young heart, no tremor in the voice that answered the rough taunt, no falter in the arm that wielded the sling, no lack of precision in the aim that drove the stone to the one part of the Philistine's body that was unprotected and vulnerable.

(4) They are more than conquerors. The stone sank into the giant's forehead; in another moment he fell stunned to the earth. There was no time to lose before he could recover himself, or his friends so far overcome their stupefied amazement; his head had been hewn from his body by one blow of his own sword. And when the Philistines saw that their champion was dead, they fled. The spoils of victory lay with the victor. David took the head of the Philistine as a trophy, and put his armour in his tent.

Let us live alone with God. The weakest man who knows God is strong to do exploits. All the might of God awaits the disposal of our faith. As a child by touching a button may set in motion a mighty steamship, making it glide like a swan into her native element; so a stripling who has learnt to reckon on God may bring the whole forces of Deity to bear on men and things on the world's battlefield. This is the victory that overcomes the world, the flesh, and the devil, even our faith.

OUR LORD'S ASCENSION.

The ascension of Christ was but the carrying forward to completion of his resurrection, which was not a return to the poor conditions of our mortal life, but an entrance into glory, only arrested in its progress until He should fully have convinced his followers that He had risen indeed, and filled them with courage for their future work. How simple, yet how sublime and pathetic, is the parting of Christ with his disciples on the Mount of Olivet! There was indeed no farewell kiss, or any other symbolic act in use among men who bid each other adieu; but the manner of the ascension was most gracious and benignant toward those whom the Ascending One left behind. Jesus moved upward as if lifted from the earth by some celestial attraction, with his face looking downwards upon his beloved companions, and with his hands spread out in an act of benediction. The disciples bowed their heads in worship towards the ascending Christ, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy, as if they had gained, not lost, a friend, and as if the ascension were not a sunset, but a sunrise—as, indeed it was, not for them alone, but for the whole world.

But when those earthly links were broken, and the cloud carried Him to the farthest point where cloud could form and float, and left Him there, who shall tell us what happened beyond, on the way to the throne: in what new forms of glory, by what swift flight, accompanied by what bursts of angelic praise, that throne of the universe was reached? Scripture only says that "He was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God." Enough for us meantime to know that the King has gone to receive a kingdom, and to return. Memory and hope coalesce as we think of Him who has passed into the heavens; and the heart of the Church has at once to cherish the glad thought that its Head and Helper has entered within the veil, is a King upon his throne, and an high-priest after the power of an endless life; and the still more joyous one that He will come again in like manner as He was seen to go into heaven. Perhaps if the Gospel on the lips of the Church were thrilled with the passion of the exulting hope of reigning with Christ on his throne, as well as touched with the pathos of the memories of his cross, many a weary heart would be filled with joy, and having discovered the infinite possibilities of a life in Christ, would surrender itself trustfully to his love.

Scripture speaks of Christ as ascending, and also of his being taken up. He speaks of Himself as able, when He chooses, by his own power to rise where no man had ascended. "I leave the world and go to the Father." "I ascend to my Father and your Father." He was not lifted to the skies by a power acting on Him from without, as was the case in the translation of Elijah. It is made clear that his glorious body, obedient to its own spiritual nature, rose unaided. And as he rises into the heavens, we know that we are looking on no mere mysterious elevation of a mortal to the skies, but are beholding the return of the Incarnate Lord to the glory where He was before. Scripture also tells us that Christ was taken up. Luke says: "While they worshipped, He was carried up into heaven;" again, "He was received up." Perhaps, it is here implied that there was an appointed time for Him to return to heaven after He rose from the dead. If so, it is significant to think that, when his own supreme victory had been won, and heaven held its breath expectant and astonished, the conquering Lord was content to move about in the world where He had toiled and suffered, until the appointed time to take possession of his throne.

But the truth that shines out most clearly, and which to us is of the first importance, is that heaven is a place. The teaching of Scripture on this point involves the glorious truth that He is received up into a sphere in which his life and being are in perfect harmony with his nature. Wherever heaven may be, Christ is there interceding for us; that implies locality and circumstance. He is the "Forerunner" who has entered within the veil; He has gone to "prepare a place" for us. The Son of Man, standing on the right hand of God, is not a dream. Nay, it is one of the most abiding of truths, the type of all that is great, even in this great universe; of all that is most worth living for, even in the stupendous worth of life itself.

The Ascension is no withdrawal of the Captain of our salvation from our side. Our Christ is not out of reach. Withdrawn as He is from sensible contact with matter into that spiritual world which on every side encompasses and perhaps touches this earthly life of ours, Christian faith feels herself more really near to Him now than when He was present to sight. We are specially told in Scripture not to think of our Lord as having gone away and left his Church, but always to think of Him as now occupying his throne in heaven, and from thence ruling over all. His own promise is, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." We feel that He is as near to us as spirit can be to spirit, and his fulness of power at God's right hand has not impaired his love for the children of men. He who showed his love in living and dying for us, loves us none the less now when that life and death have passed into triumph. Nay rather, if we dare to follow the course of human feeling, we may think that the joy of gathering the fruits of toil adds intensity to love. All power is committed unto Him who is not ashamed to call us brethren. In Him we have a sympathetic Saviour as well as an all-powerful Lord. As He sits upon the throne of the universe, He is as sympathetic and as helpful as ever He was. The long centuries of residence in his Father's house have not put Him at a distance from us. So Scripture teaches us ever to associate together the departure and the coming again of the Lord, and always when we meditate on his ascension to think of his real presence with us through the ages, and of his

COMING AGAIN TO RECEIVE US TO HIMSELF.

In the ascension of Christ we find the hope of humanity for the future. A real and living oneness exists between Him and all who cleave to Him, so that their characters are changed, their natures sanctified, and their immortal beauty secured. If we can say, "God, who is rich in mercy, for the great love wherewith He loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together," then we can add, "and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ." He was made in the likeness of sinful flesh, that we might be made in the likeness of the body of his glory. Whoever is joined to Him receives into his soul that spirit of life in Christ which unfolds and grows according to its own law, and has for its issue and final result the entire conformity of the believing soul with the Saviour by whom it lives. And if we set our affections on Him, and rise daily to the infinite significance of spiritual growth and the gracious nearness of God, we shall one day "behold his face in righteousness; we shall be satisfied when we awake with his likeness."

The struggle, no doubt, is keen, but the ascent is possible, for our Forerunner has gone before. The ascended Lord, who has all power in heaven and on earth, is leading up his new creation with the voice of mercy on his lips and the memory of suffering in his heart; and already the front ranks of his innumerable army raise their song, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his blood, be glory for ever." What we see in Jesus we may predict for all those whom He is not ashamed to call his brethren. We, too, shall have corporeal manhood transfigured and glorified. We, too, shall have perfect union and communion with the Father. And to us, too, the promise of promises shall be fulfilled, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

Glasgow. JOHN R. BRUCE.

THE INSTITUTION FOR EDUCATING MISSIONARIES' DAUGHTERS held its annual meeting at Walthamstow Hall, Sevenoaks, last Thursday afternoon. Mr. William Crosfield, M.P., chairman, said the epidemic of scarlet fever last November showed plainly that the long-needed sanatorium must be set in hand, and to enable them to commence operations at once it had been decided to hold a bazaar at Bromley on May 29 and 30. They proposed erecting an inexpensive building at a short distance from the present one. There are eighty-two pupils, which fill the "Home;" more can be admitted when the sanatorium is built. The institution is open to the daughters of all evangelical missionaries; and testimonies are received from parents of the comfort the Home affords them whilst abroad, knowing that their dear ones are being well looked after. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Septimus Scott (treasurer), Rev. Prebendary Scott, and two lady missionaries.

NEWS FROM UGANDA.

I think I wrote about going into Kitunzi in June, 1894. I am delighted now to state that we have succeeded in getting ten churches built right round the country. On December 2 our first eight converts were baptized at our central church; we had about 500 present. It was plain that many came to see the baptisms, but they also heard the Gospel faithfully preached, and were so evidently impressed by the short confession of faith made by each convert, that we were led to hold a short after-meeting, which was attended with grand results. After putting more plainly before them the simplicity of salvation, I called upon all who wished to decide for Jesus and follow Him to rise; thereupon eighty-five men, women, and boys stood up. It was an impressive sight; we tried to have some prayer, but the meeting got quite out of hand, and all began to pray at the same time. However, God heard them every one. Following this, some thirty offered themselves for baptism, and are now under instruction at the different churches.

We left soon after for Mengo, and passing through Singo we had another special meeting at Namakozi, when sixty-two professed conversion, and have since all been accepted for baptism.

The large church at Namakozi is almost finished, and will, I think, hold about 1000 people. Mr. Sugden is there with Yairo Mutakyala (deacon), and the two helpers of whom I wrote, Elisa and Enoch. The former has now been accepted for ordination, and will be placed under special instruction.

You will have heard of the fall of the great church on Namirembe Hill last year. It was left without a roof so long when building, that the rain rotted the poles at the bottom. But the fall of the church temporal has proved the rise of the church spiritual. There are now some twenty district churches right round Mengo, attended by about 2500 people, while the numbers on Namirembe Hill keep just the same. Special preachers are sent out to these churches each Sunday, the Europeans taking their turn, so that the common people see and hear more of the Europeans, attend church because it is near them, and have banished from their minds some of the horrible ideas which they entertain regarding what we teach.

As a result of our extension scheme, the Gospel of redeeming love is now preached in more than 200 churches every Sunday throughout Uganda, attended as near as we can calculate by 20,000 people. Hallelujah! Yet all this is not a quarter of what ought to be done. There are now before my mind numbers of places without a teacher of any kind. The NATIVE CHRISTIANS ARE DOING GRAND WORK.

In fact, what could we do without them? Not one quarter, or one tenth of the work. Praise God for the numbers of whole-hearted, out-and-out helpers that we have here. I believe there are numbers of young men coming on, of whom you in England have never heard, who will eclipse in preaching power and general information all the older men, who are much slower to learn. By far the ablest man here is Thomas Semfuma, one of the lay readers. He is the most fearless Gospel preacher that ever I heard, and his sermons are of no mean order. . . . . Mackay bought this man's life for two tusks of ivory when a boy Christian. How cheap!

I am convinced that God's Word will win the day here. Oh! that God the Holy Ghost would touch the hearts of those having means to send us Bibles so long as there is a man, woman, or child without one. Bibles are silent missionaries. If, therefore, Christian people in England cannot come themselves, let them send us Bibles. We hear there is a party of English Romanists coming up under a bishop. This ought to make us the more earnest to get God's Word into the hands of the people. If this is done, I do not think we have much to fear. All our Testaments and Gospel portions are now sold out, and we do not know when more books may come. It costs about £6 to bring a 65lb. box of books from the coast to Uganda.

MEXICO AND ITS NEEDS.

[The following interesting sketch of work in Mexico, and its present needs as to Christian effort, was written by an experienced missionary in that country at the suggestion of Mr. D. L. Moody, made during his recent visit to that country. This will explain some of the references in the paper, which was formally addressed to the evangelist.]

There is no doubt that a good deal of good was done by the tracts sent by the American Tract and American Bible Societies with the American army in 1847 and 1848. Bibles, Testaments, and tracts were scattered in the wake of this army in its march from the Rio Grande to the city of Mexico, and, although this effort was not followed up immediately by any systematic missionary work, the missionaries in different parts of the country are constantly finding the results of that "seed sown."

The first American missionary to come into the country was Miss Matilda Rankin, of the Congregational Church, who, early in the sixties, established a school in Matamoras, Texas, and, after acquiring the Spanish language, moved to Monterey, where she established a day and boarding school. After a while the older boys who had been trained by Miss Rankin in the knowledge of the Gospels were sent out into the adjoining towns and villages for the purpose of reading and explaining the Word. From this effort of hers grew up something like a dozen congregations, of which she was the chief pastor. Some few years ago, on account of failing health, Miss Rankin returned to her State, Illinois, where she died about two years since. Her work was taken up by other missionaries.

Organised missionary work, however, began in the country about 1872, though prior to this date Rev. H. C. Riley worked under the American and Foreign Christian Union here in the centre of the country, and built up a large number of congregations. Since that time the Presbyterians, Methodists of both branches, Congregationalists, Baptists, Southern Presbyterians, Associate Reform Presbyterians, Baptists of the Northern Convention, Friends, and Cumberland Presbyterians have entered the field in about the order mentioned. There are now twelve missionary boards working in the country, and they have entered every State in the Republic, with the single exception of Chiapas.

The following is the statistical result of twenty years of systematic evangelical work:—

Number of centres of operation, 90; number of congregations, 615; number of ordained foreign missionaries, 60; assistant foreign missionaries and wives of ordained and assistant missionaries, 60; foreign lady teachers, 67; native preachers, ordained, 111; native preachers, unordained, 164; native teachers, 177; other native helpers, 94; grand total of foreign and native workers, 732; churches organised, 444; communicants, 17,000; probable adherents, 50,000.

It should be remembered that thirty years ago there was no organised Evangelical church, or Protestant schoolhouse, or church building in all this Republic. Until about that date, with the single brief exception during the march of the American army, it was worth a man's life to be seen with a Bible anywhere in Mexico; yet these wonderful results have followed. These several denominations are working together harmoniously. An evidence of this fact has recently been witnessed in Toluca, where 141 workers from the different missions gathered together for a three days' meeting of conference and prayer. That gathering was probably the most remarkable of its kind in the history of Protestantism in this country. The workers were drawn nearer together, and received a new inspiration for the great work which lies before them.

The meetings which you and Mr. Sankey continued in this city have been productive of immense good. Many cold Christians have been quickened, and many wanderers are being brought back into the fold. I think the different missionaries will never cease to be grateful for this great help thus given to our work.

OUR NEEDS ARE MANY.

Among the most pressing might be mentioned the following:—The more perfect equipment of our Evangelical press for the publication of books, tracts, and papers. A donation was made by a friend in Boston to us not many years since, with which we published 5000 copies of your book on "Heaven." It has been scattered throughout the country, and the origin of some of our little churches we trace directly to the reading of it. Here is a wonderful opportunity for friends at home to help the presses supported by their own missionaries, and at the same time to reach hundreds and thousands of people with the printed page who cannot be reached by the living voice. The different periodicals of our churches are sent in large numbers throughout the mails to public men, public libraries, prisons, penitentiaries, post-offices, and other places, where they are read by a great many who at first would not receive a call from any of our preachers.

It frequently happens, too, that we trace the origin of some church or school to the reading of a little tract, and these printed pages are being sent out by millions each year from the Evangelical presses now established in the country.

Another one of our great needs is an increased effort along educational lines. We ought to have more schools. The country lies open before us, with its 12,000,000 inhabitants. The rising generation is desirous of receiving education. We can reach these boys and girls by hundreds and thousands, and the 8000 children now under instruction in the different Evangelical churches might be multiplied over and over again if the necessary funds were forthcoming. We must begin at the foundation. We all feel the need of a strong central university, which should have an inter-denominational character, well established, equipped, and fully endowed. This one object alone might challenge the generosity of some of God's wealthy servants. If there is a man anywhere who wants to do a great thing for God and humanity in this Republic, let him raise 1,000,000dols. for the endowment of such a university, which will go on for generations to come exercising an uplifting influence long after he has gone to his grave.

It has been a great gratification to the missionaries here to note the deep interest that you and Mr. Sankey have taken in our native work. We are sure you will carry it home on your hearts, and if it comes within your way to induce any of God's children to help us through any of the channels above indicated, rest assured that we will be very grateful.—Faithfully yours,

John W. Butler.

GROVE STREET INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

Last week the young Duchess of Sutherland opened a new wing of this centre of active effort for the poor and neglected of the great capital of Western Scotland. Her ladyship spoke a few earnest words as to the need of co-operation among all classes of society, and the blessing of living for the good of others.

Lord Overtoun, who presided, emphasised the value of such a centre representing various Christian bodies, and gave a proof of his sympathy by a donation of £100 towards the outstanding liabilities. Addresses were given also by Dr. Marshall Lang and others. Dr. Robertson, the medical superintendent, told of the extension of his department, and said a home had been established in Burnbank Gardens, where probationers were sent, and they were given to the Institute to pay visits amongst the sick in return for the experience they derived. There were now a dozen of these ladies working in connection with the mission, visiting the sick poor, and dispensing five afternoons in the week. Mr. Boyd, the general superintendent, said there were 200 workers, and the weekly attendance was 2500. The new premises had been erected because the improved educational status and general condition of the working classes gave promise of an almost unlimited army of helpers if they could be more adequately laid hold of.

The upper floor of the new wing contains a parlour and reading-room for young women. This will be a great advantage to the three hundred young women connected with the institute and the five hundred younger girls growing up to need their care. The ground floor contains a reading-room for the two hundred men connected with the Institute and the five hundred lads and boys growing up to recruit this department. For the medical mission and benevolent work there are a waiting-room, consulting-room, and dispensary, and in the basement a gymnasium for the men, together with lavatories, heating apparatus, etc. The whole forms a handsome addition to the institute.

In a leading article on the work of the Institute, the Glasgow Daily Mail says:—"In this local association for home mission work we have a very fine example of what can be done by men and women of different denominations without ecclesiastical friction, and with remarkable success."

ROYALTY AND CRIPPLED CHILDREN.

The Ragged School Union has now eight Holiday Homes for poor little slum children in need of a healthgiving change to country or seaside; and last year over 5000 enjoyed a fortnight's holiday, returning strengthened in body, and with a new sense of the beautiful from the glimpses obtained of God's works in nature—to the majority previously unknown. One of these Homes—that at Southend—has of late been specially reserved for home cripples, of whom at least a thousand are befriended and taught by the workers of the R.S.U. in various parts of the metropolis. Such maimed and crippled sufferers have so greatly benefited by the change to Southend that a larger Home became necessary in order that more of these—so sorely in need of it—might share its benefits. The matter was taken up warmly by local friends, who, amongst other efforts in the way of raising funds, resolved to hold a bazaar in connection with the laying of the foundation-stone of the new Home.

This bazaar and Floral Fête was held last week, being opened on Tuesday by H.R.H. the Princess Louise. Naturally, the town was enthusiastic in its welcome, being decorated with flags, garlands, and mottoes, while the residents thronged the streets and balconies to greet the Royal visitor. The crippled children at present staying in the small Home were seated, conspicuous in their little red caps, in the forecourt of the house, from which they are to be removed to the more spacious Home, of which the foundation-stone was laid by the Princess Louise. The Princess was received by a deputation, which included Mr. J. R. Brightwell, J.P., the Mayor of Southend, Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, Revs. T. W. Herbert and A. S. Thomas. From the station the procession drove to the marquee, where the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone took place. After prayer by Rev. J. W. Philpott, the vicar of Southchurch, a statement was given by Earl Compton, president of the Ragged School Union, who dwelt upon the object with which the Home was started, and upon the necessity of providing such a Home for poor children living in London. He stated that it was the intention of the committee to provide a holiday resort for a thousand cripple ones, for whom a change of air was not a luxury, but a necessity of their existence. He assured his hearers that the temporary Home of the Union had already done a great deal of good, and children who had been brought there so ill that they had to be carried from the station, had been able, at the end of their holiday, to walk back to the station on their departure.

The Princess Louise was then presented with a silver trowel, and the formal ceremony of laying the foundation-stone being accomplished, a presentation of purses was made. A vote of thanks was then moved by Dr. A. Clough Waters, hon. physician to the Cripples' Home, seconded by Colonel Stewart, and supported by Mr. James Robertson, chairman of the Council. The Marquis of Lorne having acknowledged the vote of thanks, the procession reformed, and drove to the Pier, where an address was presented by the Mayor and Corporation. The Pier, from the entrance to the pavilion, was lined by children from all the Sunday-schools of the town. In the Pier Pavilion, Mr. Alderman Ingram made a brief statement of the objects of the Ragged School Union, and then the Princess Louise formally opened the Fancy Fair and Floral Fête, held in the Pavilion, in aid of the funds. A vote of thanks to the Princess Louise was moved by the Mayor, and seconded by Major Rasch, M.P., and the Marquis of Lorne having made a reply, in which he declared Southend to be the Riviera of Essex, the visitors made a tour of the building, the Princess Louise adding several purchases to the quilt with which she had been presented. Her example will doubtless have effect in deepening the general interest in the work and bringing fresh helpers to the aid of the R.S.U. The office is 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

THE GIRLS' GUILD OF GOOD LIFE will this year hold its annual meeting in the autumn instead of on May 28, as announced, owing to redecoration and structural alterations of Hoxton Hall.

COUNTRY MISSION HALLS.—We have before us particulars as to one or two mission halls in country places where a Christian brother with means might find a happy sphere of service. Address the Editor of this paper.

THE Y.M.C.A. IN CHINA.

By J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

The need in China for Y.M.C.A. work is as great as it is in England, inasmuch as the temptations to young men are great, and their opportunities for forming helpful links are less; yet only two places among all the treaty ports in which foreigners live possess Associations, and in both cases the work is in its infancy. Shanghai has made an attempt before, but is now restarting under more favourable conditions, and Hankow has passed through its first winter.

In both Shanghai and Hankow, the importance of which as centres cannot be over-estimated, the friends on the spot are greatly impressed with the need of suitable buildings in which to conduct the work. In the former settlement it has been possible to secure modest premises, which should give an opportunity for seeing what work can be accomplished by the Christian young men on the spot; but in Hankow accommodation is much more restricted, and the need for a building of their own is felt to be urgent. There it is part of the plan of the Association to maintain a restaurant, where men from the ships which visit the port, and missionaries passing through, may obtain refreshment without temptation, and which would also serve as a rendezvous for Christians.

Hankow promises to become in time the first commercial city of China, and already the population of the three cities of Hankow, Han Yang, and Woo Chang, which are only separated by the rivers Han and Yangtse, considerably exceeds a million. As ocean vessels can ascend the Yangtse thus far during the summer, and river steamers all the year round, penetrating some 800 miles into the interior of China, its trade is rapidly developing; and when railway facilities are added to its rivers from Thibet and North-Western China, the growth of the European colony cannot fail to be rapid. The importance of Shanghai as a centre is too well known to need dwelling upon, and there is an unusually wide sphere there for Y.M.C.A. work.

Some of these treaty ports bear the unenviable reputation of being among the "wettest" ports in the East, where few European men outside the missionary circle think of meeting without whiskies and soda; and every young man experiences in an exceptional degree the most peculiar temptations of bachelor-life in the Orient, which can hardly be exaggerated. I do not say that in this they are worse than, or even as bad as, many of the seaports and large cities of Europe, though the general laxity of morals renders their descent more easy, and nowhere is the young man safe from these temptations in the East any more than he is in the West, if Christ go not with him.

As I am writing now on behalf of young men, let me urge a point upon which experience in many lands has led me to feel exceedingly strongly. No young man, be he Christian or not, unless a missionary, should think of coming out to these parts unmarried and unengaged. If he comes out under a salary which will enable him to live ever so modestly—and money goes at least twice as far here as at home—let him marry before coming out. If this is impossible, let him wait till he is betrothed to a girl whom he loves too deeply ever to forget, whose claim upon him will be constantly in view, and who is expecting to come out as soon as can be arranged. The unengaged youth is at once thrown among dangerous companions, while between Christian and worldly circles there yawns a gulf beyond anything at home.

The style of living adopted by most Europeans is such as more than consumes the income which would be necessary for a young couple to live comfortably at home; and a youth, once fired with the desire to keep up as good an appearance as his fellows, is tempted to postpone all thoughts of marriage indefinitely. Meanwhile, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, he succumbs to the temptations around him, and suits himself to the low moral atmosphere in which he finds himself, till he drifts with the tide, and drags others in.

Central Y.M.C.A.'s, in modest buildings of their own in Hong Kong, Shanghai, Hankow, and Yokohama, worked on definitely spiritual lines, under the direction of a competent and experienced young men's friend, really in touch with them, residing in Shanghai as the central point, would be the salvation of hundreds of men from our own land, who would otherwise lapse into English heathenism. In a generation such associations would accomplish very much towards the removal of what is perhaps the greatest stumbling-block to missionary work throughout the East, the unworthy lives of those who are called by the name of Christ, and appear to the natives as his followers. I would place this matter before God's stewards in England and America, and especially before those of them on whose hearts mission work is laid.

But the essential is a consecrated Christian man of education and good breeding—one who would recommend his religion to other young men—who could come out—preferably at his own charges—to undertake definite spiritual work among the English-speaking young men of these ports—a proven evangelist among young men. No truer missionary work could be found, and none better worth undertaking. Such a worker would be better unmarried for the initiation of the work. Thus he would be free to spend a month at a time in the larger ports, first to knit together and stir up the torpid Christian men, and then to set them to work under his direction, led by local secretaries. The steamship companies would undoubtedly afford facilities for travelling to and fro at a nominal rate, and the time spent on the sea need not be lost. Rooms and all helpful institutions would soon be provided as the healthy outgrowth of such a work; for the nucleus of every successful Y.M.C.A. can only be spiritual. Perchance the eye of the one who is fitted to do this work may be directed to this plea.

THE REVIVAL IN AMERICA, 1857-58.

By REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

I well remember the powerful work of God's Holy Spirit, which swept over this country in 1857 and 1858, and as I have been reading the reminiscences of revivals in Scotland, as reported in The Christian from time to time, I have been led to gather a few facts about the work of grace in this country in those early days.

It seemed to begin at the Fulton-street daily prayer meeting, a gathering that has continued to the present time. Rev. Dr. McLean, at the meeting in Edinburgh of the General Assembly, thus spoke of the awakening:—

"It is the most decided and extraordinary movement which I think the world has ever seen since the time of the Apostles. We have had revivals in America before, as in Scotland, of a remarkable kind. There was a great awakening more than a hundred years ago, at the time of Whitefield and the Tennants. The advance of religion then was remarkable, but we must remember that our population was not over one million and a-half, and that a revival which was then remarkable, would not be wonderful among 30,000,000 of people. The work prevalent in America is greater in proportion to the thirty millions, than was the former to the one million and a-half of population. It has spread to the extreme south, and east, and has gone, I believe over the whole country, from one end to the other. The last accounts from America were to the effect that the movement was making its way with great power in the Southern States, and had gone west into every important town and district. One of the last statements I saw on the subject was that a traveller might go for 3000 miles, and, stop where he would, in town or country, there was no place where he might not turn aside and go into a prayer meeting. It has been the simple preaching of the Gospel by God's ministering servants that produced this movement. The ministers have been preaching as formerly, but only with perhaps more fervour and earnestness, and certainly with more faith and power."

In all the large cities—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago, and others, there were what were called union prayer meetings, which embraced different Evangelical denominations. At these meetings were present Old School Presbyterians, New School Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, members of the Associate Reformed Church, members of the Dutch Reformed Church, Congregationalists, Low Church Episcopalians, Baptists, and Methodists. These all united very cordially, and the meetings, which were usually held in the afternoon, were crowded to excess, so that the largest buildings, sometimes accommodating 3000 persons, could not contain the people who came.

The different exercises are limited to a duration of five minutes each—a short hymn, prayer, a few verses of Scripture, and an opportunity given for anyone to request the prayers of the congregation for himself or others, or to address a word of encouragement to those present. Like beggars asking for bread, they used no circumlocution, but came right to the point, and asked for what they wanted—the Holy Spirit of God to come and comfort their souls.

In New York a theatre capable of containing more than 3000 people had been secured, and was crowded to the door. In Philadelphia, the finest hall in the city, capable of holding 4000 persons, had been given free of rent by the owner. In Baltimore the editor of a secular paper, in noticing the revival in that place, says that the business men's daily prayer-meeting was especially worthy of notice, and might truthfully be called the meeting of the season. The editor, who did not profess to be a religious man, said that "No man in the city had ever seen such a vast multitude assembled at a prayer-meeting, and that surely the signs of the times indicated a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit"; that "the services were of the most thrilling character, and the tears observed on many countenances evinced the intensity of feeling which pervaded the whole body of the people"; and that "the history of the world does not present a parallel on the subject of religion, to that which now pervades this whole land." I do not know that we have in America more than one or two newspapers that said anything really disparaging to the revival. The Unitarian organ at Boston, on one occasion thanked God that they had not sympathised with the movement, and said that the Unitarian Church stood "like a mountain of ice in the midst of a sea of fire," not an altogether happy simile.

The effects of the revival have extended to all the colleges of our country. The number of young men who have been brought under saving influence, has been so great that the Board of Foreign Missions have had more offers of labourers than ever before. The whole population appears to have felt the blessed awakening. The telegraph was employed by relatives and friends to convey tidings of conversion. In one village where a company of gamblers were accustomed to meet on the Sabbath, one of their number was so powerfully convinced of the sinfulness of his life that he went home and told his wife how he felt. He found her anxious about her own salvation. The next Sabbath he went to his former associates with a Bible instead of a pack of cards; soon several of them became Christians.

Prayer meetings were held in the large saloons of the steamers on the Hudson. Most of the passengers attended, many of whom took part in the State Legislature. The makers of the laws acknowledged their dependence on the great Lawgiver. The daily papers sometimes published not only columns, but pages about the meetings. My brother, Dr. Hammond, of Portland, Conn., was awakened by the reports of the New York Tribune, giving an account of this remarkable and widespread work of God's Spirit. In some places numbers of children were led to Christ. It was reported in some religious papers that in Simbury, Conn., every adult person had professed conversion. I visited that town especially to find if this was true, and as I spent the night there I had the opportunity of making many inquiries. I found that the report seemed to be correct. People in those days believed in the power of prayer, and in the preaching of the Gospel, not only from the pulpit, but from house to house. Great was the number of those who went everywhere preaching the word. The young converts, so far as I observed, continued steadfastly in the Apostle's doctrine, and in prayer, and the Lord added daily to the church such as were being saved.

It has been my privilege to witness during the past winter some marvellous displays of God's grace, somewhat similar to those in 1857. Again and again at a single meeting we have seen over a hundred convicted of sin and led to Christ. So great was the interest in Chatham, Ontario, that a large open-air meeting in last winter, with snow on the ground, continued no less than five hours and a-half. It was market day, and a great number of farmers were present from the country. Hundreds have since joined the churches in that place.

THE REAL SUCCESS of a movement such as ours, says the Band of Hope Chronicle, can never be adequately represented simply by figures, yet it is encouraging to find every year a substantial increase in the number of those who are on our side.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 26.—TITUS III.

Pastoral Admonition (1-11).—It was most needful that the early disciples should commend the Gospel by their holy and devoted lives. To submit to the authorised government of their respective countries, to bear themselves courteously and righteously to their fellow-citizens, was laid on them as part of their duty to God. We should read these exhortations, asking ourselves how far they describe our own character and behaviour. (4) We are debtors to mercy alone. (5) Salvation is a great work, extending from the moment of regeneration, delivering us from the sins to which we were aforetime prone, and making us inheritors of the life which is life indeed. Note how necessary to salvation is the rich communication of the Holy Ghost. Hast thou availed thyself of it to the full? (8) "Good works" is a favourite expression throughout this Epistle; probably the R.V. margin is to be preferred. (9) It is no use arguing with some men. (10) The worst heresy is that of the heart in factiousness of temper. Men of this disposition ought not to be put in office.

Parting Salutations (12-15).—Paul was always surrounded by young men, on whom he endeavoured to impress himself. In this paragraph he again returns to the good works—that is, the honest trades by which the converts were to maintain themselves. Perhaps there was too great a tendency to lean on the system of the sharing of goods in vogue at the first, and which led some to relax their industry. What an encouragement it was to the young worker to feel that he shared the prayers and love of a man like Paul.

MONDAY, MAY 27.—PHILEMON.

The Inscription (1-3).—Apphia was wife; Archippus their son, who was probably beginning to exercise his ministry (Col. iv. 17). Perhaps his ministrations were given in his father's house to such of the Colossian Church as lived in its vicinity.

Paul's Delight in his Friend (4-7).—The Apostle prayed constantly, not only for churches, but for individuals. It was impossible to bring him tidings of a man's growth in grace without arousing songs of thanksgiving. (6) Our faith should lead others forward in the knowledge of all those good things which are ours in Christ. (7) What a conception of the possibilities of a good man's life that he should be a perennial source of refreshment to God's saints.

The Apostle's Request (8-22).—With what pathos he pleads for Onesimus, a truant slave from Philemon's household, whom the Apostle's friends had found in the low purlieus of Roman crime, and who was now the bearer of this letter to his old master. "Take him back, I pray you," is the request. And the request was backed by the following arguments. "I am old, I shall not be able to make many such requests. I am suffering for Jesus. I have been the means of the conversion of this man; he is my son. I would fain have kept him, much more should you receive him; he is a brother now in Christ, and I am willing to pay for any loss you have sustained through him; remember how you owe your own conversion to me; do this for me, that on my release I may be able to come, without hindrance, to your home." Thus did the great Apostle plead, and in these words we can detect some of the accent and pleading of the great High Priest.

Salutations (23-25).—These show that this brief Epistle was written at the same time, and sent by the same hand, as that to the Colossians.

TUESDAY, MAY 28.—HEB. I.

God Speaks (1-3).—He spake in the prophets. He speaks in the Son. No mere man can utter all God's message: it must come in divers portions and ways. The history, the psalm, the prophecy, have their place. But there is complete and full-orbed revelation in the Son. He was the organ through whom the creative purpose wrought, and through Him also the redemptive grace of God has gone forth to recreate and restore. (3) How carefully the words are chosen. Effulgence indicates that He is of the same nature as the Father, as the beam is of the sun; Image, that He is co-extensive, co-equal. The atonement is complete, but the work of his providence is perennial. It is through his sacrifice that He has risen, as man, to the throne.

A More Excellent Name than Angels (4-14).—In establishing the glory of Christ, the Apostle affirms that He is better than angels, and quotes the Old Testament Scriptures to prove his point. These quotations should be carefully studied, because they are ascribed to God, and because they show us that there is a deep inner meaning in the Psalms. In a word, they are Messianic. Their fulfilment must be sought in Christ. It is clear also that David was the type of the Messiah, who was none other than the Son. It is specially interesting to read Psalms xlv., cii., and cx. in the light of these words. We must not be content till we have found Jesus in them all, even in those which deal with nature or with successful war. (14) The blessed angels perform innumerable offices for us all. If regret may be in heaven, we shall probably feel it in our slowness to appreciate the loving ministry of God's angels. Their service to us is a liturgy of adoration to God.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 29.—HEB. II.

Drifting Away (1-4).—R.V. margin gives this solemn reading. Unless we watch, the strong current that sets in from the world will drift us away from God. The penalty will be proportionately worse than was meted out to offenders under the old Law, as its spokesman and credentials are more august and solemn than those of Sinai. (2) It was recorded by Moses that the law was given by disposition of angels (Deut. xxxiii. 2; Acts vii. 53). Sins against love are more swiftly and terribly avenged than those against law. (3) To neglect is as perilous as to reject. (4) Here we meet with another reference to God's co-operation with the messengers of the Gospel, which our Lord promised (John xv. 27).

Jesus Crowned (5-10).—This age (which was "the coming age" when these words were penned) is under Christ. As we look around, Psalm viii. seems a mockery, all things are not under man; but as we look up we see Jesus crowned as man with glory and honour. In Him the dream of the Psalmist is more than realised. (10) Look on, and behold the time when many sons shall be brought to glory similar to his. The eternal God, to whom all resources belong, is bringing thee thither, and his purpose cannot fail.

A Merciful and Faithful Priest (11-18).—The Son and sons are all of God, and as God's life is in all they must be brethren. (14) The Elder Brother has met our foes, and won deliverance for all who believe. (15) The monster remains, but its teeth are drawn, and its power annulled. We need not fear what men call death; to those who are in Jesus it is but a falling asleep.

THURSDAY, MAY 30.— HEB. III.

Better than Moses (1-6).—He has been proved better than angels, He is now to be shown better than the great Lawgiver himself. Moses was but the servant, Jesus the Master; Moses was appointed, Jesus was He that appointed him; Moses part of the household, Jesus the builder of the house. We are part of that household, and we must approve our share in it by our stedfastness. If therefore the words of Moses were accompanied by such Divine sanctions, and if disobedience was so terribly avenged, how much more shall we be exposed to God's just wrath if we apostatise from the Master and Builder of the Church.

To-day (7-19).—There is peril lest familiarity with God's words should beget indifference to them. The path may be trodden hard by the repeated passage of the sower's feet. The story of the forty years' wandering is a warning for all time. Still men disbelieve and disobey, still they doubt the all-ability of God, still they err in their hearts and therefore do not understand with their heads, still they wander to and fro, with weary hearts and restless feet. We must therefore guard against unbelief; and help each other against it by exhortation and entreaty. Sin hardens by very slow and insensible degrees, hence we are reminded of its deceitfulness. (14) How wonderful that we may partake with Christ, as partners in his rest, life, glory, and resources. (18, 19) There is an intimate relation between unbelief and disobedience. Beware of small sins against conscience, lest you impede the vigour and spontaneity of your faith. When by faith we are able to hand over all to God, and receive all from God; when God is a reality to us; when we live on his word of promise, we leave the wilderness of wandering, and enter the Canaan of rest.

FRIDAY, MAY 31.—HEB. IV.

The Rest of Faith (1—11).—How great a loss it is to fall short of any of the promises of God. Let us possess our possessions. We must not be content to hear what good things are prepared for us, but by faith we must avail ourselves of them. (3) The rest of the soul is not for heaven and the hereafter only, it is now and here. We may and we do enter it, so soon as we believe. This rest, in point of fact, has been awaiting us from the beginning of the world. It was typified in the seventh day, and in Canaan. But evidently it was not exhausted by one or the other, because 400 years after Israel had entered the Land of Promise, the Psalmist again speaks of not entering the rest of God. Obviously if Joshua had given Israel the rest of God, there would have been no need to speak, as the later Scripture did, of a rest yet to be missed. (10) This verse must refer to the Lord Jesus, who ceased from the work of redemption, as God the Father from that of creation, and having lain in the grave on the Sabbath arose refreshed on the first day. In Him we have entered into rest from our efforts after salvation, and from all anxiety and fear.

The Word of God (12-16).—There is no escape for disobedience and unbelief. God searches our hearts. Let us welcome the Divine sword, penetrating, dividing, cutting away the cancerous growth of sin. To lie open to God's eye is not all terror, because we have a great High Priest who loves and lives to intercede. (14) Note the expression in R.V. that He has passed through the heavens, as though there were several. He has been tempted, and can sympathise. God is the Great King. He sits upon the throne of grace and Jesus at his right hand. Only from a throne can grace issue. We have to receive, and we shall obtain forgiveness for each transgression and grace appropriate to each new need.

SATURDAY, JUNE 1.—HEB. V.

The True Priest (1-10).—His qualifications are that he should be a man, that he should receive the Divine appointment, that he should have the right to offer gifts and sacrifices, and that he should have compassion and pity for the erring and sorrowful. How all these have met in our Blessed Lord is evident. Let us go to Him more confidently, remembering how great the sacrifices He made in order to be able to do for us this very work that we need so sorely. (4) The priest must be called to his office; thus it was with Aaron, and with our Lord. (5) On the day of resurrection, the Father thus addressed Him, and from that hour He has undertaken to act as our Priest and Intercessor. (7) In the garden our Lord was so pressed, that He prayed for power to endure, and an angel was sent to strengthen Him. (8) We must obey before we can rule, suffer before we can sympathise, learn before we can teach. (9) "Perfected" does not refer to his character, but to his becoming qualified to act as our representative. Let us obey Him, and we shall experience what He can do, as the author of our eternal salvation.

Milk and Meat (11-14).—It was a severe rebuke. We should go on to mature experience and knowledge in the things of God: not always living on thoughts which have been passed on to us by others, but availing ourselves directly through communion with God's Word of that rich provision which can alone sustain and build up the soul.

THE "LIBERATOR" VICTIMS.—While public attention is naturally being directed to the return of Mr. Jabez Balfour, hundreds of thrifty persons who were unfortunate enough to invest their savings in the societies connected with his name are still in a condition of little better than starvation. Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, organiser of the Liberator Relief Fund (16, Farringdon-street, E.C.), has issued a large 16 pp. sheet (1d.) setting forth painfully sad facts and experiences which should touch the hearts and pockets of every reader. To those that "dwell at ease in Zion" we very earnestly commend its perusal for their profitable and, we hope, practical consideration.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION IN FRANCE.—There is a wide field for distribution of French tracts and Gospels in Havre and Rouen, cities of 150,000 population, each only nine hours from London. Almost all the people are Roman Catholics, without Bibles or the knowledge of the way of salvation through Christ. With the usual French politeness and curiosity, they willingly take any book or tract offered to them. French tracts are sold at a reduced price on application to the Religious Tract Society, Paternoster Row, and French Gospels at £1 for 500 at the Trinitarian Bible Society, 25, New Oxford-street, London, W.C. M. Baxter.

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS.—Mark xvi. 1-8.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Luke xxiv. 34.

THERE is considerable difficulty in harmonising the various accounts of what transpired on the morning of the Resurrection. This arises, not from any actual disagreement, but from the fact that there was so much to relate that four narratives could not be expected to give equal prominence to the same details. All agree in testifying that the sepulchre was found open on the first day of the week; that there was an Angelic announcement of the fact of the Resurrection, and that this was followed by several direct interviews between the disciples and their Risen Lord.

THE VISIT TO THE SEPULCHRE (1-4).—Mark mentions three women—Mary of Magdala, a woman whose intense devotion to her Lord resulted from her remarkable experience of his power to deliver (Luke viii. 2). There is no necessity to identify her with the woman in Luke vii. 37. The second Mary was the mother of James the Less (xv. 40), one of the apostles, elsewhere described as "the son of Alpheus" (iii. 18). Salome was the wife of Zebedee, and mother of James and John. Nothing is more beautiful than the devotion of these women to their Lord. They were "last at his cross and earliest at his grave."

They came to anoint Him (1). Spices, or aromatic herbs (see John xix. 39), were used by the Jews to embalm the dead, but not in the Egyptian sense. The spices "neutralised for a limited season some of the unpleasantness of death, and indicated the persistence of affection."—Morison. That they came for such a purpose showed that they expected to find their Lord still dead, and so gives weight to their testimony to his Resurrection. Does not their devotion to a Christ they thought to be dead, condemn our coldness of heart toward a Christ we know to be risen?

They came "when the Sabbath was past" (1), for they would not allow their affection to their Lord to make them negligent of one of God's appointments. Yet they started "early in the morning" (2), for their zeal equalled their piety.

When they had started they remembered the difficulty of the heavy stone (3). If they had known all about the seal and the Roman guard, they would have been more alarmed still. Yet they are an example to other seekers in that the anticipated difficulty did not make them return. And, like every other true seeker, they found that God was before them, and their difficulty was removed (4). Learn that no hindrance is too great for God to remove out of the way of those who seek Him.

THE INTERVIEW WITH THE ANGEL (5-8).—Note how he is described (5). His white garment was symbolical of the purity in which he lived in heaven; yet he is found in the place of death! With what interest the angels watched the life of our Lord; and what lessons of Divine wisdom they learned from Him. He was "a young man," yet he had joined in songs of praise at the creation of the world. The angels never grow old, but enjoy immortal youth.

His message was the first testimony to our Lord's Resurrection (6,7). He not only announced it, but pointed to the empty sepulchre as evidence (6) and recalled the word of Jesus, which they had neither understood nor believed (7). The event explained and fulfilled the word, and encourages us to expect Him to do whatever "He has said," though it is beyond our comprehension. Faith in the Gospel message does two things for those who receive it. First, it removes their own fear; and next, it makes them glad witnesses to others.

What tenderness appears in the special mention of Peter (7)! It is intended to assure him that his sinful denial has not changed our Lord's heart towards him. The promised meeting in Galilee was probably the appearance mentioned by Paul (1 Cor. xv. 6).

The effect upon the women (8) was a strange mingling of fear and amazement, and joy. They fled (R.V.), evidently to tell the news to the disciples (Matt. xxviii. 8). The statement, "neither said they anything to any man" is no contradiction, but means that they did not stop by the way to tell anyone. Such glad tidings justified the greatest haste and the most fervent zeal. Have you received it? Have you learned that the fact that Christ is risen secures the justification of all who believe, ensures to them the presence and power of a living Saviour, and takes away the dread of death? If you know the good news, "pass it on."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending June 1, 1895.—Sun., May 26, Psalm xxvii. 1-14; Mon., 27, xxviii. 1-9; Tues., 28, xxix. 1-11; Wed., 29, xxx. 1-12; Thurs., 30, xxxi. 1-13; Fri., 31, xxxi. 14-24; Sat., June 1, lxvii. 1-7.

BROKEN CHAINS.

SUMMER visitors to the beautiful seaside village of A—— were all familiar with the well-known form of old Peter Jervis, who sat on the beach mending nets.

While thus employed, his thoughts were busy; now and again he smiled and shook his head, as if carrying on a conversation with someone unseen.

One morning Frank, James, and Matilda Ramsay, accompanied by their mamma, set out on their favourite walk. On reaching the seashore, the boys made at once for the rocks. As Matilda, or Tillie, as she was usually called, could not follow her brothers' example, she began to build sand-houses, castles, and schools. Indeed, she practised all sorts of childish architecture, looking up occasionally to receive her mamma's approving smile.

By and by she grew tired of this occupation, and began to gather some of the beautiful shells that lay scattered here and there along the beach. Her papa had given her a pretty little pail, and she wished to fill it quite full, so on and on Tillie wandered. Suddenly, on looking up, she found herself standing opposite to old Peter Jervis. She had often noticed him before, and smiled sweetly. On seeing this the old fisherman touched his cap, saying, "Good morning to you, missie." To this child old Peter's weather-beaten face seemed strange and sad-looking. As she gazed at him in wondering earnestness, pity filled her little heart, and she asked, "Are you very tired, old man?" Instantly old Peter stopped his work, and looked longingly at the fair picture before him. Tillie, clad in a dress of pale blue gingham, her sunny curls hanging in rich profusion from underneath her sun-bonnet, and pail in hand, presented a striking contrast to her aged companion. "Tired, dearie? Yes, it's seldom I'm not tired now; but I'll soon find rest at Home." Tears glistened in the old fisherman's eyes as he thus spoke; and Tillie exclaimed in alarm, "What's the matter? Surely you aren't going to cry!" "There's nothing the matter," replied old Peter; "except that you are so like a little grandchild I had long ago. I've watched you every day you've come down here; and I've told my poor missus about you too."

Turning round at that moment, Tillie saw her mamma approaching, and, as she drew near, said, "This is my mamma." Touching his cap respectfully, old Peter wished her "Good-morning," adding, "I hope, mum, you are not angry with me for speaking to your little girl. I've a father's heart still, and she is so like my Nancy's child, whom the angels carried away to the 'Home over there.'"

"I'm not at all displeased," replied Mrs. Ramsay kindly. "We are all the same in God's sight. I should like to hear about your little granddaughter. Do tell us something about her."

"I would have been most happy, mum, only it's time I were going indoors. You see, my wife's an invalid—been in bed these last seven years. As I always go in at twelve o'clock she'd be anxious were I not turning up at my usual time."

"I am so sorry to hear about your wife. Does she suffer much pain?" inquired Mrs. Ramsay.

"Yes, she's a great sufferer, but so patient. I never hear her utter a cross word. I was tellin' her about the pretty child that resembles our dear Gertie, and how she wishes she were able to come to the beach to get a glimpse of her. Perhaps, mum," continued the old fisherman, "you'll be along this way to-morrow, and if so, I'll gladly tell you all about our Gertie."

"Might we not rather call at your home? I would like so much to see your sick wife, and would bring Tillie with me too." For a moment or two old Peter was unable to give Mrs. Ramsay a reply. At length, he exclaimed—his face beaming with surprise and pleasure—"How happy my poor Betsy will be to see you and the little lady, but, our home is not for the likes o' you to enter," he added sadly.

"Never mind about that; tell me where you live," said Mrs. Ramsay. "We live up yonder (pointing to a row of small cottages), and my number is 97, I'm sure you'll easily find it; but should you be in doubts, anyone will tell you where old Betsy and Peter Jervis live."

"Very well, then, tell your wife we shall call this evening; and, I hope this excitement will not be too much for her," answered Mrs. Ramsay. "Oh, no fear, mum, my Betsy will be overjoyed at the prospect;" and after wishing his new acquaintances "Good day" old Peter trudged homewards with a happy heart. . . . After tea, Mrs. Ramsay and Lillie set out to pay their promised visit. They easily found Willow-lamb-row, and as they approached No. 97, they saw old Peter standing watching for their arrival.

"Good evenin', ladies, jist came awa' in bye," he said, leading the way. As they followed, Mrs. Ramsay observed that everything within the cottage was neat and clean.

Betsy was more than delighted at seeing her visitors, and, after shaking hands, said, "I hope you'll excuse us for comparing any relation of ours to your pretty child, but our little Gertie was wonderfully like her, and after you've heard how she was such a blessing to us, you will not wonder why her memory is still so dear."

"Is it long since Gertie died?" asked Mrs. Ramsay, gently.

"Almost fourteen years; but that only brings our meeting time nearer," replied Betsy, longingly.

"Aye, lady; at one time of my life I had no hope of entering the bright home above," added old Peter, "and it was through little Gertie I found the way."

"One afternoon, when she was about eight years of age, I took her for a sail in my fishing-boat, as I had often done, when not busy. Gertie was so fond of the sea, that I used to tell her she would have been a sailor, if only she might. She aye loved her grand-dad better than he deserved.

"Well, this afternoon the weather was hot, and seeing that Gertie looked weary, I said, 'You might sing us one of your favourite songs; it'll cheer us up.' Her sweet childish voice poured forth the strains of that beautiful hymn,

> The Lion of Judah shall break every chain,
> And give us the victory again and again.

"I felt so queer that I wished she had chosen any hymn save that one. I'd got into the habit of taking a drop too much, and I fell a-thinking of the heavy chain that was daily tightening its hold upon me. I started when the child asked, 'Grandpa, have you any chains for Jesus to break? because He is so strong and kind, and willing to help everybody that He'll do whatever you ask Him.'

"Little did the child know how deeply her question sank into my heart. Bound, indeed, I was, and powerless to shake off the chains that oppressed me; yet the words of little Gertie's favourite hymn came to me like a message of hope as I sat in my boat that afternoon. When I reached home I told my wife here all that had passed between the child and myself. 'The darling's quite right,' she said; 'only the Lord can break the power of sin, and He is willing to do it.'

"From that night I resolved to give up the drink, and though at first it was a dreadful struggle, I've found that 'His grace is sufficient to strengthen and uphold.' Now, I trust to meet Gertie in that happy home, instead of filling a drunkard's grave, because I can truly say, in the words of her favourite hymn:—

> Though round me the storms of adversity roll,
> And the waves of destruction encompass my soul;
> In vain this frail vessel the tempest shall toss,
> My hopes rest secure on the blood of the cross."

Mrs. Ramsay was deeply touched on hearing the old fisherman's story. Tillie, also, had listened eagerly to every word, and when old Peter had finished his story, she whispered, "I know little Gertie's hymn, mamma." The sick woman heard the words and said, "Oh, you might sing it to us, dear." So, once more old Peter heard the simple story of the Redeemer's power and love sung by childish lips. As he listened a big tear stole down his furrowed cheek. He followed them to the door of the cottage, and said, "Good-bye, mum; you've done us both a power o' good."

Tillie Ramsay never forgot the story she heard that night in old Peter's cottage. Whenever she sings Gertie's favourite hymn she wonders if ever she will have an opportunity of telling some poor wanderer from the fold of the Good Shepherd, that He, as "The Lion of Judah, will break every chain." Special Prayer Meeting for Seaside Services at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, Thursday, May 30, 5.30.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN LONDON.

The immense audience that awaited Rev. John McNeill in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday evening, showed that he retains the popular ear as of yore. Before the doors were opened to the public, the place was almost full; when the bell rang, the rush for places reminded one of the days when the late Mr. Spurgeon was in his prime. As Mr. McNeill stepped on the platform it could be seen that the round-the-world tour, recently ended, had wrought no change in his fine physique, or in his generally robust appearance. The sermon proved that his preaching gifts and his power to illuminate the Bible narratives are in no way diminished.

The "old world idyll" of Moabitish Ruth cleaving to her Judean mother-in-law was the theme of the discourse. Needless to say the circumstances of the story were described with many a graphic and realistic touch. Substitute modern names of people and places, said the preacher, and the narrative is up-to-date. He told of having found in London, during his ministry amongst us, old Scotch-women, to whom the land of their nativity was as Judea, and who hoped at some time to cross again the border, "by the way of Carlisle" into their "holy land," and there to abide in the closing years of life. In the close affection that subsisted between Ruth and Naomi there is the "touch of nature that makes the whole world kin," but there is also the deeper touch of grace. In Ruth's decision to leave home, country, and friends, and go with this aged and tried relative into a strange land, we see a picture of the decision of an awakened and grateful spirit, to go with the Lord Jesus Christ, through the chances and changes of this life, to that Bethlehem or House of Bread from which no famine can ever drive us out. As Ruth elected not barely, scrimply, and ruefully, but with all the affection of her heart, to go with her mother-in-law and dwell with her, so should the sinner make a whole-souled emphatic decision to be Christ's for weal or for woe. The man who flings himself away, so to speak, on God, will assuredly find himself, to life everlasting.

Looking at the theme of the story from its negative side, as illustrated by the return of Orpah to her old life and her idols, the preacher found occasion to say some keen and cutting things about the folly of scepticism, agnosticism, or the latest negation, which does not even say "I do not know," but prides itself in the assertion, "I do not know that I do not know." The rewards that Ruth reaped at the last, through her faith and her choice, were vividly described. She "married the laird," and then her days of poverty were ended. Moreover, as someone has said, "her blood ran in the veins of Jesus of Nazareth." Some good things were also brought out from the later words of the text, "Where thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge." The Christian, said Mr. McNeill, must always be "a going concern," and there are not many such concerns in the worldly province nowadays. Then the Christian, however wealthy he may be in houses and lands, is but a lodger here after all. His treasure is in heaven, and it is not for him to "settle down" as though this world were his eternal dwelling-place. As the preacher pressed home the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ on any halting hearers, there was a great and solemn hush on the assembly, and one could not but feel that to some souls, at any rate, it must have been "the parting of the ways."

It was announced by one of the deacons that Pastor Thomas Spurgeon is feeling much better of his brief respite from active work, and that he hopes to be in his place again this week.

MR. MANTON SMITH AT SOUTHPORT.

A busy and blessed mission has been held by Rev. J. Manton Smith at the Tabernacle, Southport, and many have been the slain of the Lord. On Sundays hundreds had to be sent away for lack of room. The illness of the pastor prevented him from taking much part in the work. Mr. Phillips was a student in the Pastors' College. He received a call to Southport, where he formed a church, and built the present tabernacle and schools. His work in Southport has been a grand one; all who knew him and his work for the Lord there, will regret to learn he is compelled through ill-health to change his sphere of labour.

PROGRESS IN BARCELONA.

Miss Lawrence, writing from Calle Major, 42, Caldas de Montbuy, Barcelona, says: "In spite of the opposition of the priests, there is among the people an increasing willingness to accept and read God's Word. My brother-in-law, Mr. Pundsack, recently inserted a notice in one of the Barcelona dailies, that every Sunday, at 11 a.m., illustrated copies of the Gospel by John would be distributed free at his place of business, which was situated in a central part of the city. Every Sunday since, hundreds of persons have responded to the invitation, and many interesting and encouraging incidents have occurred in connection with the distribution. Of course, the priests and Roman Catholic press have raged, but in vain.

"I only wish we could enter the many open doors we have all around us. There are towns, villages, and hamlets all over this province where the people would gladly receive the Gospel. But the labourers are so few. My hope is in the children now being trained in our schools. One bright boy of twelve said to me the other day, at the close of our Sunday-school, 'I have prayed the Lord to allow me to grow up, that I may tell the Gospel to everybody.'

"The work in our hands continues to prosper, and gives us much cause for thankfulness. Since my last letter two more persons have been baptized, and several others show signs of a work of grace in their hearts. We shall be grateful for the prayers of the Lord's people."

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

The familiar boys' village at Farningham was all en fête on Saturday, when friends and representatives of the Sunday-schools of London went down in large numbers to inspect the Homes, cheer the inmates and workers, and arouse fresh interest on their return in these valuable institutions, which unhappily are at present sorely and seriously embarassed by reason of lack of funds.

The Farningham Village Homes have room for 300 little boys, while the Swanley village, a few miles off, accommodates 200 more. Boys who are orphan and destitute are admitted under the age of ten, and kept, fed, clothed, and taught till they are fourteen and a-half, being sent out with some fair knowledge of a useful trade. Visiting the workshops we found that the little cobblers, for example, have abundant work in keeping so many pairs of restless young feet tightly cased; the tailors, knitters, darners find the demands of the inmates of the Homes sufficient to keep them constantly busy. The well-managed printing department turns out excellent work, as shown in the organ of the Homes, Little Lads, various programmes and reports, as also specimens of private printing. In the carpentering shops some lads also learn their trade well; while with so many healthy boys and keen appetites in the village the young bakers have plenty of practice in the bakehouse.

The eleven homes, or large cottages, in which the boys live with their "mother" in family fashion, had each on Saturday their throngs of interested friends, who were delighted with the cleanliness and order generally prevailing. Between times there were interludes of sweet singing and smart gymnastic evolutions in the large drill hall—the hand-bell ringers and the boys' band lending variety to the proceedings. Alderman Belsey and the Mayor of Gravesend took part, speaking a few genial and sympathetic words on behalf of the Homes.

Dealing with the present financial need the committee say:—"To these Homes belong the honour of being the first in this kingdom to introduce a method by which the influences essential to home-life should be secured for homeless and destitute boys. The advantages of the plan have been so apparent that, besides the 2,000 boys admitted to these Homes, tens of thousands of helpless children have been taken and cared for in similar institutions. Why should an institution of so long and efficient standing—a pioneer in the past—be overlooked for the sake of starting some newer enterprises. Shall this noble work languish? Surely those who have loved and helped the Homes for Little Boys will arise and rescue them from this menacing debt." The secretaries are Messrs. A. E. Charles and W. Robson, 25, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.

FAREWELL FOR UGANDA.

The deep interest felt in the Uganda Mission, and in the fact that for the first time ladies are venturing into that distant region, found ample illustration in the crowded state of the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Thursday last, when farewell was said to the party who have since then sailed for Zanzibar en route to Uganda.

Sir John H. Kennaway, who presided, opened by recalling some of the incidents in the earlier history of the Uganda Mission and the marvellous developments of the past few months—churches self-supporting and self-extending, which looked as if we were on the eve of the accomplishment of that great desire of all our hearts, the establishment of an African Church and the evangelisation of Africa by her own sons and daughters. He rejoiced in this the first party of ladies who had braced themselves to the long and toilsome march of 800 miles into the interior of Africa.

Mr. Eugene Stock then introduced the missionaries to the meeting. Of the five lady missionaries one is the daughter of Dean Chadwick of Armagh; another, Miss Furley, has already been working on the east coast of Africa; Misses Thomsett and Pilgrim have skill in nursing; and Miss Brown is "apt to teach." Of the men, Rev. Martin J. Hall is well-known in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission and with the recent Winter Mission to India; Rev. T. R. Buckley is from Ireland, as were three others out of the ten. Four out of the ten missionaries are provided for by local bodies of friends without touching the general funds of the Society. With the party Dr. P. Rattray travels up to Uganda as an escort.

Rev. F. Baylis read the instructions of the Committee to the five ladies; after which Miss Furley, as the leader of the band, was asked to reply, which she did clearly and well, showing, as her experience would lead one to expect, a vivid sense of what lay before them.

Instructions followed to the five men. The difficult question of industrial missionary work was introduced, fenced round with many cautions. Rev. Martin J. Hall, in his reply, said that "It is useless to disguise the fact that we carry our lives in our hands; yet let no one say, if we never reach Uganda, that our lives are lost. I know of four men now in the mission field who went out as a direct consequence of the death of one who laid down his life for Africa almost before his work was begun."

Rev. C. G. Baskerville then addressed the missionaries, and Rev. G. Karney commended them to God in prayer.

SOUTHPORT EVANGELICAL CONFERENCE.

There was a good attendance at the Southport Evangelical Conference on Tuesday last week, which was presided over by Archdeacon Clarke. The morning subject was, "The Church View of Baptism," which was opened by Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, and among those who took part in the discussion were Canon Rycroft, and Revs. E. A. Tindall, R. Robson, and J. W. Fairhurst.

Canon Girdlestone, in the afternoon, read a paper entitled, "Considerations for Old Testament Critics." He maintained that the shield of Christ was thrown over the Old Testament as a whole and over certain specific books in particular. Therefore we may not criticise such books as if they were isolated Jewish history. They are part of the whole, and must be read in the light of Christ. We must be first Christians, and then, standing on firm ground, we may be critics to advantage. Addresses were delivered by Canons Bardsley (Huddersfield), Linton, Rycroft, Nunn, and others.

On Wednesday, a paper on "The Teaching of the Church of England with regard to Absolution," was read by Prebendary Eardley Wilmot. Sacramental confession was repudiated, both in the paper and the discussion which followed. Rev. A. Roberts, secretary of the National Protestant Church Union, introduced the subject of "The Right Attitude of the Church of England towards the Church of Rome." He said that reunion with Rome was at present a mere dream; and Leo XIII. had done his best to make this perfectly plain. So long as Rome remained what she was—so long, that is to say, as she retained her present distinctive doctrines and principles, and advanced her present claims—so long the Church of England must maintain the attitude given her at the Reformation, viz., that of firm and unhesitating protest.

The late Rev. W. J. Patton.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has lately suffered the loss of one of her most pious and useful ministers in the death of Rev. Wm. J. Patton, of Dromara, co. Down. He was not a great leader or debater in Church courts, but he was used by God in turning many to righteousness in all parts of the land. Multitudes still living speak of him with affection as their spiritual father.

Mr. Patton was born in 1829 at the small seaside town of Donaghadee. He studied for the ministry at Belfast, and also at New College, Edinburgh. In June, 1853, he was ordained to the pastoral charge of the congregation of Dromara, in his native county, where he continued to labour for forty-one years, until his death on January 31, in the present year.

As a boy he had been exemplary in conduct, and as a student diligent and successful, but at the time of his entrance on the sacred duties of the Gospel ministry, his own opinion, as afterwards expressed, was that he was greatly in the dark about spiritual things. He was educated, amiable, even "good," many would have said. He had not been indifferent to the subject of religion. When still only a student at College, he had organised a Sabbath-school and Band of Hope in the neighbourhood of his father's residence. Many a time also he was greatly concerned about his personal interest in salvation, and would go away into the fields to weep over his sins and to pray. He even passed through the great spiritual awakening of 1859, when hundreds were converted to God in a few weeks in connection with his own congregation; and still he was almost, if not altogether, blind to the glories of the free grace of God in Jesus Christ.

Having passed through an experience such as this, it is little wonder that in later years, when referring to the necessity for the greatest care being exercised that only truly converted men should be admitted to the Gospel ministry, he penned such words as these:—

> What is the use of learning and talent in a minister if he have not grace? He is only a learned hater of God, a talented servant of the devil, an accomplished child of wrath, an amiable heir of hell. An unconverted minister! What a life-long hypocrisy! Pretending to tell others the road to heaven, and not knowing it himself! Oh, the meanness of it, the shabbiness of it, the dishonesty of it! It would be nobler far to break stones on the roadside.

On August 22, 1860, a great turning-point in his spiritual history was reached. For more than two years he had been greatly in earnest about his salvation, and on the date mentioned he received what he himself designated "new life." He became henceforth a joyous, happy, and assured Christian, and was greatly used year by year in guiding souls into the light of God's glorious Gospel. Henceforth he was enabled to set forth the way of salvation with a clearness and earnestness which perhaps have never been surpassed, and with results which only the great day can fully disclose.

It was not merely to the people of his own village and neighbourhood that he preached. His parish might truly be said to be the whole of Ulster. From every part of the country invitations came to him to preach in churches or to hold evangelistic services. His own congregation being situated in a country district, and not very large, he endeavoured to comply with as many of these as possible. So frequently was he away on these preaching tours, it is told that to a visitor, who one day called at the manse and asked if that was where Mr. Patton lived, his wife replied, "No; but it is where Mr. Patton lodges occasionally."

Much as his sermons were blessed to the conversion of sinners and the edifying of saints, his writings were perhaps even more so. For many years he was a contributor to The British Messenger, Christian Treasury, and similar publications. Every year for twenty-seven years he wrote a New Year's Address to the children and young people of the church. Some of those addresses were greatly owned of God, bundles of letters having been received by him from persons who wished to tell him that they had been blessed by the reading of one or other of them. A few years ago he chose as the subject of his annual address "Assurance of Salvation," and from all parts of the world he received testimony that it had proved a word in season to God's people walking in darkness. Twenty thousand copies of it have been sold, and it is still sought after. Though lying on his dying bed at the beginning of the present year, his address, entitled, "The Holy Ghost saith To-day," appeared as usual. In a few weeks 20,000 copies were sold, and another edition of 6000 copies was published. It will rejoice many to know that he has left a work on "Pardon and Assurance" ready for the press, and that it will probably soon be published.

He left instructions that there should be inscribed on his tombstone the six following texts of Scripture, three for the unconverted and three for Christians, from which he had himself derived great good:—

1. "Christ died for the ungodly" (Rom. v. 6).
2. "It is finished" (John xix. 30)
3. "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out" (John vi. 37).
4. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9).
5. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7).
6. "Lo, I am with you alway" (Mat. xxviii. 20).

It was Mr. Patton's privilege to be joined in marriage with a lady like-minded with himself. Mrs. Patton predeceased him exactly twelve months. She had not for many years possessed good health, and was not, therefore, able to engage in many Christian activities, but she was a remarkably devout Christian. If her husband excelled in preaching, she excelled in praying. While he preached she prayed. It was her practice for years to spend two hours each Sabbath afternoon in intercessory prayer for the members of his congregation and for others whose names she had entered on her "prayer list." For thirty-four years she was accustomed to spend an hour and a-half in prayer each morning before breakfast, and to spend in prayer altogether each day not less than three hours. She was also a remarkably devout student of the Bible. Her habit for many years had been to read the Old Testament through once a year, the New Testament twice, the Book of Psalms four times, and certain portions much oftener. She read the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah every morning of her life. These servants of Jesus Christ have not lived in vain, and now they are together in the presence of their Lord

MR. ARCHIBALD BROWN'S WORK.

"A Letter to my Helpers" is the title of Pastor Archibald Brown's record of service during 1894. After a tender reference to his recent bereavement, he writes:—"This month (March) I have returned to London and my work. Whether able to fully continue the latter I can only determine by trying. My loved people are kindness itself, and never was the East London Tabernacle dearer to my heart. Never, also, I am able to say, was there more manifest blessing abiding upon every part of the work. My comforting assurance is, that the God of Abraham, who has led me thus far, will make his own way clear before me.

"Though necessarily often absent from home, the mission work has in no way suffered. My devoted missionaries are not among those who only render 'eye service.' Indeed, I believe that, if possible, extra care is taken when I am away that nothing shall be overlooked. The income for the work has been somewhat less than in past years. In this we have had fellowship with nearly every good work. I am glad, however, to be able to say that, as in the past, no debt of any kind has been incurred. What could not be paid for has been done without. During the first two months of this year the severity of the weather brought no little distress, and necessitated a considerable increase in the amount of relief given. This, however, does not belong to the expenditure of 1894, and consequently does not appear in the financial accounts of this record.

"With the sad growth of infidelity on the one hand, I see on the other a marvellous increase of Romanism. The Protestant spirit of England has fallen into a deep sleep. On every hand the activity of Rome is to be beheld. Added to this, the spirit of Rome is practically ruling thousands of professedly Protestant churches. The only difference between the two is that one is honest and the other dishonest. How long will Englishmen, I wonder, put up with the Mass, the Confessional, Prayers for the Dead, and all the mummeries of Rome now shamefully carried on in her Protestant Church?"

THE WESLEYAN SEAMEN'S MISSION reports that not a week has passed without the salvation of sinners and the reclamation of drunkards. The sphere of operations includes several centres in the East End, and the agents are one minister, three missionaries, and a Biblewoman. The Seamen's Rest, East India Dock-road, is almost constantly crowded, and good work has been done. The visitation of sailors on board their ships is the great work of the Mission. The secretary is Rev. W. W. Grigg, 42, East India Dock-road, E.

M. H. LASSERRE, whose French translation of the Gospels was first blessed and then banned by the authorities of the Church of Rome, has decided not to yield a passive submission to the Congregation of the Index. He has made elaborate inquiries, historical and otherwise, and these have been digested and printed for the private perusal of the Pope. It will be remembered that M. Lasserre's edition of the Gospels originally received the commendation of the Pope, and the hearty approbation of cardinals, archbishops, and bishops; but when twenty-six editions had run, the ban was launched, and "the faithful" ordered to eschew the book. M. Lasserre hints that he may yet address the French bishops and other Church dignitaries on the subject; but whether his protesting volume will ever be placed before the general public will depend upon circumstances.

MAY MEETINGS.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

The friends of the smacksmen who toil in the boisterous North Sea assembled in great force in Exeter Hall on Tuesday week, when the annual meetings of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen were held. About a hundred sturdy trawlers were present to sing and testify what God has done in the fleets by means of the Mission ships.

Sir Joseph Savory, M.P., who presided in the afternoon, opened with an address on the vicissitudes of the trawler's life, the hardships and dangers of his calling, the temptations to which he is exposed, and the good work now being done by the M.D.S.F. He recalled something of the state of things prior to 1882, when the Mission was first started, showing how at that time these men and boys seemed forsaken of all. Few were their opportunities of hearing the Gospel, or in any way coming under Christian influence, and how pitiably neglected they were in time of sickness or injury. The chairman made a strong and earnest plea for larger funds.

The summary of the Mission work for the past year showed that 9701 medical and surgical in and out patients had been treated, 9350 missionary visits paid, 2301 religious services held, 252 temperance pledges taken, 382 library bags sent out, 1961 knitted cuffs freely distributed, and 1230 copies of the Scriptures sold and given away. The weight of magazines, etc., distributed was over twenty-six tons, while the value of the tobacco, originally sold in the North Sea to abolish the foreign coper traffic, amounted to £2504, and the value of woollen articles sold at nominal prices was £303.

Archdeacon Sinclair, who opened by regretting the unavoidable absence of the Bishop of Liverpool, gave an address on the claims of the neglected parishes at sea, that is the 20,000 men and boys working in the trawling fleets without Gospel privileges unless the Mission ships visit them. He made a very pressing appeal for large and liberal aid on behalf of this great work.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who came next, addressed himself specially to the fishermen on the platform, as representing the vast host of the men at sea; setting forth their privilege and responsibility in having the Gospel sent to them, and their consequent duty (having accepted it) to make it known to others around them.

Dr. W. T. Grenfell, the medical superintendent —who has now started on his return to Labrador— gave a simple but very telling story of North Sea life and work, of souls saved (twelve in one short trip), of pain and sickness relieved, and of the changed condition of things in the trawling fleets. Passing on he spoke of the heroic service Dr. Willway is rendering on the Labrador coast—where he has spent the past winter among the poor and much-enduring fisher folk scattered up and down that bleak, inhospitable region. Apart from this every effort had been made to render needful help to the starving fishermen of Newfoundland.

Lady Savory then presented certificates to a number of skippers and seamen belonging to the crews of the Mission ships. Skipper Wright, of the "Wildflower," who saved the few survivors of the ill-fated "Elbe," was introduced, and in a quiet and modest way said that he had done nothing which any fishermen on the East coast would not gladly have done. He did not believe there was one trawler on the platform who would not risk his life to save that of another.

Quite a number of bright stirring testimonies followed from smacksmen representing Grimsby, Yarmouth, Lowestoft, Ramsgate, and Folkestone, all of whom rejoiced in the good work of the mission, and declared that it had wrought a wonderful change in the fleets and in the homes of the trawlers. Col. Wroughton, Mr. Frank Wilson, and others took part in the proceedings.

In the evening Mr. T. B. Miller, chairman of the M.D.S.F. Council, presiding over a large meeting, gave an account of the mission and its operations, dwelling on the issues as shown in changed lives and happy homes, and on the usefulness of the service rendered by the ladies who had undertaken to write to lads and cabin boys in the fleets. He believed that no one could fully estimate the results of such letters, appealing as they did to the deeper nature of these boys.

Mr. W. F. A. Archibald followed, as chairman of the Spiritual Work Committee, with earnest words on the value of souls and the need for effort and self-sacrifice that men may be won to the Saviour. He believed God had greatly used the Mission to the advancement of his kingdom among the toilers of the deep.

Dr. Grenfell then gave a series of dissolving views illustrating the desolate regions of Labrador, the perilous character of the coast, the hardships to which the fisher folk are exposed, and the help which he and his party in the Mission-ship Albert, and the little steamer presented by Sir Donald Smith, sought to render both to fishermen and Esquimaux.

A number of vigorous and animated testimonies followed from blunt fishermen—glowing with the love of God, and in one or two cases with not a little natural eloquence. As these spoke, many hearers must have rejoiced in the great things God is doing at sea.

Evangelical Alliance.

Regent's Park College has been for many years associated with the May conversazione of the Evangelical Alliance, but the unexpected and serious illness of Rev. Principal Roberts, necessitated a change of place at very short notice in regard to the meetings fixed for the afternoon of Tuesday last week. In this emergency, the ready Christian fellowship of Miss Mason placed the Pillar Room of her House of Rest in Finchley-road at the disposal of the Alliance. Thus the gathering was held as near as possible to the usual meeting-place; but doubtless the sudden change considerably affected the attendance as compared with that of last year. Miss Mason kindly provided tea, coffee, and light refreshments for the guests, most of whom came early for the half-hour's social intercourse which is a marked and pleasant feature of this yearly reunion. In addition to the speakers from abroad, there were present, among others, Rev. Dr. Muirhead and Rev. W. A. Cornaby, from China; Miss von Kirchner, from Russia; and Rev. Signor Golia-Mauro, from Italy.

Archdeacon Richardson read part of John xvii., and led the meeting in a prayer markedly breathing the spirit of Christian union; he specially remembered Principal Roberts, pleading for the sufferer's full restoration to health.

Lord Polwarth, President, delivered an address emphasizing the underlying principle of the Alliance and contrasting favourably the real unity which exists among the true followers of Christ with the outward uniformity after which some in the present day seem to be stirring. There was increasing necessity for standing fast by Protestant principles in adherence to the pure Word of God, while seeking to promote a spirit of brotherly love among Christians of all denominations for the furtherance of Christ's cause in the world, especially in view of the many and abounding evils which mark our day. They might well rejoice in all that the Alliance had been permitted to do in this direction, also that it afforded them one of the means whereby Christian people might express their sympathy with God's tried and persecuted ones in all parts of the world.

Mr. A. J. Arnold, general secretary, said the Council felt there was a necessity for him to make a statement at somewhat greater length than the five minutes to which he usually limits himself, owing to the special interest and importance which attaches to the efforts of the Alliance in regard to religious persecution in various lands. Having spoken of two departments of work, namely, the promotion in various ways of Christian union an the world-wide organisation of the Week o Universal Prayer, Mr. Arnold showed how thes things were somewhat overshadowed by constan and watchful care for the interests of religiou liberty abroad. In Turkey the struggle had bee maintained for over forty years, and especially sinc the article of the Hatti Humayoun on religiou liberty has been transferred to the Berlin Treat continuous correspondence between Her Majesty Government, the Council of the Alliance, and i Constantinople Committee has secured for the effor marked success in very many instances. Th Christian community at Ordou, in Asia Mino whose lives were imperilled a year ago b fanatical Greeks, now enjoy liberty of worshi and have secured a site for a new church. Th Pastor of Gemerek, Mr. Kalosdyan, has been re cently brought to Constantinople with others belong ing to the Armenian Church, for release from a lon term of imprisonment; and this is one of the case which the Alliance took up when it successfull pleaded on behalf of two of the Armenian Christian condemned to death in 1893. The council of th Alliance did not feel called upon to take up speciall the matter of the recent terrible outrages, bu only to continue their efforts in favour of religiou freedom. The present crisis involves even mor than religious liberty: and it needs the efforts o statesmen in the cause of our common humanity t secure such reforms as are absolutely necessary t prevent a repetition of the atrocities, which do no include among their victims, as far as can be ascer tained, a member of any Evangelical Protestan Church.

Turning to Russia, Mr. Arnold pointed out striking contrast, inasmuch as none of the Grea Powers protest against the imprisonment, banishmen harrying to death of multitudes of Stundists, sobe and industrious, and law-abiding people, whose onl crime is that they forsake the "Orthodox" Churc to follow the teachings of the Bible, and only de sire liberty to worship God in peace. The Allianc has expended a special fund of about £1000 in reli of suffering Stundist families, and efforts have bee made to ameliorate their conditions or stay the pe secutions. Friendly, but vain, appeals have bee made to dignitaries of the Greek Church, an more recently private communications have bee addressed to many Royal personages, in the hop that their influence may be used to procure liber for the sufferers. It is important, howeve for all Christians to remember how the Stun dists have expressed their conviction that the only hope is in God, hence the urgent nece sity for continuous prayer in their behal Much of the work of the Alliance in favour o persecuted Christians has to be done witho publicity. This leads sometimes to the impressio that the Alliance is inactive in regard to matters i which the council are really making great effor Mr. Arnold concluded his address by commendin the wide and varied work of the Alliance to th sympathy and prayers of its friends.

The adoption of the report and the re-appoin ment of the council for the ensuing year was move by Colonel Basevi, seconded by Sir Archibal Campbell, and heartily carried.

Rev. D. J. East spoke of his long term of missio work in Jamaica in connection with the Bapti Missionary Society. He could say from person knowledge that, though not an earthly paradis Jamaica is now inhabited by a flourishing, happ and contented people, whose condition bears wi ness to the capacities of those who, half a centur ago, were in hopeless material and spiritual bondag Such progress is a most encouraging evidence of th transforming power of the Gospel. Mr. Norolla described his labours among the Jews of Persi bearing strong testimony to the necessity for unit among all who work for God in a heathen land, an speaks of many cheering signs of widely-opene doors for Gospel effort in that country. Paste Fliedner, of Madrid, gave interesting details o Christian work in the capital and other cities o Spain. His address produced in the minds of h hearers an impression that he has indeed show cheerful faith and godly wisdom while dealing wit both the crafty and open opposition with which h has had to contend in contact with Rome. H pleaded for more labourers and increased means o utilising the abundant openings for God's work i Spain and other Roman Catholic countries, givin encouraging instances of an open ear for the Gosp on the part of the people.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.

The earnest-spirited ladies associated with this young and vigorous Union held an interesting series of meetings last week in connection with their anniversary. On Wednesday evening a reception was given to veteran temperance women—that is, ladies who had been abstainers for over fifty years. Some forty such were present, two having been abstainers for seventy years, and quite a number of them bore brief testimonies.

The public meeting of the W.T.A.U. was held in Princes Hall, Piccadilly, on Thursday evening. The report presented by Mrs. Brooks stated that at the last annual meeting 103 societies were reported in federation with the Union. During the year thirty-eight societies have been added, making a total of 143. The receipts for the year were £859 6s. 10½d., and the expenditure £817 3s. 11d. The autumn meetings of the Union, held in Exeter, proved a great success, an impetus being given to the work of the Union in Devonshire. Conferences have also been held at Thetford, Ashford, Bristol, and Chelmsford.

A meeting of a novel character was held at the Mansion House on March 14, when addresses were given by lady representatives of the professions of medicine, literature, journalism, education, nursing, and of district and parish councils, school boards, poor law guardians, civil service, etc. In connection with the pledge-signing campaign of the present year over 4000 pledges have been taken, and upwards of 34,000 leaflets sold. The circulation of the official organ "Wings" has steadily increased throughout the year. The bill for the abolition of grocers' and shopkeepers' licences, promoted by the W.T.A.U., was introduced into Parliament by Mr. D. A. Thomas, M.P. As to the progress of temperance it was regarded as slow but sure.

Mrs. H. J. Wilson, who presided, dwelt, in an admirable opening speech, on the objects of the Union. These are twofold—first, the promotion of individual total abstinence; and, second, to endeavour to secure for the people control and ultimate suppression of the liquor traffic. The Bill introduced by Sir William Harcourt was a much better one than that introduced two years ago. It was said that the Government did not intend to get it through; but that did not depend upon the Government so much as it depended upon the people. It is true that we cannot make people moral by Act of Parliament, but we may increase the facilities for doing right and lessen the temptations to do wrong.

Miss Docwra, in the course of an animated address, moved "That this public meeting of the friends and supporters of the Women's Total Abstinence Union rejoices that Sir William Harcourt, in the name of Her Majesty's Government, has re-introduced the Intoxicating Liquor Traffic Local Control Bill, heartily approves of its main provisions, and earnestly trust Her Majesty's Ministers will use every means in their power to pass the measure through all its stages in Parliament, that the inhabitants may be empowered to control the issue of liquor licences in their respective districts. And the meeting pledges itself to do all in its power to promote the success of the Bill."

Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., said that while the Bill is not all we want, nor exactly what we want, we welcome it, so far as it goes, for a beginning. Certainly it marks a great step forward that the Government should bring in such a Bill. It is, he said, the rich brewers and distillers who oppose the Bill. As a matter of fact, the publicans under the "tied house" system are often the victims and dupes rather than the instruments of the mischief caused by the liquor traffic.

Dr. Sarah Gray, of Nottingham, gave an important address, which should be read and studied in full, on "The action of stimulants on those who work and are weary." Needless to say that her conclusions were wholly against the use of alcohol and in favour of total abstinence.

The Dean of Hereford closed with a ringing temperance address. During the evening, Mrs. Harvey, A.L.C.M., sang a solo, "The Gift," and Miss Snell, G.S.M., L.A.M., a solo entitled, "The Coming of the King."

On Friday an all-day conference was held at the S.S.U. hall, Old Bailey. The morning session was chiefly devoted to considering the causes and cure of intemperance among women; papers being contributed by Miss H. F. White, Miss J. A. Fowler, Dr. Helen M. Wilson, and others.

In the afternoon Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, who presided, made a statement concerning the Temperance Home for Women at Sydenham, which has now been open for more than nine years. At the commencement of the last financial year there were twenty-two patients in the Home, and thirty-five more had been received; thirty-two had left, and the year closed with twenty-five patients. Several had been in the Home for terms of from one to four years, their protected and happy life causing their friends to be willing to allow them to remain for extended periods. The Home could receive thirty-seven patients, and was frequently full. Lady Elizabeth also spoke on the power of religion as the greatest in the work of reclamation, and advocated the establishment of temperance lodging-houses for lonely women. Mrs. Pash, who conducts a Bible class on Sunday afternoon at the Home, gave some particulars of her work in connection with the institution. Mrs. W. S. Caine remarked that she knew a number of poor women who were daily praying that the public-houses in their midst might be closed, and she devoutly hoped the Government Local Veto Bill would be passed. Mrs. Septimus Buss read a paper on total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the State. Mr. J. H. Roper, Mrs. Bousfield, Mrs. Finlay, Mrs. Elliot Yorke, and others, also spoke.

The Protestant Alliance.

On Thursday last, friends of the Protestant Alliance mustered in force at Exeter Hall. In the morning and afternoon there were conferences, at which the duty of Protestants at elections was the subject of discussion, also the need of educating the community in the principles of Protestantism.

In the evening there was a large gathering, presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny, who, having called attention to some of the errors of Romanism, referred to the Pope's letter to the people of England. In that document, the Pope quotes Scripture, but if that is allowable, why is the Bible denied to the people? Good for Pope, good for peasant. Both are men, and both are poor sinners. Neither is infallible, but both are infallibly sinners. Mr. Denny urged his hearers to follow Scripture rather than human leaders; and in order to this they should study God's Word. In conclusion, he submitted to the meeting a resolution which had been adopted at the earlier meetings, repudiating the Pope's appeal to the people of England. The resolution was seconded by Mr. A. H. Guinness, and carried with acclamation.

Mr. William Johnston, M.P., moved a resolution calling upon electors to require candidates for Parliament to pledge themselves to maintain and defend the Protestant succession to the throne, to oppose the application of national funds in aid of Romanistic or Ritualistic teaching, and to preserve all the safeguards provided by the Legislature for the security of civil and religious freedom. Over and above all such vigilance he called upon Protestants to cultivate prayer, that the power of God would be put forth, and a true Protestant spirit be fostered

Rev. C. H. Wainwright, in seconding the resolution, deplored the apathy and indifference of Protestants, who seem unable to distinguish the advantages Britain enjoys from the Protestant succession, from the slavery which would certainly come upon her if involved in Popery. Whilst offering to grant blessings upon other nations, the Pope is unable to do anything for himself; while those nations that most engage his attention are the worst off, and are, in fact, in terrible bondage. Referring to the Factory and Workshops Bill, now before Parliament, the speaker pointed out that in London and elsewhere there are convents that take in washing, Hence Cardinal Vaughan and the priests are in a flutter of anxiety, and say that the convent laundries should be exempted from inspection. The Freeman's Journal, in its London Letter, has remarked, "There is every reason to believe that the Government will make another surrender to the priests." There is no reason why there should be any such surrender; Romanists should not enjoy concessions and favours that are not allowed to other sections of the community. The resolution was heartily adopted.

Rev. William Cuff moved a resolution condemning the proposal to effect reunion with the See of Rome, and protesting against the support given by the constituted authorities to clergymen who have adopted Romish practices and ceremonial. While regretting the attitude of some who say soft things of the Papacy, the speaker was convinced that in due time the people will rise in their multitudes and ask the priests to "step it." The people are waking up, as is evident from the formation of additional branches of the Protestant Alliance. He emphasised the deeply religious nature of the question, and maintained that, in view of prevalent declension, humiliation and prayer becomes all servants of God. Protest is next to impotence if God is not with us, but He is with us, and victory is assured.

A vigorous address was also delivered by Mr. Jon Williams; and the resolution was carried with acclamation.

Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

The forty-first annual meeting of this society, well known for many years as the Turkish Missions Aid Society, was held in the Parlour Room, Exeter Hall, on Tuesday afternoon, May 14, Lord Kinnaird in the chair. Rev. W. A. Essery read a summary of the report.

Speaking of the work in the Bible lands, the Chairman said he felt with those friends, the late Earl of Shaftesbury and others, who formed the Society forty-one years ago, that it was far better to join in supporting our American brethren in the field than to start a new cause. For one reason, they were better able to go into the country under Turkish dominion than men of a European nation, the United States not being mixed up in European politics. At the close of an interesting speech, his Lordship, as treasurer, read the balance-sheet, and expressed the hope that the Society would go forward with increased support.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe said he felt that no one could read the pictorial pamphlet, recently issued by this Society, without being filled with thought concerning this work for the Lord. It is doing a work that no other Society is attempting. We owe a debt to the Bible lands, whence the Bible came to us; our gratitude should lead us to give back help to them for what we have so freely received.

Rev. W. Major Paull said that he knew from his long connection with the Bible Society that to have anything to do with Turkey is a great trial, but notwithstanding progress had been made. He related several interesting facts from Turkish courts at Constantinople, showing that the authorities are beginning to find out that the members of Protestant Evangelical churches are to be relied upon and sure to speak the truth. The work was indeed hard, for the difficulties were so much greater where religion forms the essence of national life as with the Mohammedans.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan hailed the Society as an old friend with a new name. The expression "Bible Lands" has an intense charm. He should never lose the impressions which those scenes had made upon him. He saw a good deal of the school and mission work supported by this Society. It was good and real work. The work demands the generous support of the Christian people of this country. Several other friends briefly spoke.

George Yard Mission.

Mr. George Holland's work, in connection with George Yard Ragged Schools and Mission, has been before the public for forty years; and all who know the work esteem it very highly. The venerable superintendent has all along had much joy in his many-sided exertions, and at the forty-first annual meeting, on Tuesday last week, he was enabled to present a very cheering report.

The Mission has been instrumental in effecting a wonderful transformation in a part of Whitechapel which was specially needy a generation ago. The Mission feeds the hungry and clothes the naked, cares for young children in its nursery, and for sick and weary adults in homes of rest. There are Bible-classes for lads and lasses, and for men and women; in all, more than thirty missionary agencies are in operation. The Gospel is preached in its simplicity, many devoted Christians assisting Mr. Holland in various departments. Among the generous supporters of the work are the Duchess of Teck and the Duchess of York, Lord and Lady Compton, and Louisa Lady Ashburton. Sending children into the country in the summer is one of the oldest activities of the Mission, and last year about 1100 men, women, and children were thus sent away for a fortnight. The total expenditure in works of mercy and evangelisation, cheering the sad and instructing the ignorant, was only £2200. The needful funds were supplied, and no debt was incurred.

Lord Kinnaird, who occupied the chair, declared the Mission to be a model of Ragged School work, and commended the devotion of the workers. Lady

Hope followed with a stirring address, in which she spoke of the comprehensiveness of the Mission, all the departments of which are summed up in the Lord's request, "Bring them hither to Me." Mr. T. A. Denny referred to the affection which Lord Shaftesbury entertained for Mr. Holland, and held it to be a great privilege to assist him in any way.

Rev. E. A. B. Sanders, rector of Whitechapel, spoke warmly of the Mission, which is God's work, not George Holland's. For the encouragement of the workers, Mr. Sanders called attention to the words, "The people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits" (Dan. xi. 32). Addresses were also delivered by Mr. R. Scott, who indicated the secret of the success of the work—it is rooted and grounded in Christ; and Rev. W. Frith, who had known the Mission for forty years.

The Anti-Sunday Travelling Union.

Major-General Bruce, president of this society, occupied the chair at the annual meeting at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening. The report read by Rev. W. J. Watkins recorded that 2034 members had been enrolled during the year, bringing up the membership to over 19,000. There were eighty-five honorary local secretaries and sixty-six distributors of leaflets on Sundays at centres of traffic. The financial statement showed a small balance in hand.

The Chairman, referring to the great efforts not only in this country but also on the Continent to secure the Sunday's rest for railway, omnibus, tram, and cab men, pointed out that some of the French railways had encouraged the movement somewhat, and the Jura-Simplon Railway Company had been admonished by the Federal Council of Switzerland for not giving its men the rest to which they were entitled. Sir Mark Stewart, in proposing the adoption of the report, mentioned that it had been found that horses worked forty-eight hours in six days lived longer than if worked only forty-two hours but spread over seven days of the week. The motion was seconded by Rev. W. R. Mowll in a vigorous address on the claims of the Lord's Day, and the benefits conferred by its due observance. A second resolution deprecating the use of conveyances on the Lord's Day was moved by Sir Douglas Fox, and seconded by Rev. J. B. Barraclough. Rev. Dr. Gritton also spoke on "The Shareholders' Union." From the report of the organisation it appears that the annual ordinary Sunday traffic employs 350,000 trains in Great Britain, and has more than doubled since 1867.

Missions to Seamen.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Wednesday week in St. James's Hall, the Duke of Westminster, K.G., presiding. The report stated that the income for 1894 was £36,346 8s. 9d., being the largest amount ever received in any one year, and nearly £3000 in excess of the income of the previous year. Reference was made to the spiritual provision for the sailors, of various nationalities, in fifty-one ports of the United Kingdom and in fourteen harbours abroad. A steam launch had been added to the Mission fleet for service at Shanghai, and new steamers were urgently required for the Bristol Channel and the Medway. When the year 1894 opened, the Missions to Seamen had no chaplain, no church, and no institute in London, the greatest seaport in the world. But when the year closed it had three chaplains, six workers, with two temporary churches and two institutes, with all their varied organisations. A Seamen's Institute had also been provided on the Tees at Middlesbrough. New Seamen's Institutes had also been opened at Harwich, Dunkirk, and Hong Kong. Similar buildings are projected at Plymouth and Lowestoft. The eighty-two Missions to Seamen Churches, Institutes, and Mission-rooms now in use are highly valued by sailors, who throng them in large numbers.

The Chairman spoke on the claims of seamen to the consideration of Christians at home, and maintained that the Missions to Seamen is engaged in a noble work in bringing the Gospel to bear on sailors.

The Bishop of Stepney said that, having ample opportunities of seeing the work of the Society, he could testify how thoroughly it is done and how encouraging are the results. He went on to touch upon the terrible trials and temptations to which sailors were exposed while in port. There were 18,000 sailors sleeping in the port of London every night; and if they wanted to see what these seamen had to contend with, let them just pay a visit any evening to the neighbourhood of the docks, and they would see the representatives of these 18,000 sailors walking about engaged before their very eyes in a conflict which to them all would appear sad in the extreme. There they would see the power for good pulling on one side, in the person of the agent of the Missions to Seamen, against the powers of darkness on the other, in the shape of the seductive influences of evil which had so great an attraction for the sailor home from a voyage.

Sir George Baden Powell, M.P., who followed, bore strong testimony to the good being done both in home and foreign ports. Amongst the other speakers were Mr. G. R. Parkin and Revs. James Fill and Edgar Lambert.

The Parents' Mission.

Last week the annual meeting of this Mission was held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, Rev. C. H. Waller, D.D., presiding. Mr. A. Webb, the secretary, stated that forty-six meetings, conferences, discussions, etc., had been held, many thousands of special tracts had been distributed, and some definite spiritual results had been obtained.

Rev. E. J. Kennedy said the work of the Parents' Mission was specially needed amongst so-called Christian people because he found that many of them, while teaching and taking an interest in other people's children, neglected their own. Thousands of young men had passed through his hands, but had he got hold of them ten years before they came to him they might have been prevented from falling into bad habits. Rev. Thos. Goss stated that training by the parents was the great need of the age. The good received in the day and Sunday-school was frequently counteracted by vicious or inconsistent home example. Mr. George Stoneman also spoke.

The Christian Community.

The Christian Community, originated by the Huguenot refugees in 1685, and re-organised by John Wesley in 1772, held its annual meeting in Exeter (Lower) Hall on Monday evening. The chair was occupied by Mr. F. A. Bevan.

The report stated that 450 workers give their services, and nine mission halls are maintained. Workhouses and lodging-houses are extensively visited, a shelter for homeless men is provided, and free meals to children and adults are given. There is a Home for Working Girls, and many are trained for situations. Open-air preaching is maintained at twenty-one stations, and a large distribution of Evangelical literature takes place. During the summer a home for convalescents is maintained at High Beech, about 400 children being sent each year.

The Christian Community is entirely undenominational, members of all Evangelical denominations uniting in the service. The report, as given by Mr. Atkinson, the secretary, showed that a good work was being developed in Bethnal Green, the visitation of the workhouses and common lodging-houses being really appreciated by the people. As regarded the open-air services, the police had never interfered, and no one had ever complained. The income had been £2881, and the expenditure £2524. The free library, having grown so rapidly, now issues a separate report.

The Archdeacon of London said that the Christian Community greatly interested him as a student of Church history; and when its aims were understood there was no work in which Christians would more like to join. There were eighty-nine parishes in London, which had greatly overgrown the spiritual provision made for them, and an agency like the Christian Community was welcomed as being not antagonistic to any other denomination. More mission halls were wanted, because the people could not be got into the church or into the chapel, and their society had nine such stations. The common lodging-houses alone had a population of 60,000 persons. The Archdeacon went on to show that there was no more desirable evangelistic enterprise in London than that of open-air preaching, for it had proved that the people who did not attend places of worship were not altogether indifferent to religion. Reference was then made to the stirring sermons given at Paul's Cross in the sixteenth century before Henry VIII. and Edward VI.—sermons which had helped to inspire the Reformation.

Rev. J. H. Scott, M.A., rector of Spitalfields, said that the people must have Christ. Picture galleries and art collections would not save the people; they had been tried, and had failed. He hoped they all believed in the Reformation. Addresses followed by Revs. T. Evans, J. L. Brooks, and A. Connell.

Scripture Readers' Association.

The Church of England Scripture Readers' Society held its annual meeting on Wednesday, last week, the Bishop of Stepney presiding. The report described the agents employed as "intelligent, experienced, and spiritually-minded men," and dealt with the need for such work in the vast parishes, which it is impossible that the clergy, however zealous, can fully cover. The income for the past year was £11,807, the expenditure £11,973. The staff of readers has been slightly reduced, although the applications for their help are many and pressing, and the need for larger funds is greatly felt.

The Chairman in his opening address dealt with the claims of East London, rejoicing in the enormous amount of "lay" help engaged in Christian service among the teeming masses. His experience had convinced him that these workers get hold of a class which the clergy had great difficulty in reaching. He bore striking testimony to the influence exerted by some of these Scripture readers on the shallow anti-Christian scepticism so often affected by working men. Amongst all the agencies at work in the dense and difficult districts of London, the Scripture readers of this Association were entitled to a high place.

The Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham dwelt on the importance of the testimony borne by the clergy themselves as to the result of the work. After earnest and useful words on the responsibility of all Christians—laity as well as clergy—to spread the Gospel, the Earl closed with an earnest appeal for funds.

The Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn mentioned the excellent plan of his own Kensington parish, which has "linked" to it a Stepney parish, which it provides with a Scripture-reader. In no spirit of boasting he would say to other wealthy parishes, Go and do likewise. He was one of those old-fashioned clergy who believed in house-to-house visitation, and he pointed out how this, to be thorough, was impossible unless the clergy had help, and of such help none was more efficient than that afforded by these readers.

Addresses followed by Mr. C. E. Tritton and Mr. E. S. Hanbury, who claimed generous support for the Association on the ground of the soundness of its principles, the sphere of its work, and the suitability of its workers. Rev. S. L. Dixon also heartily supported the claims of the Association.

Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society.

On Monday afternoon the annual meeting of this Society was held in the council-room, Exeter Hall. The report, read by Rev. John Fordyce, the secretary, who is on the eve of retiring from the post he has so long and faithfully filled, dwelt on the difficulty, noted long ago by Dr. Duff, in raising funds for work among our own people. Alas! that this should be so, seeing that, left without any messengers of the Gospel, many Europeans and Eurasians are in danger of lapsing into forgetfulness of God, and even in some cases into heathenism. Besides, our own young men, going out from Christian homes, flung into worldly society, and wholly (in remote stations) deprived of Gospel privileges, are apt to wander away from God and hope. The Europeans, Eurasians, and Americans in India are returned at the last census as 247,790, scattered all over the empire on railways, plantations, mills, and the like; and on behalf of such this Society pleads. Details are given in the report of the work of Revs. Isaac F. Row, J. R. Hewison, H. Ryland Brown, S. J. Jones, Messrs. Herbert R. Francis, A. D. White, and other earnest evangelists, whose numbers needed to be largely augmented.

Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, who presided, warmly expressed his sense of the importance of and urgent necessity for this effort to evangelise our kith and kin in India—thousands of whom are wholly isolated from ordinary Gospel privileges and Christian ministry of any kind. Surrounded as they are by peculiar temptations, and without a true friend to warn, it is small marvel that many sink into forgetfulness of God and his claims upon them. He closed by a regretful and kindly reference to the retirement of their beloved secretary.

Rev. W. S. ORGANE, just arrived from Madras, bore personal testimony to the state of things among Europeans in his own presidency. Railways are rapidly extending, bringing fresh Europeans into the country, but no provision is made for their spiritual needs. Yet the life of a young Englishman in a native city, or on an isolated estate, or railway station, is one of peculiar temptation. If people at home only knew the condition of many who go out, there would be no lack of liberal aid. We simply cannot afford to leave our countrymen and countrywomen wholly void of those Christian privileges we hold so dear.

Col. E. S. SKINNER and Mr. T. A. DENNY also spoke, the former giving, as the result of his long experience in India, a sad picture of the unevangelised state of many of our people in that land.

Lady HOPE concluded with a fervent plea, both for Europeans and Eurasians. She well remembered the meetings her own mother used to hold for Eurasian women, and how eagerly these would say, "No one ever told us this before." There are many who cannot easily learn Indian languages, but here is a vast field in which only the English language is needed; surely some might go to these our own kith and kin. But it must not be forgotten there are true Christians here and there. For example, all during the terrible siege of Chitral a little prayer meeting was held every day by the men whose valour is now ringing through England.

The R.T.S. Breakfast.

THIS May Breakfast is now recognised as affording an annual opportunity of hearing fresh accounts of the Lord's work in many lands—the gathering being professedly held in connection with the foreign missionary operations of the R.T.S. After breakfast, on Tuesday last, the chairman, Mr. HENRY MORRIS, said that, as representing the Bible Society, the C.M.S., the Christian Literature Society, and many other missionary bodies, he wished to testify that the R.T.S. had rendered them the utmost possible service in their great work.

The first called upon was M. le Comte SAINT GEORGE, of the Geneva Evangelical Society, who described the colportage work of the agents of this Society in the white fields of France. Next came the venerable Dr. MUIRHEAD, of Shanghai, who after half a century's labour in China is hoping shortly to return to that great land for which he has given his life. The Chinese, he said, are peculiarly a literary people. There is a vast reading and thinking population, hence the peculiar value and usefulness of tracts in that land. He acknowledged warmly the service rendered to the missionaries by this Society.

Rev. G. R. POPLE, from the Congo, remarked that as yet tracts were of little use among the Congoese; but the school books issued by the R.T.S. had proved of the highest value.

Rev. J. WILLIAMS (C.M.S.) disclosed quite another state of affairs when, speaking of work in cultured Japan, he showed how remarkably tracts had been used of God. The R.T.S. had made all the missionaries their debtors by printing and issuing a number of most valuable tracts.

Rev. E. P. RICE testified to the enormous work done by the R.T.S. in India. His father having been a missionary before him, he could speak of good service done for the past fifty years. While this is so, he could not help feeling that the future is likely to see demands on a vastly greater scale, because the millions of India are being taught to read, and the grave question is, What will they read? An almost limitless supply of tiny, yet good tracts, to sell at about half a farthing, is needed, besides more solid literature.

What the Christian Press has done for the people of Madagascar was touched upon by Rev. W. E. COUSINS, who specially claimed earnest prayer at this serious crisis in the affairs of Madagascar.

The next speaker, Rev. F. A. P. SHIBREFF, led our thoughts to the Punjaub, that great northern province of India, which he looked upon as the portal of Central Asia. Books and tracts are being very widely circulated, and in the supply of these the R.T.S. has largely co-operated. Various incidents were narrated, illustrating the way in which God has been pleased to bless the circulation of Gospel literature.

Last of all came Pastor FLIEDNER, of Madrid, who felt that important as were all these foreign fields, it was no less important that the nations of the Continent should be evangelised. His own experience in Spain had convinced him that the Spanish people need the Gospel quite as much as the heathen of Africa or China. By means of various illustrations the pastor showed how utterly dark are the poor Spaniards; but to some light had come, and not seldom had it been through the printed page. Evangelical literature had rendered great service to the Gospel in Spain.

Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

LAST week Mr. Waugh's excellent and much-needed Society had its annual gathering of friends in the Mansion House, with the Lord Mayor in the chair. The report was in some respects gratifying, as it told of increased public support; but it also had to tell of an increase of cases dealt with to the number of nearly 3500. Since its formation the Society has intervened in 66,376 cases, involving the welfare and happiness of 156,576 children. That is a terrible indictment against the parents of this Christian country, and the Lord Mayor might well say that he felt great pain at the existence of such a state of things.

One of the best friends of the Society has been the Countess of Ancaster, and it was right that her sympathetic speech at the meeting should be very cordially received. She spoke of the deep interest being taken by the Queen in the operations of the Society, and also of a movement by sectional bazaars throughout the country to raise a fund of £40,000. Addresses were also given by the Earl of Ranfurly, the Earl of Iddesleigh, Mr. Rider Haggard, Mr. Collingridge, and others.

Servants' Benevolent Institution.

THE annual meeting in connection with the General Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution was held on Thursday afternoon at St. James's Hall. Lord Battersea presided. The annual report showed that the amount received from subscriptions had fallen off, and the applications for temporary relief had not been so numerous as in previous years. The many letters of gratitude which had been received proved that much good had been done in that way, particularly in enabling members to tide over casual distress. But the committee did not feel justified in spending much money in temporary relief, as that would seriously lessen the amount for pensions. During the year £1346 had been given in pensions, and £37 3s. in temporary relief. More donations and legacies and more and larger annual subscriptions were needed. The Chairman deplored the falling off in the subscriptions. He, however, expressed the belief that the coming year would bring them increased prosperity. Archdeacon Sinclair advocated the claims of the Institution, observing that if the old custom of family worship were more universally observed as it was half a century ago, it would be a means of binding together the members of the household in a manner which nothing else could accomplish, thus rendering the condition of servitude one of increased comfort.

RESIGNATION.

O God Almighty! teach my mind,
To meet thy dealings all resigned,
And let no murmuring sigh
Rebellious rise, against thy will;
Teach me to bear affliction still,
Or teach me how to die.

For many a fair and lovely thing
Dwells on this earth to which we cling,
And binds our mortal part,
Friends whom we love, joys that we prize,
Endeared by sweet and kindred ties,
That twine around the heart.

Yet, still the flowers that bloom so fair,
In this bright world are touched by care,
That we may look above,
And strive by hope and faith to gain
A respite from our earthly pain,
Beneath thy sheltering love.

Liverpool. EMMA J. WATKINS.

AGGRESSIVE WORK.—NO. 16.

WHAT a variety of character one meets with whilst speaking in railway carriages day after day, and how differently is the truth received. As the time available for speaking is usually limited, one naturally endeavours to show the way of life in as few and pointed words as possible.

Upon one occasion after leaving the train, a man said, "There is a time and place for this sort of thing, but I think your remarks have been much out of place, as you don't seem to use judgment in the matter. I noticed people looking at one another and smiling whilst you were speaking, and I think you may do a great deal more harm than good." So much for the opinion of the unconverted man. But what can he know about the Lord's work? And so men who have never done a hand's turn in the Master's service, will try to teach some of us who have been busy at it the most of our lives, and perhaps before they were born. I don't remember ever meeting with a case of harm done. If we did not do any work before consulting people as to how it should be done and when we should do it, I fear very little would ever be done at all, we should receive such different advice. No, we have just got to use the judgment God has given us, and then profiting by experience go to work as opportunities appear to present themselves to us. No doubt most of us make mistakes at times, but the Lord knows all about them, and can use even mistakes, if He likes, when He sees that his servants have a single eye to his glory.

At another time a man followed me out into the road, and said, "I see you believe in that dreadful doctrine that people have it in their power to believe when they like." Then he talked so fast that I could not get a word in edgeways, and he got into such a passion and shouted so loudly and became so abusive, that I had to threaten to appeal to the police hard by, as people round would think there was going to be a fight. This man called himself a Christian. He was a hyper-Calvinist, and saw nothing in Scripture but election, and election of the strangest type. Fortunately, there are not many men of this order about, or I fear there would not be any standing room on the face of the earth for some of us. Yes, I believe in election, and whosoever will may be of the elect by the acceptance of Christ as his Lord and Master, but of course the man's accepting is the proof that God's Spirit had been dealing with him, as God is ahead of us in all that is good and right.

Upon another occasion, whilst speaking in a long American sort of carriage on the electric railway here, a man called out "Go out of that, shut up," and when I asked if the subject was not a good one he began to swear. Ah! the carnal mind is enmity against God, and so thoroughly, in some cases, that it will come out, and I am rather surprised we don't see more of it than we do. In the natural heart there is a hatred of these truths, and the hatred intensifies, and will eventually constitute hell, as we cannot be happy unless at peace with God.

When talking another day in one of those lengthy railway carriages, a well-dressed man walked from the further end, and came and sat close to me. Thinking this significant, I asked him aloud whether what I had been saying was not correct. He replied, "Yes, sir, quite right, and I only wish there were more people travelling by these trains like yourself." I then asked how long he had been saved, and he answered audibly "About ten years." His was a word spoken in season, and I felt it to be most helpful. In talking to him afterwards, he said the Lord had used two Gospel addresses in bringing him into the kingdom, although God's Spirit had dealt with him in many ways before. One address was upon "Train up a child in the way he should go, &c.," and the other was upon "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

Another man lately followed me out of the train saying "These words of yours will be carried home by the Holy Spirit to some hearts, there is no doubt about it. Twenty years ago a man spoke a passing word to me in London—that word haunted me for five years, and I could not get rid of it until it drove me to Jesus." And so it is, for we never know what word is going to fall into prepared ground. Therefore we must sow beside all waters and the Lord will take care of his own truth and give the blessing in his own time.

NORTH-WEST CANADA.

Dear Sir, —I have recently returned from Canada in company with a party of Scotch student missionaries, who left a year ago to engage in mission work among the settlers in the North-West of Canada. They were stationed far apart in order to enable them to have experience of different Provinces. Considering the extent of ground to be covered, and the difficulties to be faced in a new country, the progress made within the last ten years is remarkable. In none of the British Colonies probably has the Protestant Church been more faithful to its duty in following up the immigrants. Generally speaking, the missionary has a hard and rough experience—especially in British Columbia—and the work requires men of a persevering nature and matured constitution.

There is ample scope for the energies of more missionaries, and the expenditure of more funds. The people in the North-West Territories are generally very receptive of the truth, willing to attend Christian services and support the Church. But the work has many drawbacks and hardships. How rare is it that we hear the voice of prayer raised for blessing on our Colonies and their missionaries, many of whom are quite as lonely as those in more foreign lands.

Let me mention that Rev. C. W. Gordon, of West End Church, Winnipeg, has inaugurated a scheme for the reception of emigrants from this country. He will be glad to give any information required, and to hear of any families intending to settle in the North-West.—I am, yours faithfully,

Geo. Reynolds Reid.

THE McALL MISSION IN PARIS.

Two years ago, on May 11, God called to his rest the beloved founder of the McAll Mission in France, and during the past days many have been the spontaneous expressions from speakers in the mission halls and workers' prayer-meetings. On Sunday, May 12, in the Congregational Church, 23, Rue Royale, Rev. J. Anderson spoke with great feeling from Rev. xiv. 13, recalling to his hearers the career among them of the friend whose presence and counsel never failed in times of need. Again, in the crowded French afternoon service Mr. Anderson spoke, and allusion was made by M. Reveillaud. On Friday, May 10, M. le Pasteur Venard, of the Eglise de l'Etoile, spoke in the mission hall, 8, Brde. Baine Nouvelle, from 1 Cor. ix. 22: "I am made all things to all men, that I may by all means save some." He said that the revered friend of whom they were reminded at this special season was himself a singular exemplification of the thoughts of the text. At the workers' prayer-meeting the same day, at 23, Rue Royale, many and touching were the petitions called forth by the return of this anniversary.

The annual assembly of the Mission was held on May 5 in the Oratoire du Louvre, when the report was read by the Rev. C. Greig, director of the work and chairman of committee. Hymns were sung from the Mission hymnal, and kind and touching allusions made to Mr. McAll.

HOME OF PEACE FOR THE DYING.

The trustees, council, and medical staff of this hospital, near the Swiss Cottage, St. John's Wood, have now for two years watched its beneficent working, and earnestly commend it to the support and interest of the Christian public. It is solely set apart for men and women in the last stages of illness. Immediate admission is granted on the merits of the case, and all diseases, including cancer, are admitted. The charity is administered with the utmost economy, the foundress and lady superintendent acepting neither board nor salary from the funds. Nevertheless, £2000 is urgently required to place the finances on a sound basis. The dying are surrounded with personal care and with every comfort, the nursing staff being full and efficient.

This hospital does not advertise; employs no canvassers or collectors; and is entirely dependent upon the spontaneous support of the Christian public in response to the important work it carries on. Miss Davidson, "Friedenheim," Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, N.W., is hon. sec.

STUDENT VOLUNTEERS.

The May number of The Student Volunteer (2d. 93, Aldersgate-street, E.C.) contains many interesting facts and announcements with respect to the progress of the Student movement. We learn that at the next Students' Conference in Keswick at the end of July, delegates are expected from America, Germany, France, South Africa, and possibly from Denmark and Sweden. Among the expected speakers at the Conference are Rev. Andrew Murray, Rev. J. Chalmers, of New Guinea, Archdeacon Sinclair, and Mr. J. R. Mott. Special addresses will be given to theological students.

Delegates are being sent to the three Students' Conferences in the United States at Knoxville, Lake Geneva, and Northfield; also to the Frankfort and Scandinavian Conferences in August. Mr. Mott, after the Keswick Conference, expects to start on a very important tour. He has arranged, after the German Conference at Frankfort, to go to India and hold conferences at four of the student centres—Bombay, Madras, Lahore, and Calcutta.

An important forthcoming event is the international Students' Missionary Conference at Liverpool, Jan. 1-5, 1896. A thousand student delegates are expected. Full particulars are given in The Student Volunteer, which also contains a stirring paper by Mr. Mott on "The Watch-cry of the Student Volunteer Movement."

WORK IN FUNCHAL.

Sir,—Many of your readers take great interest in Mr. Smart's work among the sailors at this port; and I am sure they will rejoice to know that for some months past there has been a marvellous opening for evangelistic work among the Portuguese in the island of Madeira. I had the pleasure of spending a month with the friends on my return to this country from Africa, and had the opportunity of seeing what is being done for the priest-ridden inhabitants of this beautiful island. Mr. and Mrs. Smart, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Jeffard, are anxious to extend their Mission into different parts of Madeira, where they and their Portuguese helpers are well received, and where the people already are glad to listen to their message of love.

The Portuguese services at Funchal are well attended, both on Sundays and week-nights, and their room is overcrowded on Sunday evenings. This work has been greatly blessed, and it is a matter for thankfulness that our friends are compelled to enlarge their room. Some kind friends interested in this work have already sent donations for this purpose, and I sincerely hope that sufficient money will soon be forthcoming, so that such promising work shall not be crippled for lack of funds.

GOSPEL PRINTING IN INDIA.

In a recent communication from Bombay, Mr. Wallace J. Gladwin says:—

Along with other labours God has laid upon us a larger work of Gospel printing, tract distribution, etc. A large printing machine has been purchased, and the means have been sent to us in answer to prayer. To extend this good work we need at once more machinery and materials. Will some friends of God and India kindly tell us where we can purchase at the most favourable rates:—(1) A job press, to work with treadle or by power, and to print about 8in. by 10in. (2) A paper-cutting machine, guillotine, to cut 28in. or 30in. (3) A petroleum or gas engine, suitable for common press works. Any who can give us information on these items, may kindly address, India Mission Workers, care of 25, Hillingdon-road, Uxbridge.

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS.—Many of your readers may at this time of year be disposing of winter clothing. In our seven Homes for Working Boys we have over 300 lads between the ages of thirteen and seventeen. They can afford to pay for their food and something towards their lodging, but many of them are quite unable to provide themselves with suitable clothing. Many could obtain better situations if they were better clad. Boots and clothes will be most thankfully received if addressed to the secretary, Homes for Working Boys, 18, Buckingham-street, Adelphi, W.C.

CHRISTIAN UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

Dear Sir,—We have been greatly disappointed by the failure of the negotiations for a farm on which we expected to begin our work immediately, and this at the moment when a London Board of Guardians wished to enter into a definite agreement with us about the employment of able-bodied men. We are unable to reconcile the difficulty we have experienced in getting suitable land, though ready to expend £1,000 or so in the acquisition of it, with the perpetual complaint that land is going out of cultivation.

We should be thankful for your help by calling attention to this anomaly, or rather urging land-owning readers to consider whether they could not help forward this cause of social reform by putting land at the disposal of such a society as ours. We want a three years' lease, with option of purchase, but we would consider any business-like offer, though of course we hope some landowners, who want to do good even more than to make money, may be willing to co-operate with us.—Yours sincerely,

J. F. B. Tinling.

AMONG THE ZULUS.

In a letter lately received by a friend from Mr. J. J. Meek, of "Othello," Rorke's Drift, Dundee Division, Natal, he states that his wife has not been able of late to undertake any work among the Zulu kraals, but they were hoping soon to conduct a ten days' mission in Zululand. Mr. Meek speaks of a recent visit to the Gordon Memorial Mission, where he saw some 500 Zulus attending the Gospel preaching, and 200 joined in observing the Lord's Supper. Among a number of converts baptized at the mission were an old couple from Mr. Meek's district. Besides these, a large number of women and a few men regularly attend the weekly meetings which he conducts at the kraals of the two principal chiefs.

Mr. Meek is anxious to be able to support one or two additional native helpers in the work. He is thankful to our readers for the help rendered him in the past, but there are districts untouched by the Gospel messenger, which he greatly desires to see supplied with the good news of salvation through Jesus Christ.

MARSEILLES AND MADRID.

Dear Sir,—After much prayerful consideration, we have accepted the call to return to Madrid, and so relieve Mr. and Mrs. Fenn, whose health compels them to withdraw from the direction of the well-known Chamberi Evangelical Mission.

After labouring for sixteen years in this port in behalf of seamen of many nations, I am anxious to leave the Rest in good hands, and shall therefore be glad to hear from any who might feel called to such a sphere, and who would be willing, as a service of love, to assume the responsibility and direction of this Mission. A knowledge of French would be necessary. I will gladly answer all inquiries if addressed to me as below.—Yours in the Lord's service,

Chas. E. Faithfull.

SAILORS' INSTITUTE, LAS PALMAS.

Sir,—Having had the privilege of staying at Las Palmas and seeing the work of our friends Mr. and Mrs. Searle, I am pleased to bear testimony to their labours. I trust many of the friends of sailors will remember this work in their prayers. The annual report gives most interesting incidents as to the services and tract distribution. An appeal is made for funds to enable them to fit up some beds to accommodate sailors who go ashore. This want is deeply felt. The Sunday evening services at the Institute are generally well attended.

EGHAM.—The report of the Gospel work at the Mission Hall, Bishopsgate, Egham—a hall quite unsectarian, though built at the personal cost of the vicar's wife—shows earnest and faithful work by the evangelist, Mr. A. Gostelow. A cycle band has done useful service in the surrounding villages.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN INDIA.

As many readers of The Christian are interested in temperance work, they may like to know how that movement is proceeding in India. The Anglo-Indian Temperance Association has its head-quarters in London, and the chief promoter is Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P. There are about 100 branch societies in India, comprising some 150,000 enrolled members, chiefly from among the higher and educated classes of the people of the land. This writer's tour has secured for us twenty-two new societies and some 2000 new names. The work of the Association extends from Peshawar in the North to Madura in the South, some 3000 miles, and from Bombay in the West to Dacca in the East, 2000 miles more. This is a wide field, and it needs many more labourers to work it efficiently.

I was able during my late tour through the Panjab-Scinde, the Berars, East India, and the North-West Province, to do a large amount of evangelistic work, and I find that thousands who never before heard the Gospel came to hear it simply out of respect they had for one who is trying to reform the social habits of their country. To me this is a great source of pleasure, for thus the temperance work is made the handmaid of higher and nobler Christian labour. The people now see, and say, "It is the missionaries after all who are our true friends, for when our country is sinking into the vortex of strong drink, while none of our own teachers come forward to try and save us, the Christian missionaries do so at no small sacrifice." These thoughts have done away with much of the former prejudice against mission work, and thus it prepares the way of the Lord for further progress in India.

It is no small matter to convince the people that the messengers of Christ are their best friends, and this alone justifies all the labour spent upon our temperance work in India.

FROM NORTH-WEST CHINA.

Tidings from the circumference, however remote, must be of interest at the centre. The scattered members of the household of faith have still their place in the circle of family love. Living as we have done for the past six months at this the most westerly point occupied by evangelical missionaries in this great province of Szchuan, we have had occasion often to praise the name of our Lord for manifold grace, bestowed in guidance, in protection, in supply, and more in a spirit of willingness to hear on the part of the people in this large district. Yachow lies at the extreme western limit of navigation, of the great road that leads from Pekin to Tibet, with the system of river navigation by which communication is made on raft and boat with the foreign life and trade at Shanghai.

At our first coming in the heat of the past summer, there was a manifest spirit of opposition, and the uncertain tenure seemed likely to end in our expulsion. On Saturday evening the crisis was reached, and three of us, two westerners and one Chinese, knelt in a darkened room in the newly-rented house, to commend ourselves and the work to God's Almighty care, not knowing whither or what might next be. On the Sunday the public recognition of the work by the highest Mandarin in the district allayed all opposition, and since then no hand has been raised against us.

Two visits to a point ten days' march farther west than Yachow have laid a new district upon our hearts, and so soon as the point here is occupied by workers already on their way, we shall be free to go on and seek an entrance there. Ta-chien-lu is the border town, and point of entry for trade and travel between China and central Tibet. The home of Chinese traders; the great tea mart, from whence the tea is carried as far as Lhassa; the centre of a great number of Tibetan lamas, traders, and farmers, this city offers especial advantages for a dual work—for the Chinese on the one hand, who are very friendly; for the Tibetans on the other, who may be reached in large numbers. Communications have been made with us relative to this region, and in a few months, if the Lord will, we shall be ready to move forward.

There are many loved fellow-workers, who will be reached through The Christian, who may desire to share in such an effort to reach Tibet on the Chinese side. We have but scant means at our disposal now for such a step. Perhaps as they read this, the knowledge of the need and opportunity may be a call to fellowship in such a service. Our friend on the coast (we are two thousand miles from the shore line), Rev. J. R. Goddard, Mingpo, China, will gladly receive, and forward to us, whatever may be sent. Above all, pray for us, that entrance, utterance, and wisdom may be given to us abundantly.—Yours sincerely, W. M. Upcraft.

A TEACHER'S VICTORY.

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

It was a class of noisy, boisterous lads, from the age of fifteen to seventeen, but one of the worst was Myke Walton, and that he should attend a Bible-class was a wonder to many. But it happened in this wise: he had been caught stealing apples in the garden of a gentleman, who was the superintendent of the school. "I'll let you off on one condition, that you go on Sunday to the class," he said, as the guilty lad stood before him.

"Sure and I'll be there, and thank 'ee, sir," was the answer of the astonished thief; and, true to his word, he was there, and continued to go; not that he heard much, for the teacher's time seemed taken up in trying to get order, and then by any device striving to keep it.

They were indeed a strange set of boys, with little respect for themselves or anyone else, and one might pity their teacher, as he tried with all the patience he could command to bear with them.

But there was a limit to even his endurance, and one Sunday he went away from the trying scene thoroughly dispirited.

"I'm convinced I am not the one for that class," said Frank Atspeer, addressing his uncle, with whom he lived.

"How so?" asked that gentleman, looking up from his book.

"I don't like to own I am mastered, for if ever anyone tried by tact and care to get into touch with young fellows, I have, and all to no purpose; and as to impress any Scripture truth, it is impossible."

"I wouldn't be in haste, Frank; you may look at it differently. We are off to-morrow for three weeks. Let it be till you return."

Three weeks in wild Wales were very invigorating to mind and body. The business his uncle had to attend to left plenty of time for health and pleasure seeking. On the second day they climbed a rugged steep together, and rested on the summit.

"I have cast over your words, Frank, about that class. Will you take it kindly when I say you seem to be wrong in your idea of Christian work? So many workers make a grave mistake: they set themselves by tact, and schemes, and plans, to get into touch with those they teach, and when their efforts fail, they give up in despair. Leave success for secondary consideration. The work you undertake is Christ's—the truth you would teach is his, and it must be taught with God-given authority. Christ's workers must be Christ-sent, his servants must be humbly relying on Him, and closely obeying the command, 'Follow Me, and I will make you,' etc. Do you see my meaning? Let all your worrying about your class subside, and get into touch with your Lord, receive his Spirit, be filled with his grace and love, and it will follow as the blossom opens to the sun, you must touch hearts for eternity."

Little more was said on the subject, but during the days that followed, Frank Atspeer saw himself at fault—he had been doing the work, or trying to—it had not been Christ working in and through him, and he had failed, as a natural consequence. The soul-searching revealed the wrong, and sent him to the great source of inspiration—and it was an altered man he went back to that class.

More unruly than ever were the boys after his absence. Myke Walton was sullen and cross. He had had a bad week of it, the home scene had been no preparation for a Sabbath, and in some way or other he meant to make himself "scarce" next week.

"Boys, close your Bibles; I will not see them used thus. Now, listen, while I tell you of what I saw in my holiday," said Frank, firmly. After some commotion, all eyes were turned to the speaker, and some interest was manifested in the description of scenery, but when he spoke more confidentially they listened eagerly.

"I was out of health, boys, I found; I had grown weary of you all, and meant to give up, but I went to see a Great Physician, and He told me what was wrong, and I have come back thinking differently about my work. Then He sent a message to you."

Myke's eyes opened wider, and he blurted out, "To me? Then He's mistaken his man; He don't know me," he answered.

Frank looked round on those strange faces with pity and new desire. "Lads, it was the Great Physician, Jesus, and I saw his hands and feet, and there were marks of wounds He got for you. I told Him how you tried and wearied me, and He only seemed to point to his wounds, and say, 'I came to seek and to save that which was lost.' I told Him my class was rough and unruly, and there seemed to be no good in any of them; and He said so graciously, 'I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance,' and I promised to come and tell you his message."

The bell rang too soon, and it was Myke who kept his seat till the last, and quietly left the room.

Two months later Frank Atspeer was walking home by the lower end of the town; life had become more real to him, and work for Christ more glorious. He was owning to himself he had begun at the wrong end, but since that time in Wales he had learned the Christian's secret of power. His pleasant thoughts were broken by rough sounds and sights. A crowd had just dispersed, and a stray few loitered. "It was nearly up with him," said one.

"Who? What is it?" asked Frank.

"It's poor Myke Walton, sir. They'd owed him a grudge, and they've paid it." And as one and another walked away the teacher made haste to cross the green, where the bruised and bleeding boy sat leaning against a tree. "Myke, my poor fellow, what has happened?"

He rubbed his eyes and looked up. "'Twa'n't my fault; it's all come of hearin' your message." And then he turned on his side and groaned.

"Let me take you home, Myke?"

"No fear, you ain't to see how they acts there; I can bear it, and double."

Meantime water had been found, and the wounds attended to, and Frank was steadying the lad as he tried to walk. "Mr. Atspeer, sir, I've been brought up a bad 'un, and I was real bad myself, too. But you turned real like, when you come home, and told us what you'd seen, and about the wounds got for us, and it set me a thinkin', and I didn't give up going to class, as I meant."

"But the quarrel, how of that?" They stopped to rest, and still the lad kept up his tale.

"Well, sir, I couldn't help showing it, if I had to give up the old life; and these fellows set 'em on at home, and a'most killed me. But I can bear it right enough. You said He had the marks as He bore for me, and I ain't going to be ashamed—fine return for his love if I was. No, Myke 'll be real, one way or t'other."

It was long before those wounds healed, and many more he received—some that hurt deeper than bodily cuts. But he was kept loyal to Him who said, "My grace is sufficient for thee," and as time went on Myke's life proved the faithfulness of the promise; and, wonderful as it seemed, he was from that time foremost in all that was good.

"I'll never forget it, sir," he said one day, "you hit it straight when you said it, 'was lost,' 'seek and save that which was lost.' No mistaking who that meant. And now I want to find other lost ones."

Charged with messages from Christ to souls, years of happy service were fulfilled by that teacher, and those about him felt it, knew he spoke with power, and no one dared insult his earnestness, or disturb the quiet of the class.

Teacher! worker in any sphere! are you sometimes inclined to give up for very weariness of spirit, at the disregard, the noise, the indifference you meet with? Follow Frank Atspeer's example, and you will find the soul that has leaned on the Saviour's bosom, and has heard Him speak, will be strong as the Apostle to give his message to the Churches.

Thy love, O God, restores me from sighs and tears to praise;
And deep my soul adores Thee, nor thinks of time or place;
I ask no more, in good or ill, but union with thy holy will.

MR. JUSTICE HAWKINS, at the close of some serious cases at the Liverpool Assizes, observed that "it seemed to him that all these outrages were committed under the influence of drink."

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the Gordon Mission this season. They expect to have five tents in the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, Moray, and Kincardine. PRAISE.—For much blessing on mission at Leeds, conducted by Mr. J. Neech.

Letters to the Editor.

A BURNING QUESTION.

Dear Sir,—I heard a pitiful story the other day. A young officer was led to confess Christ through the influence of an earnest Christian who was also a zealous teacher of a particular view of prophecy. His young disciple not only drank in the vital and fundamental views of the Gospel, but also the special prophetic views of his now beloved and venerated friend.

After a while he fell in with another earnest Christian also interested in prophecy, to whom he opened his heart as to the Gospel truth and the prophetic views which he had learned, speaking as ardently of the latter as of the former, as his teacher had done to him. But his present listener belonged to another prophetic school, and decidedly told him that his views as to the order of future events were quite wrong. The young fellow was greatly astonished, for he had been led to attach as much importance to those views as if they were an integral part of the Gospel itself.

He therefore arranged a meeting between the two opposing teachers, invited them to his rooms, and intently listened to the discussion. He became so puzzled and so consciously incapable of deciding between the two interpretations, that he gave up the study of prophecy as a hopeless riddle. But this had held so vital a place in the teaching of his earlier friend, that he failed to distinguish between the relative importance of the truth of the Gospel itself and the question whether the Church would or would not pass through the Great Tribulation, that he gave up the whole in despair, and is now practically an infidel.

The Spirit says, "Ye have also more sure the prophetic Word, whereunto ye do well to take heed (as unto a light shining in a dark place until the day dawn and the day-star arise) in your hearts." Was then the shining light of prophecy made darkness to that young soul so full of hope and promise? No: but questions which are not answered nor even raised in the sure word of prophecy derive a factitious importance because they are test points in opposing schemes.

With courtesy and deference to these good men, I ask their candid consideration of my doubt whether any teacher is justified in teaching without qualification any doctrine for which no unquestionable "Thus saith the Lord" can be quoted? or which cannot unquestionably be inferred from the Sacred Writings?

The most burning question, during the past fifty years, in the Futurist School of prophetic students, has been whether the Church will or will not pass through the Great Tribulation, understanding by this term three and a-half, or seven, or forty years of unparalleled suffering before the Millennium. A writer in The Truth quotes well-known names on the negative side, and thinks that should settle the question. But as many names of equal authority could be quoted on the other side. My conviction is that this discussion does more harm than good; and is a pitiful waste of time and labour. It is beyond question a fruitful source of heartburning and disunion.

The simple hope of the Lord's coming is overlaid with speculations as to the details connected with it, which instead of binding saints together in love, separate them into opposing schools.

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness," said Paul, Christ's faithful martyr, "and not for me only, but for all them also that love his appearing." We do well to remember that they who love his appearing are whatever view they hold as to the time or manner of his appearing. The doctrine of an interval of three and a-half or even of a thousand years, of the Tribulation or the Millennium, between us and the Lord's Return, even if it be inaccurate, grieves Him less, and less obscures our love of his appearing, than a controversy which separates very friends.

And oh how hard to reconcile
The foes that once were friends.

To some of those who are passing off the scene these lines have a meaning which God grant the coming generation may never learn.

Yours in the hope and love of his appearing,

Quartus, a Brother.

CONVENTION OF HISTORICAL STUDENTS OF PROPHECY.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Porcelli's letter on this subject in your last issue leads me to express an earnest hope that, should such a Convention as he speaks of be held, they will see the impropriety, rather than "the propriety of undertaking a winter campaign similar to that recently undertaken by the Futurist school."

Can it be proper or seemly for Christians who are agreed upon the subject of "the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ," and who desire to awaken the slumbering Churches to its importance—not to say to win souls to Christ by their testimony to its probable nearness—can it be proper for them to go about the country, exhibiting to the world, as well as to the Churches, the serious differences of opinion which prevail amongst those who "love his appearing" with regard to the less important topics of Antichrist, and, speaking generally, of the whole question of Historicism v. Futurism?

It is much to be regretted that the Prophetic Conference Movement should have departed from the wise and Christian precedent of the Mildmay Prophetic Conferences, which was to unite upon the same platform the testimony of all true Christians who were agreed upon the subject of the Lord's coming, and not to bring to the front those points upon which they are still, unhappily, divided.

I write as one in sympathy generally with the Historical school of prophecy, and, therefore, feeling regret, as no doubt my friend Dr. Grattan Guinness does, as well as many who agree with him, that what we cannot believe to be truth, proven to be such from Holy Scripture, should be presented to the world as well as to the slumbering Church, as if it were an essential part of Second Advent truth.

The diversity of views on these secondary points is sure to be a stumbling-block to the world, and, without doubt, it is a serious cause of division in the Church. Is it wise, is it right, is it helpful to those whom we seek to win to "the happy hope" of Christ's coming, to exhibit publicly on platforms our disunion on points relating to Antichrist?

If it be replied, "Our 'Futurist' brethren have begun it, are we to let them have all the speaking to themselves?" I would unhesitatingly say, "Better far that we should leave them to themselves than follow their bad example in this respect." We, at least, should have no part in helping forward the scandal of exhibiting to the world how Christians, who are waiting for Christ's coming, are found disputing among themselves by the way as to which should be the greatest school of prophecy. Far better to bear the indignity of being looked down upon, of being told (as Mr. Pember tells us) that our prophetic views are "human folly," while those of his school are "Divine wisdom," and that we teach that "God does not mean what He says." We can surely wait for a day which will set all this right, and, in the meantime, rejoice that our brethren, while so hard on us, are in their own way seeking to spread the important truth we hold in common—the coming and kingdom of our blessed Lord.

I say not a word against all reasonable efforts to make known, whether by pen or by speech, what we believe to be revealed in Scripture; only let it not be undertaken in a spirit of rivalry or of unseemly controversy before an ungodly world. For this reason I would urge that it should not be "a winter campaign similar to that recently undertaken by the Futurist school."—Yours very truly.

Henry E. Brooke.

P.S.—I wish that we all, as prophetic students, had more of the spirit of dear old Dr. Horatius Bonar, whom I heard say on the Mildmay platform, not long before his death, that, after a long life devoted to the study of prophecy, he had come to feel less sure of what at first he held very confidently; and that he did not think we had as yet got the clue to the right understanding of that marvellous book the Apocalypse.

"LE SIGNAL," which was launched in Paris about a year ago as a daily paper on Protestant lines, representing political, moral, and literary interests, has abruptly come to an end. The founder, M. Arthur de Rougemont, gathered around him a staff of workers in hearty sympathy with his own ideals, but from the first he had to struggle with difficulties arising from want of adequate support on the part of the Protestant section of the population. The weekly paper La Fraternité has also ceased to appear.

IN CENTRAL JAMAICA.

A correspondent visiting Jamaica writes:—"On Good Friday I had the great privilege of being at the opening of a Moravian church at Carisbrook, right away among the hills. Bishop Hanna, who has been working in West India for thirty-two years, is now stationed here. For some time it has been felt that the existing church was too small, and under the guidance of the good bishop a new church was started last year. The opening of this building it was my lot to attend.

"When I reached Carisbrook, after nine miles' ride over the hills, it was not quite ten o'clock, and the service was to begin at eleven. Already there were many gathered, and the choir was at work practising for the occasion. The ride had been very hot, but the welcome extended by Bishop Hanna more than made up for the discomfort of a two hours' ride in the sun. By eleven o'clock there were fully 600 people gathered, many of whom had come ten miles and more. The district is but thinly populated, and there is a great deal of primitive bush left. Six of the Moravian pastors were present, and several native brethren. After reading and prayer the bishop declared the building consecrated to the worship of God. Mr. Wise, pastor in charge of a neighbouring station, spoke on the glory and delight of serving God.

"Afterwards a second meeting was held, in which many gave their testimony. Most striking was that given by dear old father Simeon. He told us how, many years ago, he used to pray with an old blind sister negress, that God would send the light to Carisbrook. For long they prayed, almost doubting sometimes whether they would be heard. 'But,' said he, 'God was in the place, and we didn't know it.' So, after many years, his prayers had been answered. It would have done home folk good to see him. When he spoke of the goodness of the Lord his whole face brightened up. Others followed, and it was most interesting to hear them speak so brightly and lovingly of their Lord. By half-past two the meetings were over, and the people gradually separated, with much hand-shaking and many expressions of goodwill.

"The new church is seated for about 450. It is built of solid cut stone walls, with corrugated iron roof. There is still a considerable amount of work to be done, windows, doors, etc., the estimated cost for which is £100. Towards this nearly £40 was subscribed by the people, who have been laying by as God has prospered them. It is not a little to their credit to have given so much, as very few of them turn over £10 a year. The work will proceed as funds are supplied, and it is hoped that it will reach an advanced stage before the rainy season comes on, as the heavy rains would spoil the interior wood work."

SOUDAN INTERIOR MISSION.

About a year ago we told, in brief, the story of the departure for the Soudan of several young men, who had for a time been in training at Southport for pioneer mission work. Messrs. W. Gowans, R. Bingham, and T. Kent, who arrived at Lagos early in 1894, endured many disappointments and privations in their endeavour to penetrate the interior. The party was reinforced by Messrs. T. Holt, J. Lomax, and T. Greenwood, but progress was delayed by tribal wars. Meantime Kent succumbed to fever, and Gowans was carried off by dysentery and exhaustion.

While these sad rents were being made in the ranks of the little party, Mr. David Loynd, of Bolton, left for the distant scene. Joining Mr. Bingham at Lagos, he left for the interior in December last, arriving at Ogbomosho in January. Here they "hold the fort" for Rev. C. E. Smith, of the American Southern Baptist Mission, who is taking a year's rest. As for Messrs. Holt, Lomax, and Greenwood, who arrived at Bida, on the border of the Hausa country, in November last, they were treated very treacherously by the king, and found great difficulty in securing carriers. They were, in fact, detained for four months, using up their provisions, and the goods required for the rest of the journey.

Mr. J. C. Hindle, of 7, Windsor-road, Southport, describing these sad occurrences, writes:—"As Messrs. Lomax and Greenwood could not speak the language, they were several times stoned by the natives when alone without Mr. Holt. Under these circumstances it was deemed wisest that Messrs. Greenwood and Lomax should return to Ogbomosho to study the Arabic and Hausa languages with Messrs. Bingham and Loynd, while Mr. Holt, who can speak both, went on to Kano alone to find the most suitable places for mission stations. Mr. Holt not only speaks both languages fluently, but he is somewhat dark-skinned, and when robed in native costume is very much like an African, and therefore does not anticipate any particular difficulty."

Reckoning the death of Mr. E. White, who passed away at Brass before the arrival of the main party, three lives have been laid down in this endeavour for Christ and the Soudanese.

MRS. BAEYERTZ AT KIRKCALDY.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz recently concluded a ten days' mission, conducted under the auspices of the Dysart Parish Gospel Temperance Mission, Kirkcaldy. All through the mission the power of God was most manifest, and night after night the numbers who flocked to the inquiry rooms proved that his Spirit was striving with the people. The meeting for women and girls was very exceptional in this respect, the inquiry rooms being quite inadequate for the large number who waited to have the great question settled.

The afternoon meetings for Christians held in St. Brycedale Free Church Hall, and latterly in the church, were followed by great blessing; many professing Christians testified to increased interest in the work of the Lord, and also to a new and vivid light thrown on many Scriptures through the instrumentality of Mrs. Baeyertz. Great interest in religious matters has been awakened in all classes of the community.

SUMMER HOLIDAYS.

For some years it has been my privilege to gather a special "Holiday Fund" for those who sorely need change, rest, and refreshment, but are unable, out of their own means, to provide it. It has helped, not the poor alone, but many who labour among them, who give their all in the Master's blessed service, and spend themselves ungrudgingly, month after month, in ministering to the sick, the sorrowful, the sinladen for his Name's sake.

A portion is gladly used at Mildmay; some goes to Miss Mason's House of Rest; and, outside, any particular institution, individual cases, that never come before the public, are lovingly met. Besides these, the Holiday and Convalescent Homes of the London Medical Mission and a Seaside Home at Clacton have enjoyed a share. I hope to receive a supply of "holiday money" from Christian friends who know the privilege and joy of giving out a portion of what is given to them in order that weary ones may have a taste of their summer rest and pleasures. (Mrs.) E. Codner.

WORK ON THE RACECOURSE.

EPSOM RACES.

The races on Epsom Downs take place this year on May 28 to 31, but practically our operations cover a whole week. During this time about fifty men of God will be employed. As in former years, we shall be assisted by the male choir of the London City Mission, whose Gospel songs and addresses attract so many on the course and in the town. Some well-known servants of God have also promised to come down and lift up their voices in earnest testimony. Besides these, a large number of men will be stationed at various points for tract and booklet distribution.

We are not in need of extra helpers, or of tracts. With these we are well supplied. Our plea is for gifts towards the expenses of the work, which are necessarily heavy. These may be sent to Miss Alexander, 2, Waterloo-road, Epsom (who continues to provide hospitality for all the workers), or to Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

Open-air Mission, 11, Adam-street, Strand.

ASCOT WEEK.

We purpose visiting Ascot Races next month, June 18 to 21. A young prodigal rescued last year from a life of shame and now happily restored, pens thus to me recently: "I shall ever be thankful to the Almighty that I met Mr. and Mrs. ——— on Ascot Racecourse."

We should be glad to welcome any friends to help us with musical instruments, speech, or song, but cannot guarantee expenses to workers. We especially desire external aid on Wednesday and Thursday in race-week. Help has been promised from the Pastors' College, and the Salvation Army will have a contingent. I should be glad of suitable tracts, cards, or leaflets; the offer of a tent, and help towards expenses of same. A. E. Sidford, Hon. Sec.
Bracknell, Berks.

MOUNT HERMON ORPHAN HOMES.

The new report of these Homes states that the income for last year was £179 14s. 5d. less than the preceding year, owing to the loss of warm friends and the inability of others to aid as formerly. Still, as aforetime, all needs have been supplied, and for this praise is rendered. Twenty-one new girls have been received during the twelve months, and nineteen have been sent out.

Illustrations are given in the report of the pitiful needs of these little girls received. As for example:—H.W. and J.W.—Two little sisters from Scotland. Five and six years of age. Mother in service. Father was a warehouseman. Died of pneumonia. M.D. and H.D.—Eleven and twelve years of age. Deserted by father. Mother in consumption. D.S. and K.S.—Five and ten years of age. Mother left a widow with six children. Father was a carman. D.M.S.—Seven years of age. Father in a lunatic asylum. Mother in great poverty, with three other children to support. L.E.H.—Orphan, ten years of age. Father and mother both died of bronchitis. H.L.W.—Six years of age. Mother in very weak health, with three other children to support. Father was an engineer, drowned at sea. C.T.—Nine years of age. Mother living, with ten other children to support. Father was a stonemason. Died very suddenly. The superintendent, Mrs. Parry, 55, Cambridge Avenue, Kilburn, N.W., will be glad to hear from friends.

THE FACTORY HELPERS' UNION.

Lord Kinnaird presided last week over a meeting in connexion with the Factory Helpers' Union, an institution founded in 1886 for the benefit of factory girls. Miss Pollock (one of the district secretaries) spoke on the work done by the union. There were, she said, about 200,000 factory girls in London. The Union now had five clubs in London formed for the accommodation of factory girls, and there were nearly sixty clubs affiliated to the Union in all parts of England. The speaker went on to allude to the meetings and recreation provided at the clubs, such as musical drill, social meetings, the teaching of needlework, cooking-classes, temperance gatherings, and Bible-classes, in all of which the girls took great interest. Mr. A. Lafone spoke of the work in connexion with the Union at Bermondsey, and heartily eulogised the efforts put forth. It was a shame, he urged, that in a place like London such an institution as theirs should languish for support, and should be in debt, as it was, to the treasurer. The chairman explained the nature of the debt, which it appeared, amounted to £242. One or two friends, he said, had promised £40 if £200 was raised within a reasonable time, and as the committee had already received promises of £70, he hoped there would be no difficulty in getting it. Addresses were also given by Mrs. Cox and Mr. A. Garstin.

DR. BARNARDO'S HEALTH.

Dr. Barnardo writes:—"So many inquiries and kind expressions of sympathy have come to hand since the recent reference to my indisposition in The Christian, that I ask your kind permission to send a few words of reply to those of a larger circle whom I cannot reach. I am, thank God, better than I was a fortnight ago; but still far from well. Not only is all work a burden and weariness to me, but my medical advisers assure me that the more serious symptoms will return in an aggravated form unless I can get away immediately from work and responsibility, and get complete rest and quiet for a while. This I hope to do in about ten days' time.

"Meanwhile, to relieve my mind of anxiety as to my beloved work, a good friend, 'C,' offers to give at once £1000 to the general fund of the Homes if four others will each promise a similar gift before June 21, the date of the annual meeting. 'Beta' offers £50 if nine others will each give the same amount, and also a second gift of £25 if nine others will each give that sum. If these gifts were received, and the offers realised, I could go away at once with a quiet mind and a thankful heart. Responses should be marked as 'In response to C,' or 'Beta,' as the case may be."

[We are sure our many readers will unite in an earnest hope that our brother's health will be speedily restored, and we shall be glad to know that all anxiety as to finance is relieved.—Ed.]

JAFFA MEDICAL MISSION.

The hallowed work which a few devoted ladies are doing in the Holy Land finds admirable illustration in the new report of the Mission. Praise is rendered for help and blessing. It is stated that "the terrible epidemic of fever in the summer of 1893 left lasting effects upon many of our poor people, and the Medical Mission has been well attended all through, the total numbers amounting to 16,843. Miss Cresswell writes of the men's ward: 'We have had 367 men in the hospital this year, of whom the greater proportion were Moslems. These have heard the Gospel message, and we rest upon the assurance that God has given us, that 'his word shall not return unto Him void.'"

Miss Biddington writes:—"The wards for women and children are upstairs, and 289 have been admitted during the year, thus bringing our total number of in-patients up to 686, of different creeds and nationalities." The native evangelist, Abu Ibrahim, has been able to itinerate in about sixty different villages, and seventeen of these have been entirely new ground. To many places he has gone two or three times, and has always had opportunities of reading the Word of God, and speaking to the people, and as a rule they listen gladly.

Miss Newton writes from the hospital, Jaffa:—"Since this report was issued we have had the joy of seeing another young Moslem baptized by Rev. T. F. Wotten, C.M.S., and for this young convert we would earnestly ask the prayer of God's people that he may be kept steadfast in the faith, and grow in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The hon. sec. of this Mission is Mr. C. E. Newton, Mickleover, Derby.

TWO CITY MISSIONS.

The Lady Mayoress distributed last week the prizes to the children of the Fox and Knot and Hatfield-street Schools and Mission, at the building in Charterhouse-street. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. Judd, J.P. The secretary, Mr. G. B. Poole, read extracts from the report, from which it appeared that there were 300 children in the schools, and twenty officers and teachers. The junior sewing class had made 400 garments, and the attendance had averaged forty to fifty weekly. The Band of Hope had a membership of 155. The chairman expressed satisfaction that that great work, inaugurated fifty-five years ago, had continued as it was in the old time. Addresses followed by Rev. J. Stephen Barrass, Mr. John Kirk, and others.

SOUTHSEA CONVENTION.—This conference on the spiritual life is fixed for next week, May 27 to 31. In his letter of invitation, Rev. F. Baldey, the convener, says:—"Among the cheering signs of the times are an ever-deepening and Spirit-wrought sense of need in the hearts of God's people—that hungering and thirsting after righteousness which claims the promised filling; a more confident persuasion of the possibilities of the spiritual life; and a more longing expectation of the coming of the Bridegroom." The meetings will be in St. Simon's Schoolroom, Clarendon-road, and the list of speakers includes many well-known expositors and workers.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

It is proposed to organise a society for the benefit of the sixty or seventy deaf-mutes in the city of Aberdeen.

Rev. Andrew Murray, from the Cape, is expected to be one of the speakers at the Bridge of Allan Convention in June.

A Ladies' Union in Dundee looks after the interests of the working girls of the city. Its work is both preventive and remedial.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier, of Glasgow, reports the receipt of £2000 from a friend, half the amount being for the Consumptive Hospitals and the other half for the Orphan Homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Cole, from the Congo Balolo Mission, have been addressing meetings in and around Glasgow, with much acceptance. They have much that is encouraging to tell of the progress of the Gospel on the Congo, and much also to excite the prayerful sympathy of God's people at home.

The General Assemblies will meet in Edinburgh on 23rd inst. At the Free Assembly, Rev. John Watson, of Sefton Park Presbytorian Church, Liverpool, is expected to speak in connection with the report on religion and morals; and Rev. John M'Neill, who has recently returned from India and Australia, will speak to the report on foreign missions.

A Missionary Conference was held for three days —May 11 to 12—in Finnieston Free Church, Glasgow, organised by the minister (Rev. D. M. McIntyre) and his workers. Meetings were held for prayer for missions, for hearing addresses from missionaries, and for receiving the missionary boxes of members of the congregation. Quite a number of missionaries took part, including Dr. Kerr (Morocco), Dr. Torrance (Palestine), Rev. Mr. McIver (China) and Mrs. McIver, Mr. Fanstone (Brazil), and others. Sermons were preached on Sunday by Rev. Professor Lindsay, D.D., Convener of the Foreign Missions Committee of the Free Church of Scotland, and by Rev. Mr. Small, of Poona. The attendance at the various services were very good, and a deep and genuine interest was manifested by the congregation and friends in the city.

Every summer large numbers of tourists pass through Oban, "The Charing Cross of the Highlands," and churches usually arrange for special pulpit supply during the season, when ministers will frequently have, in an average congregation, representatives from all the English-speaking countries in the world. This year Rev. D. D. Robertson, of the Argyle Square Free Church, has arranged with Rev. John McNeill to occupy his pulpit during July, and with Dr. R. M. Thornton, of Camden-road Presbyterian Church, London, for the month of August and part of September. The Argyle Square Free Church is a well-known centre of Evangelical life and work. It has a well-equipped Sabbath School, Open-air, and Mission Hall evangelistic services, at which the assistance of visitors is always welcomed. Last season Dr. John G. Paton, of the New Hebrides Mission, Dr. Grattan Guinness, Mr. Polhill-Turner, of C.I.M., Mr. Whytock, of the Congo Balolo Mission, Mr. James E. Mathieson, of London, and other well-known speakers, took part in the evangelistic work of the congregation. The midweek service on Wednesday evenings is a recognised rendezvous of Evangelicals, and it also is much helped by the strangers who frequently assist.

IRISH NOTES.

The staff of the Dublin University Mission to Chota Nagpore now consists of six graduates of the university, of whom two are fully qualified medical men.

Five members of the Cork Y.W.C.A. are preparing for foreign mission work, while Miss Chadwick, daughter of the Dean of Armagh, left last week for mission work in Uganda.

The ten districts into which Ireland is divided Methodistically have held their annual assemblies, and as the result it appears that for the year there has been a net gain of 239 in the membership of the denomination.

HOMES FOR AGED BLIND.—Will you permit us to say a word on behalf of our large family of eighty-two Christian blind men and women, of whom twenty-four are between 80 and 96 years of age? We are intensely anxious to close our financial year on the 27th inst. free of debt. This requires £50. We trust that the generous response so often and kindly given by the readers of The Christian will not fail us in this emergency. The long and severe winter has been exceptionally trying to our aged and suffering charge: it has taxed to the utmost our resources. Our fifteenth annual meeting will be held in our Jubilee Hall here on May 30.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Rev. E. J. Kennedy preached on the 16th inst., at the Parish Church, Kingston-on-Thames, on behalf of the local branch.

A very earnest and aggressive spirit is being manifested by the Associations in several of the New York City Medical Colleges.

Rev. David Russell, of Pietermaritzburg, lately held a mission in connection with the Cape Town Association. It was a time of blessing to many, and will long be remembered with gratitude.

The Youths' Department of the Bristol Association, which is very vigorously worked, reports that the result of each month's endeavour has helped to spell the word "success," and to arouse hope and encouragement for the future.

The report of the Worcester Y.M.C.A., which was read at a conversazione recently held in the Association rooms, showed that the religious work of the Association had been well maintained, but there was room for more workers earnest for the welfare of young men.

A meeting of the Metropolitan Council was held last week at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. Among the matters considered by the council were the acquisition of new premises by the Clapham Junction Association, and a report concerning the west branch (Savile-row), which is being reorganised, and is likely shortly to take other premises in a central position in the West-end.

The Worcester Association reports that the religious work has been well maintained. The attendance at the Bible class had been large, the total number during the year being 1689. The common lodging houses in Dolday and other places are visited, and a large amount of evangelistic work done. The number of associates who joined during the past year was forty-one, and the total membership is now 212.

The revival inaugurated in Syracuse University by the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations stirred the entire student body as it was never before stirred in spiritual things. The good accomplished was not only in the number of conversions, but also in the winning back to a more consistent and godly life of scores of nominal Christians, the driving out of rivalries and factions, and the elevation of the standard of Christian life.

THE Y.W.C.A.

At the monthly Conference of Secretaries and Workers at the Morley Halls on Thursday last Viscountess Portman presided and gave an address, and discussion followed on the best way of utilising the efforts of Y.W.C.A. members, especially in smaller branches.

A series of Bible-readings is being given by Mrs. Tottenham and Miss M. Pollock at Princess House, 106 and 108, Brompton-road, on Thursday afternoons at 3.15. Prayer is asked that the meetings may be in the power of the Holy Ghost, and may be times of preparation for the coming of the Lord.

At the second annual meeting of the Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton branch, held in the Wesleyan Schoolroom, Rev. F. T. Snow, of St. Peter's, Islington, presided, and addresses were given by Miss L. A. Barter and Dr. F. Montague Miller. The Spirit of God was present in convicting power, and several received definite blessing.

A swimming class in connection with the St. John's Wood Institute, 46, Wellington-road, is very popular. The Hampstead swimming baths have been secured exclusively for members of the Institute every Tuesday evening during the summer from 8 to 9 o'clock, and instruction is given weekly. The gymnastic, cookery, and other evening classes have been attended with encouraging success.

The third annual meeting of the Weybridge Y.W.C.A. was held on the 9th inst. The chair was taken by Captain A. B. Hawes. An address was given by Rev. J. Wilkinson. Miss Barter addressed the young women afterwards, earnestly pressing the necessity of living Christlike lives. This branch has greatly revived of late, God working by his Spirit and through the labours and care, spiritual and otherwise, of Mrs. Shaw, of Heatherdene, Weybridge.

There is deep cause for praise to our God for the steady and continuous progress of the work at Princess House, Brompton-road, since the departure of Miss Bethune and Miss Collins to Calcutta. There has been no break in the attendance at the different meetings. There has been a marked reaping time too, after the faithful sowing of the past. The committee express thankfulness to God for sending to them Miss Pacey immediately on the departure of Miss Bethune and Miss Collins, to fill the vacant post of lady superintendent, and carry on the work.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The Burnt Ash C.E. Society has held its second annual meeting, Mr. W. J. Atkins presiding.

At the first anniversary of the Society connected with Doddridge, St. James' End, Northampton, upwards of 200 assembled.

In Spencer, Io., there is a deep spiritual sentiment among the Endeavourers, which is manifesting itself in aggressive work on behalf of the unsaved.

The Society at Parson's Hill Baptist Church, Woolwich, held the other day its fourth anniversary. Rev. J. Wilson presided, and Revs. W. F. Edgerton and J. T. Castle gave addresses. The Society now numbers 171.

Rev. W. J. Peck, M.D., says that Christian Endeavour is alive and prospering in the land of the Pharaohs. He was surprised and delighted upon reaching Cairo to discover what he calls a model society of Christian Endeavour.

Dr. Clark, president of the United Society, has started to attend a series of Christian Endeavour Conventions on or near the Pacific coast. His first stop was in Omaha, where he spent Sunday, May 5. Then he pushed on directly to Wieser, Id., to attend the Idaho State Convention. Later he intends visiting Oregon, British Columbia, Washington Territory, California, and Colorado.

The great National Convention of the British Endeavourers is approaching, and the sixty-four societies in the Birmingham district are resolved to leave no stone unturned to make the great gatherings successful. Rev. J. B. Morgan is to preach the Convention sermon on Whit-Sunday afternoon. Revs. E. R. Hassé and W. H. Towers will conduct the "consecration services." One of the new features to be introduced will be "pastors' testimonies." The Rev. G. R. Wedgwood, of Dublin, is to preside over the session, of which the late Dr. Dale had promised to be president. There are now over 2600 registered C.E. societies in Great Britain.

HARLEY HOUSE, BOW.

Dr. Harry Guinness says in an "occasional letter":—My mother's health has wonderfully stood the test of the bitter cold of a Derbyshire winter, and we thank God that she is bright and well. An article which she dictated appears in the current issue of Regions Beyond, and shows the lively interest which she still takes in the various movements affecting the dark Continent.

We are already bidding adieu to six of our students and deaconesses, who are leaving us for distant spheres of labour. Two are sailing for work in Peru, two for Brazil, and two for Congoland. All of these will be requiring financial help towards their passage and outfit. Miss Wise, who is engaged to be married to Mr. Robert Stark, goes to a very needy sphere—interior Peru—and, we believe, brings to her life-work exceptionally good qualifications. If, as someone says, "good health, a loving, Christ-filled heart, and an ordinary education" are a foreign missionary's leading requisites, she is well equipped. Mr. Antonio Marques, a Brazilian brother, who has been for three sessions in the college, returns in a few days (D.V.) to his own country, where an open door awaits him in one of the Christian churches of Rio de Janeiro. One of our Cliff brethren is also leaving for work amongst the sailors in the magnificent harbour of Rio de Janeiro.

We are glad that two new workers are leaving for the Congo. The s.s. Pioneer was being lengthened when Miss Lanceley left Bonginda, and the skilled help of Mr. Munro was highly appreciated in this connection. Miss Lanceley, who has suffered from an attack of beri-beri, a strange tropical malady of special interest to the medical profession, is very much better. She has made marked progress with the language, and is deeply encouraged by the evidence of widespread blessing. We have to reinforce the transport department by sending out a new helper to Matadi to replace Mr. Wooding, whose health has been much tried of late, and who ought to have a change.

In addition to the ordinary channels of expenditure connected with the four training homes in London and Derbyshire, we have been involved quite unexpectedly in the unwelcome task of relaying the entire Harley College system of drainage. The latter was discovered to be unsafe and inefficient, and the district-inspector compelled us to modernise the whole of these unseen but important arrangements. The improvement will be immense, and the work is being done so thoroughly as to make it improbable that it will ever need renewing while the College stands. The general fund of the Institute is sorely taxed just now. We are requiring £1300, apart altogether from Congo and passage and outfit necessities. The gifts of our friends have often cheered our hearts when the financial burden of this work was peculiarly pressing, and we are asking the Lord that such may be the case at this time.

CRÈCHE, INFANT INFIRMARY, & ORPHAN HOME,
12, 14, & 16, Stepney Causeway, Commercial Rd., E.

Convalescent Home, The Limes, Feltham.

The Crèche is situated in a densely populated part of East London, and for 24 years has helped thousands of poor mothers, babies, and children.

Mrs. Hilton regrets to announce a serious decrease of income, and unless speedy help be given the number of children in the Home will have to be considerably reduced.

All communications should be addressed to Mrs. Hilton, Shore House, Shore-road, South Hackney.

The 24th Anniversary of the Crèche was celebrated February 24th.

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION.

EST. 1871.] KING'S CROSS, W.C. [EST. 1871

Owing to the decease of many of our old supporters, we find it a difficult task to get new subscribers for this much-needed work amongst cabmen. Only those who have to do with these men know the difficulties in getting them under the sound of the Gospel. Yet hundreds have been brought to the Saviour. We implore Christian friends to help us, that the work may not flag. Particulars of the mission and its agencies may be had of the founder, JOHN DUPEE, 165, Hemingford Road, Barnsbury, N.

CHRISTIAN CYCLISTS.—A few Christian young men have banded themselves together for the purpose of carrying the Gospel into the villages around Manchester by riding out on bicycles on Saturday afternoons, and holding open-air meetings. The first run of the season was on Saturday week, when a party of nine rode to Knutsford. About a hundred people gathered to listen to the Gospel message, and invitations were afterwards given to come again.

COFFEE TAVERN ASSOCIATION.—The annual Conference of this Association was held in Scarborough on Monday. Mr. Joshua Rowntree, the new president, thanked the Conference for his cordial reception, and that they were confronted by the philanthropic side of the movement, and also its business aspect. So far from there being any incompatibility between the two, they were both absolutely necessary for its successful working. He ventured to think that amongst the many agencies which had been already resorted to, and found to be helpful and successful, this great movement was one of the most helpful. Useful papers followed on various practical temperance subjects.

TO METAMORPHOSE FAT PERSONS.

We were reading in the Penny Illustrated Paper how to reduce obesity, wherein it says in that very excellent publication: "The corpulent will be glad to learn how to lose two stone in about a month with benefit to health, strength, and muscle, by a comparatively new system. It is a singular fact that the patient, returning quickly to a healthy state, with increased activity of brain, digestive, and other organs, naturally requires more food than hitherto; yet, notwithstanding this, he absolutely loses in weight one to two pounds daily, as the weighing-machine will prove. The book, 'Corpulency, and the Cure,' (256 pages), containing the 'recipe' can be had gratis from Mr. F. C. Russell, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C., by sending cost of postage, 4d." We had the curiosity to send to this specialist, and found to our surprise that he had discovered a simple herbal remedy, most pleasant to the taste, which entirely disposed of the necessity of starving oneself if he wished to be rid of all superfluous matter. An interesting point which goes to prove that the almost magical compound is beyond doubt harmless is that in prescribing it in a tentative way to lean persons, or rather to those who carry no superfluity of fat beyond that which is required as fuel for Nature's furnace, the medicine is absolutely inoperative, attacking only that unhealthy, disease-creating waste accumulation which is the burden of the fat creature's existence. In many cases where people take decoctions reputed to be new medical discoveries to cure some specific disease, they may recover by the action of the medicine, or Nature may have effected her own cure. In the case of corpulency, if a simple remedy undertakes to reduce a person, say 7 lb. in a week, all that one has to do is to get weighed, and thus prove it conclusively. So it is with Mr. Russell's compound, but he asks you to prove it in twenty-four hours only.

The following is an extract from Leeds Times, December 1 1894.

CURIOUS EXPERIMENTS IN CORPULENCY.

A Mr. Russell, author and specialist in obesity, has experimentally tried the effect of administering large doses, to moderate lean persons, of his well-known herbal discovery, which is so marvellously effectual in reducing superfluous fat, with the result that there is not the slightest alteration or diminution of weight recorded, thereby proving conclusively to our minds that it is only the unhealthy adipose waste tissue which is destroyed, for after dispensing a few fluid ounces of his remarkable vegetable compounds he succeeds in destroying the diseased fatty mass at the rate of from 2 lb. to even 12 lb. in seven days. There can be no ambiguity about it, for any person can test this for themselves by standing upon a weighing machine. He explains that all lean persons carry a certain amount of fat necessary for the natural production of heat in the body, but Nature has only stored up her requisite stock in the healthy system, which she most zealously guards, and thus declines to part with an ounce to the persuasions of Mr. Russell's vegetable tonic, however immoderate the dose may be, which testifies abundantly to the fact that it is only a chemical solvent of insalubrious adipose tissue. There is no doubt that the inventor of the composition must have possessed a profound vegetal knowledge in selecting this simple but peculiar combination.

Those who resort to the pernicious products of the mineral kingdom, or even the deleterious sections of the vegetable world, doubtless can decoct something powerful but injurious in its action; such, however, require no laudatory commendation; but Mr. Russell (we herewith append his address: Woburn House, 27, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C., the author of "Corpulency, and the Cure," 256 pages, price 4d. stamps), makes no secret of the simplicity of his treatment, and avers that the decoction can be drunk as a refreshing summer drink, pleasant to the palate, yet having sufficient effect, although perfectly harmless, to remove generally 2 lb. or more in twenty-four hours. We think stout persons would do well to send for his book, which can be obtained through booksellers, or at the address given above.

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.
Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.
Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec.
14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W. c4887a

DESPAIRING AND DESTITUTE.—Hundreds of thoroughly reclaimable young men might be permanently benefited by the numerous Labour Homes and Emigration Training Farms of the Church Army if funds permitted. Nearly one million meals served yearly, irrespective of creed, with labour test and Christian sympathy. Donors of 5s. and upwards supplied free with tickets for giving to beggars. £4000 pressingly required for food, clothing, and maintenance.—Remit, Rev. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec., Headquarters, 180, Edgware-road, London, W. c5312

BRITISH AND FOREIGN EVANGELICAL TRACT SOCIETY and Prayer Union, (Established 1882). President, Pastor Frank H. White; vice-presidents, Pastor Archibald G. Brown, Mr. Finlay Gibson, Rev. John D. Kilburn, Mr. W. Luff, and Rev. F. B. Meyer.) The committee, desiring to extend their operations to include those towns and villages where no regular tract distribution is carried on, and to increase such effort in London, and wherever the existing agency is inadequate, cordially invite Christian people who are drawn to such work to become members and partake in a sustained, prayerful, and associated effort to spread the light of testimony to a crucified and risen Saviour. Members are supplied monthly with assorted parcels of carefully chosen Gospel tracts in quantity as required, for personal distribution only, and contribute to the funds by monthly freewill offerings, according to ability.—Secretary, S. E. ROBERTS, 26, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. c5165

Notes and Comments.

THE health of our dear friend Dr. Barnardo is, we are sorry to say, in a very delicate condition, rendering immediate change and prolonged rest essential to his recovery. We very earnestly hope that his many friends will give his institutions generous and immediate help, so that he may go without anxiety as to the sustentation of the large and loved family of rescued boys and girls.

Parcels of back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN can be obtained gratuitously, on application to our publishers, for careful and judicious distribution. At this season of the year, when evangelists, members of the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s, and other Christian workers are entering upon their summer campaign in the towns and villages of our country, we feel sure that many will be glad to co-operate with us in making still wider our circle of readers.

The expenses connected with the Thanksgiving meetings on May 1 were necessarily heavy, although the Great Assembly Hall was generously placed at the disposal of the conveners by Mr. Charrington without any charge whatever. But in order to make the meetings widely known a considerable amount was expended for printing and postage. The collections at the meetings amounted to £15. A few friends have contributed £16, leaving a deficiency of £29, towards which we feel sure there are many who would like to contribute.

It is proposed to hold a meeting on Thursday, May 30, at Bloomsbury Chapel, representative of all the churches, to sympathise with the persecuted Armenians and to protest against the misrule of the Turkish Government. A deputation from the Anglo-Armenian Association will be present, accompanied by refugees who escaped the massacre of Ghellygazan. The chair will be taken at eight o'clock by Rev. A. Connell, of Regent-square Church.

With reference to the letter of Mr. A. B. Fisher in our last week's issue, asking for Bibles for Uganda, Rev. John Sharp, secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, writes :—

If there has been any break in the supply of Luganda Scriptures reaching the interior, it has never been due to the slightest hesitation or neglect on the part of the Bible Society, which has sent in just over two years, 51,800 books, 12,500 of them New Testaments, and the remainder Scripture portions. Luganda Bibles there are yet none. Swahili Bibles have been sent out as far as was practicable, but in Uganda we still wait for translations of the greater part of the Old Testament, as well as for corrections for our New Testament. Of course until every "man, woman, and child," can read, it would be premature to send out "Bibles" for them all.

The contradictions of men who are working for the same end are often very puzzling. Here we have the brewers and publicans using their utmost endeavours to wreck the Local Veto Bill, because it would be so injurious to the trade; but injury to the trade means that less drink would be used. Lord Salisbury, however, does not much believe in Local Veto, and earnestly hopes it will not pass, "because it would be certainly followed by a terrible outbreak of drunkenness throughout the land." He evidently thinks that more drink would be used. We rather believe the brewers and publicans; they know their trade.

Mr. J. H. Raper made a statement the other day which casts grave discredit upon the oft-repeated assertion that drunkenness has practically ceased from among the upper and well-to-do classes of this country. He said :—

In all his sixty-two years' experience he had never met with such appalling instances of drunkenness among men and women of the upper and middle classes as during the last three years. In that time there had passed through a Home in the West-end representatives of both Houses of Parliament, and ladies holding the highest social position.

A moment's reflection will verify the statement; for where do the broken-down men and women come from in our workhouses and asylums but from the upper grades of society? A friend pointed out to us within this last week a district in the North of England where several neighbouring estates had passed out of the possession of families entirely through the owners indulging in drink. The same sad tale is told everywhere. But then these temporal disasters are not to be compared with the moral disasters which they succeed and declare.

The shameful story of foul and secret corruption which fitly ended at the Old Bailey last Saturday in a sentence of imprisonment with hard labour, carries a lesson which we trust will be deeply pondered by the decadent youth of this generation. We are glad to find that lesson being powerfully enforced by some of the secular press. The Daily Telegraph, which has not hesitated to sneer in times past at the moral scruples of the British matron, speaks out, in its issue of Monday, in tones of wise and welcome protest against the pernicious doctrine that art, as such, has no necessary connection with the fundamental principles of morality. Says our contemporary :—

Art, as existing solely in and for itself, art as separated from life, art as independent of moral standards, art as a cloistered thing apart dwelling in a godless temple, which we can only enter by divesting ourselves of all that has hitherto guided and civilised and elevated us, all that up till now kept us clothed and in our right minds—these are the primal errors which have to be detected and disavowed and spurned, before our literary and artistic sanity can return. And if such a reaction towards simpler ideas be called Philistinism, then, let us all be Philistines, for fear of national contamination and decay.

These words, we repeat, are well and wisely spoken; and if they are heeded by all in danger of drifting apart from solid anchorage into the open sea of unprincipled licence, out of the seeming evil of the recent trial will come positive good. We quote again from The Telegraph :—

Young men at the Universities, clever sixth form boys at public schools, silly women who lend an ear to any chatter which is petulant and vivacious, novelists who have sought to imitate the style of paradox and unreality, poets who have lisped the language of nerveless and effeminate libertinage—these are the persons who should ponder with themselves the doctrines and the career of the man who has now to undergo the righteous sentence of the law.

All that has happened is but a fresh illustration of the saying, "The mills of God grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small"; and of that still more authoritative dictum, "God is not mocked....He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

We have quoted almost in full from the British Weekly an article on "The Style of a Field Preacher." But surely the writer had in his mind the Gospel preacher under the roof of a building no less than under the blue of the heavens. Field preachers are for the most part what are, very unscripturally and misleadingly, called "laymen." This admirable sketch of a preacher, field or otherwise, might with excellent effect be written large upon the wall of every Theological College and Divinity Hall. For, truth to tell, they do not necessarily or invariably produce preachers or pastors of this Scriptural and normal type. And it would be well to keep before the students a true ideal.

When a man has spent several years in training for the ministry, it is natural that he should magnify his office. But is there not a danger lest he should come to regard the people as made for him rather than he for the people? and that his writing, and preaching, and general attitude should not always exemplify "the style of a field preacher," that is to say, of a Gospel preacher?

It has been said that Samuel founded the schools of the prophets. But it is nowhere so stated in the inspired Record. When God wanted a prophet in the dark days of Ahab and Jezebel, He trained and educated Elijah the Tishbite in the mountains of Gilead, as He afterwards called Elisha from the plough. A study of the very varied antecedents of the Judges, when "there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes"; of the seers and prophets during the Kingdom and the Captivity; of the Redeemer, concerning whom the teachers of Israel asked, "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" and of his Galilean disciples, whom they regarded as unlearned and ignorant men, is as full of instruction as of interest.

The East is the quarter of the world over which troubled clouds hang to-day. England has her little wars in India and her permanent anxiety in Egypt. France is at war with Madagascar, and is finding Madagascar fever her worst foe. The Sultan of Turkey is evading as far as he can the demand for reform in Armenia. Russia is pressing Japan in a way which may possibly throw China and Japan into an alliance to hold the East for the people who live there. Altogether things are strained enough to make thoughtful men anxious. Japan has certainly made Western influence more apparent in the East, if she has not called it into existence. Yet just where Western nations have too often acted with strange recklessness they will now have to walk warily.

The character sketch in the Review of Reviews for this month is Li Hung Chang; it is from the pen of an American, John Russell Young, who has had long and intimate acquaintance with the great Chinaman whom General Grant regarded as the equal of Bismarck, Beaconsfield, and Gambetta. Some of this notable man's sayings and purposes are full of interest. The inability of the ordinary Chinaman to distinguish between the missionary and the soldier was his also. "He would insist upon associating the Gospel with the sword, and see in the devoted persons who stood on the highways and preached Christ, the men who had battered down the Taku forts and forced opium upon China. . . . The Viceroy's special grievance was opium. This was the curse of China. . . . It had been forced upon them so that out of its revenues England might govern India." . . . As for the Chinese growth of opium, his intention was to encourage it until the Indian supply was driven out. Then a decree from the Throne would destroy opium in China and turn every poppy field over to rice or wheat." We can easily understand the policy, although we cannot agree with it, and in this matter, as in the late war with Japan, the able Viceroy may be mistaken; things will probably take another course. What would the Opium Commission have done with such a witness?

The ordinary rule of the Turk over Christians is a thing but little understood; the ferocious outbursts such as the Bulgarian and Armenian atrocities are only the index to a daily oppression which must make life almost unendurable. Christians have to pay additional taxes, one of which is the "hospitality tax," which is thus described by Canon MacColl in his "England's Responsibility towards Armenia":—

Every Christian householder who is a subject of the Sultan is bound by law to provide three days' gratuitous hospitality to every Mohammedan official or traveller who may ask for it, from the Pasha to the beggar. The wretched Christian is thus hardly ever free from these unwelcome guests, who invariably choose the best rooms and food in the house, treating the householder and his family as their slaves. . . . The women of the family are usually included among the luxuries required by this rite of compulsory hospitality.

The reports of our consuls in Armenia leave no room for doubt on the subject.

A correspondent of The Guardian sends an interesting account of the Samaritan Passover, as he saw it observed on Mount Gerizim. Perhaps the most important portion is the following, which refers to what took place while the roasting of the lambs was proceeding:—

Another pause ensued of two hours or more, during a good part of which we held an animated, but desultory, theological discussion with the high priest in his tent. The Samaritans apparently do look for a Messiah, but they only look on him as one who shall restore the law of Moses in its full integrity, and to the question, "When do you expect Him?" the high priest made the somewhat curious reply, "When all the world are unbelievers." They regard the Passover almost entirely as a memorial rite, and have at best very dim and hazy notions of any atoning efficacy in the blood-shedding. At the time of the sacrifice some of the tents were certainly marked with the blood, but I did not observe that this was done with all, or carefully on either side and above the tent door: they justify the taking off the shoulder by saying that no bone is broken—it is but removed. Whilst we were arguing, others were gathered round the open pit chanting and gradually burning hair and entrails and the priest's portion.

There is something deeply pathetic in men who live in the land where the Saviour lived and died and rose again still looking for his appearing.

Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, brought out a point at the Peace Society meeting which cannot fail to strike all who observe the effect of the Gospel upon new minds; only when a formal Christianity has begun to rule, can men make light of one of the plainest precepts of the Gospel—to live in peace.

Mr. Chalmers drew a striking contrast between the effect of the preaching of the Gospel on savage and on civilised nations. In this country, for example, there were something like 60,000 preachers of the Gospel, yet millions were spent in the maintenance of the army and navy; whereas among savage peoples, where there were only a few widely-separated preachers, the tendency of the teaching was to stop war, even among cannibal tribes. In confirmation of the truth of the contrast he had drawn he cited cases that had occurred among his beloved New Guineans. His story of the eagerness with which some native Christians who, when the Franco-Prussian war began, urged him to send their new teacher to France that he might "tell the people there how wicked it was to fight" instead of staying with them, made a great impression upon the meeting, and was received with every sign of appreciation.

Our modern refinements of the Gospel ought more properly to be called adaptations to our imperfections and sins.

The Gospel distinguishes between the true riches and deceitful mammon, and sets up a standard of value which commends itself to reason as well as expresses spiritual reality. This truth is forcibly brought out in an article on "The Social Problem" in the May issue of The Homiletic Review. We extract some sentences:—

People pay up to the level of their appreciation; hence what is popular commands most money. But how about that which transcends their appreciation? To them it is worthless. What is highest in intellect is for the few whose estimate is superior to economic values...Has not the time come to turn back to the ideals, to give economics their proper place, and for that reason make them subordinate to the intellectual, the moral, and the spiritual interests which give them their true value? Men are groaning because made so exclusively beasts of burden, weighed down with crushing loads of material things.

If this need is suggested by social reasoning, it is assuredly demanded by Christian sense and solicitude. What are meat and raiment in comparison with life? The Sermon on the Mount provides the desiderated ideals, and these rebuke the grovelling trend which political economy and social ethics are tardily recognising as an enslaving evil.

The enthusiasm, not to say fanaticism, of Christians is frequently animadverted upon in condemnatory terms; they accept the reproach as an honour. Enthusiasm is not all with them, however, as anyone can see who takes a look into the City of London, where men make money, or into schools of art, where students follow their bent. Mr. Burmester, the famous violinist, makes a remarkable confession to an interviewer from the Westminster Gazette:—

He held up the worn, scarred forefinger of his left hand, and pointed to certain curious seams still visible in the skin. "I worked in those days," he explained, "to such an extent that I penetrated nearly to the nerves, so that they told me there was nothing for it, if I was to save the finger, but to have the nerves extracted. For that purpose the incisions were made—when I learnt for the first time that after the operation I should have no further feeling in the forefinger. That decided me. The operation was abandoned, and I recovered ultimately without the surgeon's assistance. At other times I worked for weeks with my left hand in a padded glove, when the condition of my fingers was such as to render practice impossible in any other way."

The difference lies in the object and in the motive. So Paul speaks of the self-control of the ancient athletes. "They do it to win a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible."

Dr. Forsyth says in his thoughtful sketch of Dr. Dale, that Dr. Dale once remarked to him, "Christ has taken the responsibility of my sins." Dr. Forsyth adds, "It was a bold word, and a vital for him, and it contains much more than a chapter of a book." Dr. Dale's declaration is very nearly the language of Scripture, and is adopted by faith in the case of every soul who submits to Christ. The very rest into which faith enters is that which comes through accepting the assurance that "the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all," that "He was wounded for our transgressions," and that "the chastisement of our peace was upon Him." Truly it is a bold word and a vital, but it is the universal language of faith. Sinners need to be pressed into this hiding-place, this "Rock of ages" cleft for them.

Not before time, a note of warning and rebuke is given in a contemporary with regard to the way in which some writers use "the name of the Almighty in sentences which have partly to depend on this sad trick to add force to their already coarse nature." Titles are given to novels which are frequently phrases taken from Scripture, some of them with the most tender associations. Consequently we frequently hear young people who indulge in novel reading permeate their conversation with most flippant uses of sacred terms. The practice is most reprehensible alike in book and speech.

We are sometimes very much impressed with the wisdom of the sayings of shrewd observers of life, and think, if we could only remember and act upon them, that they would save us from serious mistakes. Then the thought recurs to us, "What has the Bible to say on these things? Is it dumb? Or does it speak of them under other forms and in a different way?" For example, in the Journal of Education some of the late Professor Jowett's sayings are given, one of which was, "Never listen to a man when he abuses his relations. He will make it up with them, and then he will hate you for knowing that he abused them." Very likely; the observation of human nature is keen. But how does Scripture deal with it? Many a proverb of Solomon bears upon tale-bearing: "Speak evil of no man" comes very near to "hear evil of no man." But, above all, the spirit of the Gospel, which is that of love to man as well as to God, teaches charity towards all. No specific instruction is given in the Gospel on many points, because its spirit touches all.

Charles Austin said that if he had the conviction of immortality he could believe all the rest of the Bible. One thing carries another. We have never been able to see wherein lay the difficulty of miracles, provided a man did believe in the power of God. After creation all other things appear easy enough, no matter what theory of creation be held. If God created all things by the word of his power, any rearrangement of their order, or alteration of their condition, cannot be beyond Him.

About five-and-thirty years ago the idea of "individual responsibility" bid fair to supplant the régime of committees, and boards, and councils. But human nature does not originate in committees; it also exists in the individual; and while boards are hard to penetrate and heavy to move, individual directors have a tendency to become dictators.

THE UNVEILING.—21.

"MY TWO WITNESSES."—I.

"Ye are my witnesses," said Jehovah to Israel. "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth," said the risen Jesus to his disciples. "Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings," said the Strong Angel, the glorified Son of God, when He spake in vision to his servant John, after he had eaten and filled his inward being with Arnion's biblaridion—the Little Lamb's little book. "I will endow my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three-score days, clothed in sackcloth," said the same Jesus in the succeeding vision. Jehovah's witnesses, under the former Covenant, were his people Israel; the witnesses of Jehovah-Jesus, now risen and glorified, are his called and chosen and faithful servants, who serve Him and see his face.

Ezekiel in his vision (xl.) measured a material temple; John in this vision is called to measure the spiritual temple; for "even before Jerusalem was destroyed, even while the material temple was still standing, the name of the temple of God had been transferred from the building on Mount Zion to the living community of believing men. (See Eph. ii. 19-21, 1 Cor. iii. 17). Now to measure this temple is to mark out its extent; to ascertain how much is temple; what are the dimensions, what the limits, of that which is really holy" (Dean Vaughan).

Just as the literal Jerusalem was to be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled (Luke xxi. 24), so the court that is without the temple is given to the Gentiles, and they shall trample on the holy city forty-two months. Therefore the outer court is to be cast out of the measuring, to be taken no account of, somewhat as in the previous chapter the utterances of the seven thunders were to be left unrecorded.

The distinction between the temple and the court outside is like the difference between Israel and the great mixed multitude; between the circumcision and the concision; between the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all, and those who have the form of godliness but deny the power thereof; between those to whom it is given not only to believe on Him but also to suffer for his sake, and those whose god is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.

"When we translate the temple into its Christian sense; when we understand by Jerusalem the city of the living God, and by the Jewish people the Israel of God; we must also regard the Gentiles here spoken of, not in the first meaning of the term, as nations that belong not to the natural Israel, but rather to those who are not of the true seed of Abraham, not men of faith, not Christians indeed; and we shall see in the prediction here given the announcement of a desecration of that body which ought to be, and by profession is, all holy, by the admixture of many who belong not in heart and life to it" (Dean Vaughan).

In a word, the vision means that his saints who have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice, who, as confessed sinners, have found peace by the blood of the cross, and who worship the Father in spirit and in truth, are known of Him, while to those without He says: "I know you not whence ye are: depart from Me all ye that work iniquity."

The Gentiles tread down the holy city forty-two months; the witnesses prophesy 1260 days. The two periods are the same, but the form in which they are stated differs. The people of God are of the day, they live by the day, they pray by the day, "Give us this day our daily bread," to them sufficient to the day is the evil thereof. But the times, during which the Gentiles are thus permitted to trample the holy city, are $7 \times 6 = 42$ months.

Seven is the number of perfection in the first creation; eight is the number of perfection in the new creation, the resurrection number, the first day of the new week, the day when Jesus rose from the dead. Contrast with this the 7 times 6, a futile, incomplete, interrupted number, leading only to disaster and retribution.

As 7 is God's number of completeness in the first creation, and as 8 is his resurrection number in the new creation, beyond the 7 of the old, so 6 is man's number, short of seven, imperfect, incomplete, a working week without a Sabbath, labour without rest. Forty-two, 7 times 6, is the fulness of labour, of unrest, of incompleteness; it was the number of stations during the thirty and eight years of wandering, when their carcases fell in the wilderness. Just as $3\frac{1}{2}$, the half of seven, is a broken number, so this 42 shows that the trampling down of the holy city is not permitted to be continued to the bitter end. "For the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

Without questioning the chronological value of the 42 months, the 1260 days, or the time, times and a half, in years or days, these terms, which all relate to the same period, are certainly symbolic expressions denoting the interval of sackcloth testimony between the resurrection and the return of their Lord. The witnesses show the Lord's death till He come.

'Tis all their business here below
To cry, Behold the Lamb.

The witnesses were two—the smallest number compatible with a valid testimony. There is an evident allusion also to the union and mutual helpfulness expressed by the number two:—

Two are better than one, because they have a good reward for their labour; for if they fall the one will lift up his fellow; but woe to him that is alone when he falleth, for he hath not another to help him up. Again, if two lie together then they have warmth; but how can one be warm alone? And if one prevail against him that is alone, two shall withstand him (Eccl. iv. 9-12, R.V.).

Moses and Aaron, Gideon and Phurah, Jonathan and his armour-bearer, the seventy whom the Lord sent out two and two into every place whither He Himself would come, Paul and his companion Barnabas, or Silas or Timothy or Luke, are all illustrations of this wise and gracious rule. Much might be said of this in relation to missionary enterprise.

The condition of their endowment is that they be clothed in sackcloth, the symbol of humiliation, of separation, of isolation. This has always characterised the faithful witnesses of Christ. They are not of the world even as He is not of the world. They bear his reproach. They are a spectacle unto the world and to angels and to men, the offscouring of all things for Christ's sake. "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in their mortal flesh." Their home is not on earth but in heaven. The sackcloth here is changed for the white robe there, whether they lie under the altar or stand before the throne. And the fine linen, clean and white, is the righteousness of the saints.

"Our preachers must be men of culture," say the churches. "I will give unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy, clothed in sackcloth," is the Divine reply: and "he that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." The Lord says to all his people, "Ye are my witnesses." The two witnesses seen by John are identical with the two anointed ones seen by Zechariah (iv.). For, in evident reference to the vision of the former seer, the Revealer says to John, "These are the two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth." Who, then, were these two olive-trees—sons of oil—anointed ones—standing by the Lord of the whole earth? (Zech. iv.) "To wit, Zerubbabel and Joshua, the anointed ruler and the anointed priest, the servants and ministers of the Lord of the whole earth," "channels of grace and concentrations of light." First, these representative men were surely types of God's Anointed King and Priest, our Lord Jesus Christ. But He has made us kings and priests unto his God and Father, and we his people are his witnesses. If they will be witnesses, they shall have power—Holy Spirit power; and they shall prophesy clothed in sackcloth.

"The cloth" has become a passport into the world's "society." But this is not the cloth of Christ's prescribing. Sackcloth is for his witnesses, and just so far as they are faithful to prophesy in sackcloth, God is faithful to give them power. Such as have truly eaten and digested the little book, who have gone forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach, they are endowed with the power of the Holy Ghost. For the cloth which is the token of the true apostolical succession is sackcloth; and the men, dust-stained and travel-weary, who go into Heathendom, whether British or foreign, and witness until the men of the earth exclaim, "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also," are the lineal descendants of Paul and Silas, of Zerubbabel and Joshua. Yea, all the remnant of the Church's seed, who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus—so that the carnal professors within the God-forsaken camp and city (Exod. xxxiii. 7; Mic. iii. 10-12) complain, "Ye mean to bring this Man's blood upon us,"—are olive-trees and candlesticks; God's kings and priests; the witnesses of Christ.

If any one desires to hurt them he must be killed by the fire which proceeds out of their mouth. The fire is the word of the Lord which constitutes their testimony, for "is not my word like as a fire?" (Jer. v. 14; xx. 9; xxiii. 29).

But the effect of the fiery word is twofold. It may kill them as enemies by converting them into friends, or it may bring judgment upon them. "For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are the savour of death unto death, and to the other the savour of life unto life" (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16). Thus, and in no other way, must he who desires to hurt them be killed. Christ's witnesses must use no carnal weapon, no word of mere human wisdom, no bitterness of speech. When our adorable Lord said, "If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou Me?" the fire of God's own word proceeded out of his mouth. When our beloved brother Paul said, "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall; for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?" the fire was not that of God's Spirit, but of his own spirit, and he immediately retracted the bitter words. M.

Missionary Questions.

It is always distressing to read of our older Missionary Societies contemplating a policy of retrenchment. "There is yet much land to be possessed," and the time has not come for relaxing in any degree our efforts for the evangelising of the world. Never were there so many open doors as now; exceptional opportunities for service present themselves on every hand; a policy of retrenchment at such a time seems like disloyalty to our Lord and disobedience to his command.

Yet the Societies cannot spend more than they receive. Debt in connection with the work of God is a great hindrance, and prevents many having fellowship with the work of Societies in which a big deficit is an annual experience. A larger income from the Churches is the remedy. Can anything be done to secure that?

It cannot be pretended that the present contributions from the Churches represent all that the members are able to do. The large amounts they give in some cases to their own ministers; the expensively-furnished buildings in which they worship; the luxury in which many of them live; all indicate that it is not lack of means that explains the present difficulty. Either there is a lack of missionary enthusiasm, or there is a diminished confidence in the work of the Societies and missionaries. Perhaps both these reasons exist, and both must be dealt with if a remedy is to be found.

The first difficulty is very largely in the hands of our pastors. An increase of missionary zeal in them would soon affect their Churches. Do all the pastors give to this work of evangelising the heathen the important place it ought to occupy? Do they sufficiently recognise that the one work of the Holy Ghost is to bear witness for Christ to the uttermost parts of the earth, and that spiritual revival in their Churches requires that they be in line with Him? Let the pastors deal with this work as though they meant it, and as though they had no dread that larger gifts to missionary work meant a diminished income for themselves, and they will find many in their Churches ready to respond.

But other questions are very closely related to this. It is possible that before pastors and Churches do more for the Societies, the exact relationship of the Societies to the Churches on the one hand, and to the missionaries on the other, needs to be defined. Are the missionaries the agents or servants (?) of the Societies, or are they the messengers of the churches? Is there a sufficiently close connection between the Churches at home and their brethren abroad, for whom they are asked to pray and give? Do not Societies sometimes act as a barrier to separate, rather than as a link to unite? A great step in advance would be taken if the Societies not not only allowed but encouraged Churches to support missionaries of their own, with whom they might be in direct communication. By this method the zeal of the members would be intensified in hearing of their missionary's success, and their true sympathy deepened by hearing of his difficulties and sorrows. This is the result that has followed in Churches where the method has been adopted. If the pastors are encouraged to lead in this matter, they will find their people ready to follow.

Is it not necessary also to raise the question of the relationship of the committees to the missionaries in the field? In one of our oldest Societies it is affirmed in one of their rules that "pastors of Churches making an annual contribution" are members of the Society, and when in London, are entitled to "attend and vote at the meetings of the committee." But no such statement is made concerning missionaries; and brethren who are at home on furlough are not mentioned as eligible to attend and take part at committee meetings. Possibly this is an oversight; but it ought to be corrected. The presence of missionaries to give their information to the committee would greatly strengthen the confidence of the Churches in the committee's decisions.

Is there any foundation for the impression which prevails to a considerable extent that the committees at home do not give sufficient liberty of action to brethren in the field? Is it true, as some have affirmed, that missionaries meet for conference and prayer in India or China, decide upon certain modes of procedure in connection with their work, but are powerless to act until their proposals have been sent to the Home Committee, and considered by them? Is it also a fact that not infrequently the Home Committee rejects the proposals of the missionaries, and dictates an entirely different course? These things are affirmed by some, and believed by many, and possibly may be defended as wise by many more. Are they true?

If so, we venture to suggest the need of a change. No doubt our brethren in the mission field may err, but a committee sitting in London and deciding matters concerning these distant countries is not more likely to be infallible. What can even the wisest and most experienced committee-man know as to what is best for countries so far away? The Churches generally would trust the decisions of the men doing the work rather than those of brethren at home, however wise and experienced.

We plead for an increase of confidence right through our missionary work. No men ever realise their highest possibilities until they are trusted. Why should not the committees begin by committing much more responsibility into the hands of the missionaries? It is not extreme to suggest that in each important field of work the missionaries should be empowered to manage their own affairs, to take immediate steps in cases of special emergency, to decide upon and adopt their own methods, and to be free from the dread of unfavourable criticism by the committee at home?

We would not introduce so many questions if we were not convinced that an attempt to overcome present difficulties, while ignoring these questions, must fail. The contributions of many church members are diverted from their own societies to others whose work commands their greater sympathy. Our appeal is to pastors first of all, upon whom we depend for the awakening of a deeper interest in the missionaries direct; and to committees and directors next, who may do much to establish this closer bond between members of Churches at home and their brethren abroad.

"CHURCHES TO THE FRONT!"

What incalculable blessing would result if Churches responded to the call! Give the Churches a chance. They are not uninterested or unsympathetic. Let them know that the work primarily is theirs, and that the committees are their executive. It is they who must "hold the ropes"; and they will be found ready to "expect great things from God, and to attempt great things for God."

"BY PRAYER."

To-day I visited a remote Monmouthshire village too poor to build a church or support a pastor. For a long time a few poor, but faithful, Christians met for Bible reading, praise, and prayer, in cottage meetings and in the open-air. Twelve months ago they felt the urgent need of a small mission hall, but it was doubtful if two pounds could be raised in the village, so poor were they. All felt that if the hall was ever built it would have to be done "by prayer." So day by day a faithful few met to lay the matter before the Lord. They made up their minds to ask no one for a penny; neither would they go into debt.

The first gift was a £10 note from a lady who testified that the Lord had told her to bring it; the second was a shilling from a poor saint. Nor did the gifts cease till enough and to spare had been received. Every day there is an early morning prayer-meeting, and much good is being done in a quiet loving way. One poor old woman asked to be allowed to scrub the room weekly to show her love for Jesus; another offered to supply the oil for the lamp which lights the room.

My friend, Maurice Machen, who is looked up to as pastor, tells me there are many other neglected villages where a mission-room would be highly prized. They are asking of God to allow them to build two or three such rooms in which they may tell the old, old story of Jesus and his love. Will your readers pray for these humble, but exceedingly happy, workers for the King?

WHIT-SUNDAY.

We have often praised Thee, Father,
For a Saviour who was given
To redeem thy wayward children,
Vanquish sin, and open heaven,
For the Son of God Incarnate,
Bearing all his people's woes,
For his death their sins atoning,
For the power in which He rose.

But to-day thy children praise Thee
For a further gift of love,
For the Spirit now outpourèd
By the thronèd Lord above—
For the Pentecostal blessing
To thy waiting Church come down,
For the Father's promise given
His redeeming work to crown.

Praise to Thee, Thou Blessed Spirit,
Who didst guide the saints of old,
For one fuller, wider blessing,
Every child may now behold;
Thou our Guide amid earth's dimness.
Day by day the path to show
To each simple, trusting pilgrim
Through the hindrances below.

Praise to Thee for thy great cleansing
In the blood of Christ applied,
For thy power to keep us spotless
In the Saviour crucified;
Take these hearts we now present Thee,
Cleanse from every sinful stain,
Burn up all the dross, the baseness,
That within us may remain.

Praise to Thee for thine indwelling
In each full-surrendered heart,
For thy promise ne'er to leave us,
Never, never, to depart;
For thy power each child to render
To the Master's service true,
And inspire, through thy grand Presence,
All his blessèd will to do.

Praise to Thee for strength Almighty
In our weakness perfect made,
Power to live, to serve, to labour,
In each trusting soul displayed;
Praise to Thee for souls ingathered
By thine all-converting might,
Praise for fields to harvest whitening,
And for ever widening light.

And as we this day adore Thee
For thy coming to our race,
So we pray Thee for the millions
Strangers still to heavenly grace;
Quicken Thou the Church to witness
In all-conquering power for Thee,
Till her Lord shall come in triumph,
And the earth his glory see.

"The Style of a Field Preacher."

[From The British Weekly.]

Mr. Gladstone, in his fine essay on Macaulay, severely rebuked the historian for complaining that parts of St. Augustine were written in the style of a field preacher.... What is "the style of a field preacher"? There must, to begin with, be something to send a preacher to the fields. The Christianity that steps outside the sanctuary doors and, mindful of certain injunctions, goes into the highways and hedges, must have a gospel that can be carried to the lost. It must be urgent and it must be plain. It must be urgent if men are to speak and hear it under the open sky, if it is to draw them, as they were drawn by Whitefield, from the roaring, boisterous fairs, from the races and the traffic and the gambling, to listen till they shed tears. When we look at the history of open-air preaching, we shall perhaps find that only the constant pressure of certain convictions have made it long possible.

The field preacher believes, with an earnestness which seems to have quite died out of the world, the terrible warnings which Christ and his apostles addressed to the impenitent. He believes that the divine wrath rests upon those who are outside of Christ. To him the Redeemer of the world is not merely or even mainly a philanthropist and apologist. The field preacher sees the life of Christ and the destiny of man in the light of Gethsemane and Calvary. He believes that the time is short, and that nothing but the Word of the Cross can overcome the world. He knows that if there is any Christ but the Christ of fancy and dream it is the Christ who spoke of a day of judgment when it would be more tolerable for Sodom than for those who heard and refused Him, of a furnace of fire into which the angels of the Son of Man would cast them that do iniquity, of the divine anger and of the eternal death which is the doom of the impenitent. With a yearning that never abates, he declares the need of sinners and the love of Christ. He preaches with conquering tenderness that God willeth not the death of a sinner, and in rebuke, appeal, expostulation, he seeks for an immediate surrender to Christ as one who knows that it may be the last opportunity alike for preacher and for hearer, and who is well-nigh crushed by the consciousness of what may be the issues of the moment.

Further, the field preacher offers not merely a present deliverance from peril, but a present communication of peace and hope and joy in Christ Jesus. If he speaks in demonstration of the Spirit and with power, he himself must have a rich experience of the Divine love and mercy. It is said of the ministry of George Whitefield that it was pre-eminent for tenderness, that the consciousness of the love of Christ was so present to his soul that it would sometimes almost overwhelm him in the streets. So the field preacher looks around upon his hearers as one poor, yet making many rich, as having nothing, and yet possessing all things. He sees them as they stand around, wearied and worn with sorrow, anxious, careful, defeated, deep in the sad task of paying for past iniquities, and he knows that the Divine heart goes out to them with his own.

The field preacher has to deal with the moment. He knows that his poor hearers cannot afford to wait for the destruction of one political party or the other for the removal of the mighty obstacles in the path of progress, and he knows besides that the life is more than meat and the body than raiment. Though he may never have formulated it, there is given to him the knowledge that a far greater value is to be attached to existence itself than to the particular modes of existence, and that happiness is best found when men are content to live the life which God has given them because it is his gift. The field preacher knows that for his hearers there may be a present pardon and release from all the guilt of the past, and he knows that with that release there comes to those who are ready to receive it an enrichment of the whole nature. He knows that even while he is speaking the secret and silent springs of thought and feeling in those who listen to him may be suddenly touched and hallowed.

To him the supreme moment is that moment when the old life ceases and the new life is born. That moment comes when the spirit not only longs and fears, but wills. Then the power of God may penetrate to the inmost depths of the soul. A mysterious energy may make itself felt through the entire nature. The day dawns, and the day-star rises, and though the light is at first feeble, uncertain, and struggling, the shining of its first ray makes all the difference, and the gloom begins to retreat, although it may be but slowly. Christ takes possession of the heart to dwell there. The desolate soul finds in Him sympathy and strength, and it finds much more. The relationship between Christ and those who believe in Him is closer and more intimate than any relation of sympathy. He becomes the Guest, and Inmate, and Ruler, and Host of the heart.

We will not say that this Gospel is very largely preached in these days. There is large promise of attaining far-off and difficult goals. Hope is held out for the new generation. The ultimate triumph of an undefined Christian ideal is prophesied. The day of universal suffrage, the day of the prohibition of the drink traffic, the day of socialism, are anticipated more or less hopefully and wistfully.

Now is the day of salvation.

In the enduring literature of religion the shadows are deep—deep as they are in the New Testament, which is at once the sternest and the tenderest book in the world. But a present and deathless hope accompanies this profound yearning and awe, the hope of those who have seen the promises of God fulfilled in the history of Christian souls. It is true that those who hold the faith of a field preacher cannot very long disguise their religion. Their faith cannot be hid. They must ever be ready to give a reason for the hope that is in them with meekness and fear.

ICELAND.—In twelve months' time it will be 900 years since this island was evangelised by Scandinavian missionaries. In 1530 the Reformed faith was introduced, and to-day the population of 75,000 are Protestants. The Pope had the satisfaction, last Easter, of sending two Roman Catholic missionaries from Copenhagen to say mass, a service that has not been performed in the island for 365 years. The only Roman Catholic family in the island is that of the French Consular agent, who resides at Reikjavik.—L'Eglise Chrétienne.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION reports much encouragement from the good conduct and changed lives of those who have gone forth from the Home. The young women are, for the most part, received at a critical time in their life, and for this reason the responsibility of those who have charge of the Mission House is the greater. It must not, however, be supposed that because their spiritual welfare is the first concern, their temporal necessities are lightly considered. Very great pains are taken to secure the best training for the young woman's future life—to enable her to maintain her child, and to secure, whenever possible, its legitimate maintenance from its father. Copies of this report may be had from the office, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

WHAT IS LIFE?

Prebendary Reynolds, in his weekly scientific lecture on Wednesday, in the Church of SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C., said:—Life is manifested by a peculiar action, a power working in matter, causing movements which excite growth and sensation; further rising, as to man, into thought, emotion, the sense of responsibility, and of spiritual joys. It appears in a structureless, semi-fluid matter, bioplasm; and every animal and plant is a sum of vital unities, the characteristics of general life, and the specific characters of its own life as it advances to maturity. We cannot detect any difference marking off higher from lower life, nor in the embryonic bioplasm separating it from that of the adult creature. Life is a scene of conflict, but the victory more than compensates for the battle. In low grades of existence, pain, having no fret of anticipation with it, turns in every case to some present or future advantage; even death ministers to more and further. Nature is not to be painted in shadow, but should be thought and spoken of as a grand parable.

Our threefold state of life—body, soul, spirit—was from the beginning (Job. xxxiii. 4; Ps. cxxxix. 13-16). Incidentally physical science even proves our Divine origin, for as every phenomenon of the inorganic world is the product of adequate causes traced to the Eternal Power, so, and more especially, is life. The life-point secretes a substance and forms a cell as medium of intercourse with the surroundings. The cell is at once separating and connecting. The nucleus and the cell begin the vital functions and differentiations of our life. The life-point and the bioplasms are the same for all organisms. The oak, the lowest animal, and man (the highest animal) seem identical in the germ and primal substance. We have in this a disproof of atheistic evolution, for, as Dr. Stirling has stated, "If all life is identified in protoplasms, so also you must differentiate all life in protoplasms." There is certainly a difference, not as yet detected, for we are unable to examine the living substance. It dies before we can begin. "The life flashes, as it were, into inanimate particles, and they live"; but the difference between one flash and another is that between mind and no mind, between a responsible soul and no soul.

Body precedes soul. God makes the body; He is the impelling Cause: and the soul is that for which the body is made. We are not best at once, but, as General Lambert said: "The best man is man at the best"; and we add, "The best world is the world the best." Thitherward we are tending. Not we nor Nature will pass away as the baseless fabric of a vision. Men of science are not foolish dreamers when they tell us that nothing perishes. We do not think that the Almighty plays at making and unmaking, destroys as fast as He makes. All grades of being, all orders of existence, are attained; and the wonderful chords of life are being attuned here for a wonderful harmony somewhere.

DR. NEWMAN HALL.

Dr. Newman Hall entered his eightieth year on Wednesday last week, May 22. On the preceding Sunday he preached three times, and held a mission service at Tredegar. Next day he travelled from Wales, and spoke at Christ Church, Westminster-bridge-road, at a large meeting in connection with the centenary of the London Missionary Society. Next morning he took part in the annual breakfast of the Religious Tract Society, and celebrated his birthday by preaching to a large rural congregation at Southminster, Essex. This may assure his friends that years and service have not injured his health.

During the present year he has also preached at Stoke Newington, Leicester, Lincoln, Hastings, Hampstead, Leytonstone, Hornsey, Brighton, Tolmer's-square, Middlesbrough, Hanley, Rochdale, Cambridge, Sale, Bath, Tunbridge Wells, Christ Church, Broadstairs, Nottingham, Plaistow, Southminster, Leeds—for Congregational, Methodist, and Baptist Churches, besides holding eight days' missions at Torquay and Newcastle. Mission services have followed every evening sermon, for prayer and confession of Christ. He has also addressed various public meetings on behalf of temperance and other philanthropies. This may correct an erroneous impression that retirement from one church after thirty-eight years' pastorate was retirement from preaching the Gospel of Christ Crucified.

The Opium Commission.

CRITICISM OF THE REPORT.

The stern fight against our Indian opium trade has reached a fresh stage. The Royal Commission having at last presented its report to Parliament and the public, that public is in a position to judge of the merits or demerits of the document. Our readers are well aware that the conclusions contained in the majority report are by no means satisfactory to those friends of national righteousness who have had the opportunity of examining them. Those who can, or who will, examine this report for themselves in its details are but a small company, comparatively; it is therefore needful that the great mass of the community should be enlightened, through public meetings and in the Press, as to the most inadequate character of this Parliamentary paper—the majority report. A definite step in this process of enlightenment was taken by the holding of a meeting at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, on Wednesday evening last week, to give a public welcome to Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P. As a member of the Royal Commission, he has felt constrained to dissent from the views and conclusions of his fellow-commissioners, and has set out his independent statement of the case in a minority report.

The meeting at St. Martin's Hall was very well attended, most of those present being persons who spend their lives, in one way or another, in active and earnest Christian effort. There was a goodly array, on the platform, of helpers in the cause, and the proceedings throughout were highly stimulating. After prayer by Rev. John Wilkinson, the chairman of the evening, Mr. T. A. Denny, made a brief speech, dealing mainly with the broad principles that ought to regulate such a movement. We are in danger, he said, of minimising the evils that exist, by our very familiarity with their nature and working. But no amount of argument, however specious, can turn wrong into right; and God must certainly hold us guilty as a nation if we countenance or encourage that which is manifestly a cause of great offence to Him and of terrible disaster to mankind. Having referred to the great weight and authority that ought to attach to the missionary evidence given against the evils of the opium habit, Mr. Denny concluded by citing a statement he had recently read. It was to the effect that India sends every year to China enough opium to make fifteen million gallons of laudanum, sufficient to poison the whole population of the globe, if they were unaccustomed to the drug, thirteen times over.

Mr. B. Broomhall announced letters of regret at absence from the meeting, and of sympathy with its objects, from Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Mr. Theodore Fry, the Archbishop of Dublin, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Grattan Guinness, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, and other friends.

A SHORT HISTORICAL REVIEW of the agitation in this country against our national complicity in the opium traffic, was given by Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., who for years past has been the Parliamentary leader of this crusade. He said that the real leader of the movement was the late Earl of Shaftesbury, who on one occasion laid before the House of Commons a memorial, signed by all the leading London physicians of that time, declaring the opium drug to be a poison, which should only be used by those who understand its power and its properties. The great struggle, said Sir Joseph, has been one with the Indian Government to give up a revenue which Anti-opiumists thought, and still think, to be immoral in its character. In tracing the course of the evil so far as it affects Burmah, the speaker quoted a dictum of Sir Charles Aitchison, that in relation to the Burmese it was not merely a question of morals, but of the salvation or ruin of a whole people. To our shame, be it said, we have allowed the opium habit to gain a footing in Burmah, regardless of what the dire consequences may be. After a reference to the unsatisfactory way in which the Indian authorities had dealt with the opium dens in the Bombay province, Sir Joseph Pease passed on to the agitation in Parliament, which secured a majority of thirty-one for the motion he made in 1891 in the House of Commons, declaring the traffic

TO BE IMMORAL AND INDEFENSIBLE.

The views of the late Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., antagonistic to the traffic, as expressed in conversation with the speaker, were referred to. Then came a mention of the motion submitted to the Commons by Mr. Alfred Webb, M.P., demanding an inquiry into the steps that would necessarily have to be taken to readjust the Indian revenue, with a view to the relinquishment of the income derived from opium manufacture. The Anti-opiumists never desired or asked for such a Commission as was appointed. Their position and contention were that with proper economy and a due development of the magnificent resources of the Indian Empire, there could be no difficulty in securing an adequate revenue without the opium. Leaving his Parliamentary colleague, Mr. Wilson, to deal more specifically with the majority report of the Opium Commission, Sir Joseph closed his excellent and hearty speech by a brief reference to the general tenour of the report. The Commissioners admit, in clause after clause of their report, that opium-smoking is an undoubted evil, though they assert that the practice is not a prevalent one in India; nevertheless they decline to recommend any interference with the income derived from the trade with China and the Straits Settlements, where the evils of opium-smoking exist on a gigantic scale. The argument that if we do not supply China she will grow the drug for herself, was denounced as unworthy a professedly Christian nation. The judgment of Providence on our action is clearly seen in the steady decline of the opium revenue in India, and that revenue will continue to go down. We cannot persevere in the course we have pursued except by going in the teeth not only of all the Christian churches, but of everyone who believes in the principles of morality and the necessity for repressing vice.

THE SPEECH OF THE EVENING, of course, was that made by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., who was warmly cheered on rising to his feet. He began by the cheerful intimation that, notwithstanding the taunts of the pro-opium press as to their being a lot of discredited faddists, they who desired to see righteousness triumph were not a beaten party, and they did not intend to accept the Commission report as a settlement of this important question. He thought it was scarcely fair or just to describe him as being in a minority of one, seeing that the two native Indian Commissioners agreed with his conclusions in several important particulars. The Maharaja of Dharbangha states in his supplementary report that he entirely concurs with Mr. Haridas, the other native Commissioner, that the smoking of opium ought to be prohibited by law under all circumstances; that the drug should be labelled "poison," as in England, and that the amount of the minimum fatal dose should be stated in the vernacular of the district.

Mr. Wilson proceeded to formulate some of the serious objections he entertained as to the action and the conclusions of his fellow Commissioners. Having spent several months in taking evidence throughout India, they met a few days after the evidence had been closed, arrived at certain conclusions, and then proceeded to frame the report in accordance with those conclusions. Being unwell at the time, he was not present. Not having been on a Royal Commission before, he had fondly imagined that the evidence would be carefully sifted and considered before any conclusions were arrived at. Lord Brassey, the chairman of the Commission, expressly precluded him from taking part, in the way he desired, in the discussions over the preparation of the report. He could not consent merely to raise an occasional point, so he was compelled to be a silent listener at those discussions, and there was no alternative left for him but to prepare and issue a separate report. The report of the majority was drawn up mainly by Indian officials, and took its colour from them accordingly. Apart from the manner of preparing the report, he felt strongly that the evidence was not fairly brought before the Commission. He was ready to prove at the proper time that the character of the evidence submitted to them was regulated and influenced by interested Indian officials. We all know the saying—but the heathen Chinee might take lessons in that respect from Indian officials. Some of these peculiar ways have already been exposed, and others will yet be brought to light. In its presentation to the Commission much of the evidence was "arranged" and filtered; and even the evidence actually given, when it went against the views of the Indian authorities, was not fairly represented in the report, which he considered to be really a verdict against the evidence taken as a whole.

> For ways that are dark
> The heathen Chinee is peculiar;

The ground covered in the report is so wide, and it is so mixed up, that it is somewhat difficult to answer and repel particular points. One matter referred to is the belief that opium is a preventative and cure of malarial fever, and this is described as a popular general belief throughout India. In the report no adequate place is given to the evidence which contradicted this assumption. Sir Wm. Roberts contributes to the report a scientific section, but he is not to be congratulated on his success. He has to admit at the last that crude opium can never take the place of quinine as a prophylactic agent, but he devotes much space to the opposite contention. The medical evidence on this point was very strong, and it was clearly shown that great numbers of people throughout India have no knowledge or belief as to the virtues of opium in cases of fever. If the medical officials really believe what they advanced as to this, they have grossly neglected their duty in not making the Indian people aware of it. The fact is, that the Government of Madras had put it on record that they were doing all they possibly could to wean the people from the hereditary habit, so strong was their conviction of its injurious character. A great body of evidence, native and otherwise, went to prove that at any rate it is not good for young healthy people. In the case of Assam, in which district there is a large consumption of the drug, officials and other Europeans have declared opium to be essential to the health of the people, while the natives regard it as

A SCOURGE TO THE COUNTRY.

In the face of this, one official witness, nevertheless, went so far as to say that the prohibition of opium would depopulate whole districts.

A fact that was well established during the inquiry was that the consumption of opium is intimately connected with the practice of lust and impurity. As to this the report only says that some witnesses gave this as a reason for its use, but that the thing was exceptional. Mr. Wilson said he noted no fewer than fifty-three witnesses who asserted this (and they were not all who did), but Sir Wm. Robert dismisses the point in thirteen lines. While the smoking of the drug is largely the habit in China, it is taken in India mostly in the form of pills. Both forms of use are bad, but it is universally agreed that smoking is the worst. The Chinese question is undoubtedly the crux of the Anti-opium movement, but in the majority report this aspect is watered down and minimised. Mr. Wilson quoted the following sentence from the report, which, he said, he greatly wished someone would explain, as he was unable to fathom its meaning: "While we are not prepared to recommend measures of restrictive legislation, we are in favour of making it difficult for smokers to indulge in the habit." How it was possible to make the habit difficult without restrictions of some kind, Mr. Wilson said he was altogether at a loss to know. The report fears that the prohibition of opium-smoking would entail objectionable domiciliary visitation by the police, but Mr. Haridas, one of the native commissioners, laughs all such fears to scorn. In truth, such a method of dealing with the evil is nothing but tinkering with the whole business.

Another point in the report has reference to the amount of opium consumed by the troops in India. It is said that the Sikhs are addicted to it, and they are the finest troops in the world. If they were to be deprived of it they would mutiny, and so forth. How does the evidence bear out this view? Before the Commission sat, officers throughout India were asked to send in returns as to the number of troops using opium. These returns were never placed before the Commission at all; we may be sure they would have been if they told the tale that was wanted. General Low appeared, and testified that the highest number in any one regiment under his command using opium was twenty. In one native regiment there were only two, and in another one. Other military evidence showed that while twenty-three regiments on active service (including two Sikh regiments) made no provision for the supply of opium, 3lb. were taken by the 23rd Bengal Infantry as sufficient for two years, and small quantities taken by 32nd Bengal Infantry and the 3rd Sikh Infantry, were brought back untouched. Yet we are asked to believe that for long journeys and arduous service the drug is an absolute necessary of life, and that if the troops were deprived of it they would mutiny! It is a fact that when troops are passing through a district

THE OPIUM SHOPS ARE SHUT.

The attitude taken up in the report as to the bearing of opium on Missions also deserves serious attention. Although no one, so far as Mr. Wilson knew, had asserted that the opium habit is an impediment to missionary work in India, that position is stated, in order to give weight to the pro-opium memorial by the Bishop of Calcutta and his clergy. This has been said often enough about China, and it is indisputably true as regards that land; but, as a matter of fact, the Calcutta clergy did not refer to this part of the question at all. What they did say in their memorial was that the medical testimony seemed to them to show that the drug was beneficial in its effects. But not one of them appeared to give personal testimony before the Commission, and stand the test of cross-examination. Forty-five missionaries tendered evidence. Of these forty-one were Anti-Opiumists, two were pro-opiumists, and two were neutral. Will it be believed, not one of the forty-one is quoted in the report, though some of the others are? The evidence of missionaries taken in London and that sent from China is in the proportion of seventy to nothing against opium. The missionary evidence is altogether cheapened in this report, and much of the opposing evidence that is referred to is garbled. It is argued that if the trade were stopped we should not only lose the revenue, but have to pay enormous compensation to the cultivators. As to this latter point, there was plenty of evidence that the people do not want to grow the opium and would rather grow some other crop. In fact they are very often pressed by the officials to grow it; aye, and punished if they do not cultivate enough. One case was mentioned where a potato crop was uprooted simply because the ryot had not planted enough poppy. It is said that the opium cultivation is both popular and profitable. Within two months of the time the Commission left India the Government increased the price paid to the cultivators by twenty per cent.; that does not look very like its being a profitable crop. A great deal more may be said and will be said to show how inconsistent the report is with the evidence. Let every friend of the cause acquaint himself with Mr. Rowntree's admirable résumé of the evidence; it contains the gist of the whole business. We are not at all a beaten party; we will go on fighting till the monstrous iniquity of the China opium trade is overthrown and destroyed.

Bishop Moule, of China, followed. Having quoted from Sir J. B. Lyall's statement in the report with respect to the Chinese missionaries, in order to repudiate certain portions of that statement, the Bishop gave some facts from his own long experience of life in China among all classes of the people, showing that the opium habit is denounced and execrated alike by rich and poor, even by those who are its unhappy victims. There can be no doubt at all that it shakes the moral sense, and predisposes to crime.

As a representative of the Free Church of Scotland, Rev. J. Hunter chimed in with the previous speakers. He severely criticised some parts of the Majority Report, and declared that the missionary body should complain to the British Parliament because of the way in which their evidence is treated. If we have many more such Royal Commissions the name will become a byeword. When the country has had time thoroughly to know the truth this report will certainly be rejected.

The following resolution was moved by Mr. Joshua Rowntree:—

This meeting regrets that the Royal Commission did not observe an honourable independence of the Indian Government whilst inquiring into its opium monopoly, and cannot but regard the majority report as, in the main, an elaborate defence of the Government from the pens of its own officials. In warmly thanking Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., for his independent and invaluable labours and report, we gladly recognise that the two Native Indian Royal Commissioners go far to confirm his conclusions in some important particulars, and especially that the Maharaja of Dharbangha should have advised that all opium sold retail in India should have the word "poison" and the amount of the minimum fatal dose attached in the vernacular. This meeting notes that opium-smoking is universally condemned in India as a degrading vice, whilst the evidence received by the commission from China is overwhelming in its denunciation of the habit as a gigantic evil. This meeting protests against a Government of a professedly Christian Empire continuing to carry on the manufacture and sale of opium for the sake of gain, and in the face of all moral considerations.

In commending this motion to the audience, Mr. Rowntree pointed out the striking contrast between the official European evidence and the native evidence. The former uphold the traffic, but, curiously enough, they decline to resort to the drug for themselves and their families. If this report is accepted and endorsed by the British nation, the traffic will spread in India to an extent that no one can foretell. We must remember that we are trustees or the vast populations of India, and we are bound to regard the moral aspects of the question as of m re importance than the financial. Not one of the main positions of this anti-opium movement is altered or shifted by this report. The motion, which was briefly seconded by Rev. J. Reed, as representing the U.P. Church in Scotland, and supported, in an exposition of the medical bearings of the question, by Dr. Maxwell, was passed with unanimity. On the motion of Mr. Robert Scott and Mr. J. E. Mathieson, the meeting assured Sir Joseph Pease of its hearty support in his Parliamentary action on the succeeding Friday evening, and the benediction closed the proceedings.

THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE.

The proceedings in the House of Commons on Friday evening, when Sir Joseph Pease's resolution was rejected by a majority of 117, may seem at first sight to constitute a very discouraging turn of affairs in this crusade. No doubt it does indicate a slackness of moral fibre in a large section of the present House of Commons, and a readiness to subordinate righteousness and truth to political expediency. But we are well accustomed to that, unfortunately, in relation to great moral questions, and the friends of the cause must not be unduly depressed by the apparent set back which the repeal movement has received by the vote of the House.

That vote, it may further be said, was not taken on the true merits of the case, but rather on a subsidiary point. Sir Joseph Pease and Mr. J. Ellis, the mover and seconder of the resolution, supplied the House with some strong and cogent reasons for not accepting the conclusions of the Royal Commission, and indicated some of its methods which were open to grave objections. Mr. Fowler, the Secretary of State, in his reply, seized on the point that the members of the House had not had time to examine the evidence and the report, and on that ground mainly based a powerful and heated attack on the movers of the resolution. In the latter part of his speech he essayed to deal with the permanent principles that underlie the question, but his treatment of them was painfully inadequate, and not such as we should have expected from a man of his high Christian character, if he had been untrammelled by official ties and the necessity of defending his fellow-officials.

INTERVIEW WITH SIR JOSEPH PEASE.

In order to ascertain his views as to the aspect of affairs consequent on the debate and hostile division in Parliament, a representative of The Christian called on Sir Joseph Pease on Monday at his residence in the West-end. In response to questions by his interviewer, the honourable baronet read a letter which he had addressed to the public press, showing that the Commission itself had condemned the habit of opium smoking, and recommending that it should be checked. Should the Indian Government carry out this recommendation (which they cannot well avoid doing) a heavy blow will be dealt at this habit in India, but if it is to be checked or prohibited in India we cannot consistently encourage it in China, where its evils are infinitely greater in extent.

As to the charge made by the Secretary of State of mooting the question prematurely in Parliament, Sir Joseph said that he had admitted in his speech the inconvenience of so doing; but in the present condition of business in the House of Commons, when the Government may speedily appropriate the whole of the time to its own purposes, he felt bound to take the earliest available opportunity of putting the House in possession of the feelings and resolves of the Anti-Opium Party, especially as the daily press were asserting that the Report of the Commission had put an end to the agitation altogether. The result of the debate would not prevent any member from reopening the subject in Parliament when an opportunity can be secured for the purpose. Meantime we must wait and see what action the Indian Government will take in pursuance of the recommendations which the Commission have made, inadequate though they be. The suggestions of the two native commissioners, who know the country intimately, are stronger than those of the others. As to bringing pressure to bear on the Indian authorities, Sir Joseph said that while the Secretary of State in this country is all powerful, he will of course feel it right and necessary to consult with the ruling body in India, before taking definite action. While expressing every confidence in the personal integrity of Lord Brassey, the chairman of the Commission, Sir Joseph Pease said that in view of the fact that his lordship is implicated in the opium trade by his connection with Borneo, it would have been better if he had not been selected for the office. He felt strongly also that the Commission had compromised its independence by accepting the hospitality of the Indian Government; as they were acting in a judicial capacity they should have scrupulously kept themselves free of all influences, Government or otherwise, that would affect their decision and the impartial character of their inquiry. Meantime the process of public enlightenment must go on, and when the fitting time comes further public action will be taken by the friends of the cause. Speaking with respect to Friday evening's division in the House of Commons, Sir Joseph commented on the curious fact that eleven members of the present Government went into the lobby against him who in 1891 voted that the traffic was morally indefensible. He added that it ought to be stated, to the credit of Mr. John Morley, a leading member of the Government, that he declined to support his colleagues, and walked out of the House before the division.

Apart from the official members, Sir Joseph's resolution was supported by a majority of the Liberals present, but only four members of the Conservative Opposition voted with him.

HEBREW CONFERENCE HALL.

The thirty-third anniversary of the work carried on by Mr. H. Ehrlich at the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, was celebrated on Thursday last, when Mr. F. A. Bevan presided over a gathering representative of Hebrew converts and missionaries.

In a brief report, Mr. Ehrlich made special reference to the efforts of himself and helpers among the children, who are so numerous in the district. Every house in Old Montague-street has something like thirty children; and other houses in the locality have from thirty-seven to forty little ones. The Gospel meetings and Bible-classes have been well attended; while the Band of Hope promotes joy among the rising generation. Moreover, the members of the Band learn Christian hymns and passages from Holy Scripture, and can hardly develop the same prejudices as stand in the way of the evangelisation of their parents.

Archdeacon Sinclair delivered a helpful address, in which he spoke of the need for kindliness in carrying on the work, and for prayer accompanying it. Rev. E. A. B. Sanders, rector of Whitechapel, told of the joy he had in the Jewish work under his own direction. He emphasized the need of great care in the giving of temporal aid or relief, so that Jews shall not think they are being bought, or be tempted to confuse Christian benevolence with Christian teaching.

Mr. George Nokes, by way of illustrating the removal of Jewish prejudices, said that often in the theatre services on Sunday evenings there are as many as three or four hundred Jewish people in the large audiences that assemble. After addresses by Revs. J. B. Barraclough and Dr. Hamilton, the Chairman spoke, recalling the opposition that was offered years ago. With regard to temporal relief, he stated that the London City Mission, under whose auspices Mr. Ehrlich carries on his work, has given serious consideration to the matter, and has formulated rules calculated to meet the needs of the distressed in the wisest manner.

HALL GREEN, BIRMINGHAM.—A number of earnest workers were present at the race-meetings lately held at Hall Green, and proclaimed the Gospel to the crowds. Their presence was evidently unwelcome to many, but there was no serious opposition.

PALERMO.—The Sailors' Rest and Institute (380, Via Borgo, Palermo) reports good work among officers and men visiting the port. The Scripture reader and his wife have done good service in boarding vessels and holding services for the seamen. The Rest is well frequented, and has helped in keeping many out of temptation's way.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 2.—HEB. VI.

Going on unto Perfection (1-9).—The perfection to which we are summoned is that of mature experience, which is able to feed on solid food. There is no necessity, therefore, to stay at the first principles, which are as milk for babes. Baptisms refers to the ablutions of the Levitical code. Laying on of hands to the imposition of the priest's hands on a victim's head, by which, symbolically, he transferred the sins of the penitent to the sacrifice. We leave these foundation facts only as the builder the foundations on which his edifice rests when he is furthest above them. (4) It is marvellous how far we may go in the appearance of true godliness, without having the root of the matter. This was evidently the case with these converts, who were in danger of relapsing to the ceremonialism from which they had been brought. When the arguments of the Gospel have been brought to bear on conscience and heart, and have failed, there is no other argument left to renew again unto repentance. When the cross has failed, there is nothing beyond.

Better Things (9-12).—When we are saved, we are admitted to the enjoyment of many of the privileges, joys, and opportunities that accompany salvation. Notice the combination of faith, hope, and love; and the stress laid on patience. We need faith to enable us to suffer as we labour for Christ. Our faith is known and tested by our works of ministry.

The Anchored Soul (13-20).—Abraham's patient endurance, as well as his faith, was necessary to his obtaining of the promise. Our hope cannot be deceived, since its anchorage is the promise and oath of God. The anchor, too, is sure, because it has been forged in heaven and enters within the veil. Just as the literal anchor of a ship passes under the veil of the water, and as in the olden days it was borne within the harbour by the seamen, so that the ship was attached to the land though still out to sea, so Jesus, our Forerunner, has borne our hope with Him, within the unseen, whence it holds us. The hope of heaven steadies the soul, and keeps it from drifting. Tossed we may be with waves, but as long as Jesus lives on the throne, we cannot be lost.

MONDAY, JUNE 3.—HEB. VII.

Melchizedek (1-3).—The silence of Scripture about Melchizedek's ancestry is here adduced to show that his ministry did not depend on his pedigree. We know nothing of the origin or end of his priesthood, and in this it is an emblem of our Lord's, which is unique, underived, and continual in its duration. What a contrast to the Levitical priesthood, with their care to count back their generations to Aaron: and their inability to continue because of death.

The Inferiority of Levi's Priesthood (4-10).—That Abraham, the father of Levi, gave tithes to the priest-king of Salem establishes incontestably the superiority of the latter. The less is blessed by the greater. If Christ then is said by the Holy Ghost in Psa. cx. to be after the order of Melchizedek, he is certainly superior to Aaron and his sons.

A Change of Dispensation (11-25).—If Levi has been superseded, clearly the order of things, the covenant which his sons represented, has been superseded also. The law of the carnal commandment, which had so largely to do with outward rites and acts, has passed away in favour of the dispensation which is associated with Jesus Christ. It served its purpose to prepare for something better. Christ's Priesthood rests on the Divine oath. It is an unchangeable and abiding one. It is available for those who have come to an end of themselves.

The Appropriateness of Christ's Character for His Work (26-28).—Christ is so holy that He can touch our defilement without contamination. He has no need to offer for his own sins. No infirmity disables Him. He is the Son of God by reason of his essential nature, He is perfected for his office by the experience that fell to his share during his earthly life.

TUESDAY, JUNE 4.—HEB. VIII.

Such a High Priest (1-6).—He sits because his work is done, so far as his sacrifice is concerned. He sits at the right hand of the Eternal Majesty. All power is therefore his for all of us. By faith He admits us to share with Him in that new and better sanctuary, of which we are priests. 5. It is so needful for us to heed this injunction, which is repeated four or five times in Scripture. Before even we start building, we should carefully study the Divine Ideal and Pattern. Where God gives the Pattern, He will give the material.

Such a New Covenant (7-13).—It is as much better than the former one, as Christ's Priesthood is superior to Aaron's. A covenant is a promise made on conditions, with an outward seal attached, like the rainbow, or the rite of circumcision, or the Lord's Supper. God has entered into covenant with Christ, and we participate in it by faith. He, as our representative, fulfils all the conditions for and in us, when we are sincerely willing and eager for it. Let us ask that our hearts may be as tablets covered with God's Law of Love. Oh to be his people and to know Him, and to realise that God has forgiven and forgotten our sins. Let us recall this covenant each time we partake of the communion, as Noah recalled the earliest covenant each time he beheld a rainbow.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5.—HEB. IX.

The First Tabernacle (1-10). — With careful enumeration each item of furniture in the Tabernacle is specified, because for each there is a spiritual equivalent in the unseen spiritual Temple to which we all belong. The veil that screened the most holy place, and forbade entrance, save once a year, taught that fellowship with God was not yet fully open. Ignorance, unbelief, unpreparedness of heart, wove the heavy veil that screened God from the soul's gaze. At the best the Levitical ritual was outward in its operation and sensuous in its appeal. It was evidently temporary, and symbolic of the realities amid which our lot has been happily cast.

The Greater and More Perfect Tabernacle (11-22).—For the blood of goats and calves, we have the blood of Jesus; for the material structure, we have the unseen and spiritual; for the cleanness of the flesh from ceremonial pollution, we have the cleansing of the conscience; for the first Testament, we have the second. (17) The new covenant has been ratified, as the first was, by blood-shedding. It is of force because the testator has died, though He has risen again to administer his bequest and to make us fellow-heirs with Himself of the fulness of God.

Heaven Itself (23-28).—Christ appeared once to put away sin, which He did once and for ever. He appears in the presence of God for us, pleading for us and representing us. He will appear the second time. Then our salvation will be perfected, because our body shall be emancipated from the bondage of corruption and remarried to the redeemed spirit, and his likeness will be completed in us.

THURSDAY, JUNE 6.—HEB. X.

Shadow and Substance (1-4).—When the heavenly bodies, at the time of eclipse, cast a shadow, they can be watched and examined even better than when the eye is directed to their burning orbs; so, in Leviticus, we can get a fuller realisation of some parts of our Saviour's work than is given even in the Gospels. This is notably the case in respect of the aspects of his sacrifice presented by the different kinds of offerings (Leviticus i.-iv.). The key-word of this chapter is year by year or day by day, as contrasted with continually and for ever. Repetition means imperfection. That the offerings of the Jewish ritual were so constantly presented proves that the offerers never felt satisfied that they had really achieved the purpose for which they were presented. There was a perpetual remembrance of sin, but no certainty of its remission.

The Heart of Christ's Sacrifice (5-10).—The Holy Ghost opens to us the secret of our Saviour's work in the voluntary submission of his being as man to the Divine purposes. It was not so much his outward anguish and blood-shedding, but the yielded will, that cried perpetually, "Not my will, but thine; I delight to do thy will." His ear was indeed bored to the cross as of old the slave's to the doorpost.

Sanctified and Perfected (11-18).—There is a contrast intended here between the attitude of the priests who stood and that of Christ who sits—the one work unfinished, the other complete. In verse 10 it is the perfect tense: we have been sanctified. In verse 14 it is the imperfect: we are being sanctified. The former is true of our standing; the latter of our experience. Let us ask that our experience may approximate more closely to our standing in Christ.

Boldness to Enter (19-25).—Note the repeated let us. It is as though the saints' best life is only possible when they act in unison. It is they who draw nearest God, that are best able to consider others. "Within the vail" should be our perpetual abiding-place.

Drawing Back (26-39).—The wilful sin here referred to does not consist in single acts, but in a course persisted in until the very desire for a better life wanes in the soul, and dies.

FRIDAY, JUNE 7.—HEB. XI.

The Faith of the Patriarchs (1-12).—Those who believe are as sure of unseen facts as if they were visible; they even touch and test them. We are as sure of the creation, as though we had been spectators of the marvels of shapeless matter rounding into worlds. Abel's faith secured the descending flame of God's approval; Enoch's translation was definitely claimed by his faith; Noah sailed the ark across the deluge, because he believed in God's word, and secured deliverance for himself and his family; to Abraham's faith the city of God was as real as his fatherland, and Sarah by faith, received power to bear Isaac. Thus faith has the double power of making the unseen real, and of receiving the grace and power of God into the heart.

The Pilgrims (13-16).—The tent-life is possible only for those who desire and believe in the heavenly country. Faith in the Divine word enables men so to comport themselves, that even God is not ashamed to own them, and they will discover that they have not trusted Him for nought, for half will not have been told.

The Great Cloud of Witnesses (17-40).—Men of every age and temperament, belonging to all the dispensations, shepherds, Egyptian viziers, statesmen, and soldiers, border chieftains, psalmists, poets, prophets, women, martyrs, all stand on an equality in their faith, not in the amount of truth they hold, but in the grasp that held it; not in the extent of revelation, but in their attitude towards so much of truth as came within their reach. There is no sort of need, trial, persecution, experience, for which faith is not the sufficient answer. Fit your case into one of these marvellous clauses, and be sure that what has been, may be, through the all-conquering power of a God-given faith.

SATURDAY, JUNE 8.—HEB. XII.

Chastening not Punishment (1-13).—The race in the amphitheatre crowded by spectators was familiar to the writer and his readers. Let us ever remember that our life course has been laid out before us, that Christ has trodden it in the face of bitter suffering, and as it was with Him, so it shall be with us. The goal is the right hand of the Throne. (5) None of us should look on suffering as punishment. Chastening it may be, but not penalty. It is administered by our Father; it is only for the present; it is intended for our profit; it will yield peace, righteousness, holiness. Look on, look up, anticipate the harvest which will accrue from these autumn rains and sowings.

The Lost Birthright (14-17).—Watch each other's interests, and stay the speck in the fruit, lest it spread. No soul can become corrupt without defiling all in its neighbourhood, and thyself amongst the rest. There are irrevocable acts in life; we cannot recal the past. There is always place for penitence, but not for repentance, in the sense of altering the decisions of the soul. God can forgive, but He cannot undo. Esau received all that this world could give, he became a prince, the ancestor of a line of kings, but he lost the spiritual prerogative.

The Things that cannot be Shaken (18-29).—Sinai itself rocked with earthquake, and burnt with fire, none might touch it lest they died. How much better our inheritance! Not a lonely mountain, but a city and commonwealth of holy souls! Not bands of worshippers gathered from Canaan, but hosts of angels, and spirits of just men, and the blessed Lord Himself. For the blood of animals, the blood of Jesus; for the old covenant, the new; for Abel's death beside his altar, the Saviour's death on the cross. All around us the most stable structures are being tested, and some are crumbling to the earth. As they fall they show that they belong to an age which is passing away, and amid the fall of the scaffolding, there is emerging the forms of the eternal Kingdom which belongs to us, and which is permanent as the throne of God.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 9.

THE WALK TO EMMAUS.—Luke xxiv. 13-32.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 32.

SEVERAL opinions have been expressed as to the site of Emmaus. The latest is that of Canon Tristram, who says, "The place has been recently recovered, in a ruined village called Khamasa, a natural corruption of the Hebrew Hammath, or Emmaus—that is, 'the baths.' It is eight miles, or sixty-four furlongs, south-west of Jerusalem, and there are five good springs very near it, from which, doubtless, the name is derived."

This incident took place on the day of the Resurrection, some time in the afternoon. Cleopas, the name of one of the two disciples (18), is not the same as Clopas (John xix. 25), but is an abbreviation of Cleopatros. The name of the second is unknown. It seems evident from verse 33 that they were not apostles.

What is told us of the heart of these two disciples may suggest the lessons of the whole story.

I. SAD HEART (17).—Their countenances betrayed their grief. Yet, like a great deal of the grief we suffer, it was utterly without cause. They falsely supposed that their Lord was dead, and that the work of redemption He had come to accomplish was unfinished (21). They misread the facts. That He had died was true; but his death was not the failure of his work, as they supposed, but its accomplishment. That the sepulchre was open and empty was also true, but they were altogether wrong in inferring that his enemies had stolen the body. The same facts rightly interpreted would make them rejoice. How often our grief has a similarly mistaken foundation! We repeat their folly when we suppose that chastisement proves that God does not love us; or that the loss of the sense of his presence proves He has forsaken us.

Yet their sadness for such a course was a reason for thankfulness. There were thousands in Jerusalem and the district to whom the loss of the presence of Jesus brought no distress. Which would you prefer, the exultation of the many, or the sadness of these two? To be able to grieve over the loss of Jesus proves that the heart has learned to love Him and rejoice in Him.

II. SLOW OF HEART (25).—It was Jesus Himself who described them by this term; and the description reveals at once the true cause of their sadness.

Observe that He walks by them unknown (15, 16). Two reasons are given for their not recognising Him. "Their eyes were holden," and He appeared "in another form." It appears to have been our Lord's intention that they should not know Him, in order that He might bring them back to confidence and joy, not by a vision, but by faith. What they needed in order to put an end to their grief, was not to see Him, but to believe the prophets. Like others, they "erred because they knew not the Scripture." The light of God's word gives the best interpretation to all events.

But they were "slow of heart to believe." It is not without reason that Jesus connects faith with the heart, not merely with the intellect. (Compare Rom. x. 9, 10, and Heb. iii. 10.) They knew the prophecies concerning their Messiah, but their heart had not laid hold on them. They knew the testimony of the women and others (22-24), and thought about the facts they had declared, but never compared them with the statements of prophecy. Is not our faith often equally worthless?

III.—Burning Heart (32).—What caused their heart to burn? First, He was with them (14, 15). They who talk about Jesus will soon have his company. Though they knew Him not they confided in Him. They told Him everything—what they believed about Himself (19); what they had heard from their friends (22-24); their bitter disappointment and sorrow (21, 24). To find One to whom such a story could be told must have helped them. But it was especially what He told them that made the heart burn (25-27). As he took them through the Scriptures, and showed them how from the first promise in the Garden (Gen. iii. 15), to the prophecy of Malachi, the whole Book testified of his death and resurrection, they found a new Bible. With such a Teacher, and such a Lesson Book, and such a subject, no wonder their heart burned!

IV. GLAD HEART was surely the condition in which He left them. He became their guest when they invited Him (28, 29). He comes to all who ask for Him. Admitted as a guest, He became the host (30). Perhaps this incident recalled the miracle of the loaves, or while He handed them the bread, the nail-marks may have been manifest (30). But He was gone as soon as He was discovered. Yet the effect remained. Their confidence in Jesus as the Messiah was not based upon a mere transient vision, but upon the unalterable testimony of the Scriptures.

For the Young.

THE BABES IN THE WOOD.

How delightful and invigorating is the bright sunshine after the long bitter winter we have just passed. Through sunshine and rain, summer's genial warmth, and winter's bitter cold, our little work among the sickly, starving poor children of East London has been going on. Our Home has again been opened all the year, and many suffering neglected children have passed through our hands. It is the old tale of want and woe—"The poor ye have with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." Surely it is our duty to do that good while we can, for the need is not one whit the less than when these words were spoken. The Forest Cottage Home is but a tiny drop in the ocean of good done; but if it were taken away, many sufferers would miss it, and much joy would be blotted out from the lives of those with whom joy is very rare.

During the past year 168 children have been cared for at the Home, and by the blessing of God not one has failed to benefit by the loving attention that they have received from the kind matron, Miss Walter. Very often it has been a hard task, and has meant the giving up of self and the sacrificing of comfort and rest to the needs of the little sufferers. It has been willingly done, and I cannot speak too highly of the loving care bestowed upon each child alike. Some children it is a pleasure to tend, for with loving words and shining eyes they express their gratitude, and seek to do all they can to repay the kindness received; and often, after they have left the Home, a loving letter in childish words, and a simple gift, are sent to testify to the love they bear the matron. The gifts are trivial in themselves; but when made or bought with the hard-earned pence of the poor, they are priceless as a testimony of grateful love.

One poor girl sent a pretty bracket, saying, "It is very little, and has been a long time coming; but I have spent my first earnings on it, and I hope you will like it. I know I can never repay you for all your kindness, when you nursed me through my illness at the Home; but I will never forget it." Another poor child, knowing the matron would be at the station on a certain day, changing her lot of rosy-faced children for the pale eager fresh comers, came, bringing a cup of tea in one hand, while on the other arm she carried a heavy baby. "I knew you would be here, Miss Walter, so I have just brought you a cup of tea. I know what a busy day it always is, and how tired you get. Don't I wish I were coming to-day; it is so hot, and baby is so heavy. Do let me come again soon," and the little family nurse watched and chatted while the tea was drunk, and went off to her drudgery with a happy face and hope shining in her eyes at the thought of a half-promised holiday, which we trust, dear friends, you will help us to give, not only to this poor girl, but to many others, who, though young in years, are old in work and care.

It is a curious fact that the children who come from the neighbourhood of Bow are very much behind those of Mile-end and Bethnal Green, or Stepney. Generally speaking the children of Bow are dull, heavy, dirty, difficult to reach, and slow to receive good impressions. They enjoy the good food, and take all that is given and done for them: but there is very little response, and no effort made to help themselves or others; and even the beauties of the Forest and park do not bring that light to the eyes or spring to the step that it does to children from other districts. It only shows the sad state in which these poor children live. There is no green space in Bow, where the hundreds of children of the poor can play; nothing to relieve the dull, depressing, wretched monotony of the hot, dusty ugly streets; nothing but the hotter, closer, more miserable room, in which many of them live their neglected lives, if you can call it living. "Why don't they make grass grow in London?" asked one seven-year-old child, whose delight was simply unbounded when first taken to the Home and Forest and Wanstead Park.

I am sure it would touch your hearts to hear some of the sad tales we listen to. From the one-roomed home of a miserable family, where one child lay dead from starvation, we took a poor hollow-eyed, sunken-cheeked little girl. When she was bathed at the Home we found her covered with bruises, which she afterwards told us she got from her brutal father, who would often come home drunk at night, and, stumbling over to the corner of the room, where she slept on some dirty straw with three other sisters, would kick them awake, and bid them, with curses, get up and fetch him some supper. No matter what time it was, one of the poor children had to get up, and go forth into the dark, cold street, and get him what he wanted. No wonder the poor child's health and strength were about as low as they could be. For six happy weeks little Liza was tended and nursed by matron and doctor, who took a special interest in this poor little sufferer, whose past life had been one of misery. It was so amusing to see her delight over the first egg she had ever eaten in her life, and how eagerly she asked when it would be time for her to have another; and how she used to long for the visits of the good doctor, who would speak to her so kindly as he sat by her bed, and who was often touched with sadness at the tales she told him. When her mother came to see her child, she confirmed with tears what the child had said, and confessed with sorrow that she had often given way to drink from sheer misery; but by God's grace and the help of the kind visitor, she was seeking to lead a better life. Six weeks of happy life made a wondrous change in little Liza, and though she longed to stay always with us, she returned home full of health and hope, and stronger to bear the burden of her sad life.

Several times during the past year it has been our privilege to take poor children away from sad one-roomed homes, where father or mother, worn out with the struggle of life, lay dead, and where life had to go on just the same in presence of that silent grief. Is it not a privilege to help the poor in such straits? I am sure the children appreciate and enjoy the change in their lives. Comforts we are accustomed to think of only as necessaries come to them with such a freshness that it is quite delightful to watch their joy. The warm bath is quite a pleasure to most of them. They never saw such a thing before. "I'm always bathed in a pail," say many of them; and "Oh! it is so nice; I don't want to come out," as they splash about in the abundance of water. One poor crushed little girl, whose experience in baths had never gone beyond a small butter-tub, screamed out in fear, "Oh! murder, I shall be drowned!" but she was quite willing to jump in when next bath night came round. Knives and forks, too, are quite a novelty; so poor are they that there is seldom a use for such things. They eat their slice of bread-and-dripping running about, and count themselves well off to have that. They look with wonder at a cleanly-laid prettily-decorated table, and sit down hardly knowing what to do. One poor child, as she sat at tea, quaintly said: "It is so nice not to have to wait for a drink; I'm really thirsty, and we always have to wait till mother is done, for she has only one cup," and ere she returned home this child begged for three mugs whose handles were broken, and carried them off with great delight, saying, "I shan't have to wait for my tea now."

It has been a great joy to watch the change in many of the children during their stay in the Home. More than one have given their hearts to Christ, and all must have benefited by the simple, bright services which are held on purpose for them. Kind friends come and bring their musical instruments, singing and playing to them on violin and organ, followed by a simple address that all can understand; while the interest is kept up and deepened by asking the children questions, which they readily answer. I thank those kind friends most heartily for the true interest they have shown, and trust that they will long be spared to continue their good work.

Will you not help us again to care for the suffering children of the poor? Think of the heavy burdens that by your means can be lifted from the weary shoulders of overburdened parents; of the joy that can be brought into the darkened lives of many little children; of the precious lessons that may be taught at our little Home, and amidst nature's surroundings; and of the good done for our Saviour's sake, who sends the little child alike to homes of the rich and poor, and bids us remember "that of such is the kingdom of heaven." Five shillings will keep one child in the country for one week, ten shillings a fortnight, one sovereign for four weeks. (MRS.) HELEN J. KERWIN.

The Papacy.

By REV. THOMAS CONNELLAN.

I am to speak upon the most extraordinary system which the world, up to the present time, has made acquaintance with. When the Spaniards conquered Peru they found a system not unlike that submitted for our consideration. The Inca, child of the sun, ruled with a sway absolute and unquestioned. Virgins of the sun, priests, convents, etc., were all in full swing, but through all the land the Inca was regarded as the fountain-source of all power and authority, temporal and spiritual. Pope Clement III. informs us that the sun in the heavens is the symbol and representative of pontifical authority, while the moon, shining with borrowed splendour, symbolises the secular power. According to this theory there is, strictly, but one ruler upon earth—the Pope. In him all authority is centred. From him all jurisdiction flows. At his hands kings receive their crowns and bishops their mitres. To him all are accountable, while he is accountable to no one, save God.

For the sake of order and clearness, we shall consider this matter under three heads:—

Firstly. The genesis of Romanism, its origin and primitive development.

Secondly. The secrets and sources of its extraordinary influence upon the carnal man.

Thirdly. Its present aims and the weapons of its warfare.

It is an indisputable historical fact that this system, which at one time overshadowed the world, had a merely human origin. The New Testament is conclusive on the point that Paul, not Peter, laid the foundations of the Roman congregation. During the first Christian century the presbyter, or bishop of Rome, for these two titles were employed to describe the same office, had spiritual oversight only over his own congregation. In the second century a custom sprang up of regulating the ranks of bishop by the importance of the cities in which they resided. Rome was mistress of the world. All roads led to the city on the seven hills. Pagan Rome had exercised sway over the nations of the world, and the spectacle of her centralised and universal despotism would seem to have suggested to the aspiring bishops of the capital the first ideas of a spiritual empire alike centralised and universal. If the occupant of the temporal throne had been a king of kings, why should not the occupant of the spiritual throne be a bishop of bishops? Even so late as the Council of Chalcedon, A.D. 451, the assembled bishops to Leo, Bishop of Rome, except what was due to him as presbyter of the imperial city, "The fathers justly conferred the dignity on the throne of the presbyter of Rome, because that was the imperial city." When Pilate inquired of Christ, "Art Thou the King of the Jews?" he received for answer, "My kingdom is not of this world." The "Presbyter of Rome" in the fourth century discovered a method of reconciling God and Mammon.

CONCEDED NO PRECEDENCE

Under Constantine the empire was divided into four prefectures. These were subdivided into provinces, and these again into dioceses. The ecclesiastical was fashioned after the civil model, and hence we are now introduced to patriarchs, metropolitans, and bishops, or rulers of dioceses. We search in vain through the New Testament for the two former, and the latter is mentioned only as synonymous with presbyter. At first, Rome, Antioch, and Alexandria were the patriarchal sees. Then Constantinople was added, and placed second in dignity, because it was the seat of the Emperor. The Saracens soon wiped out Alexandria and Antioch. The Turks did the same for Constantinople, so that in process of time the Bishop of Rome found himself without a rival.

In the year 378 came the law of Gratian and Valentinian II., empowering the metropolitans to judge the inferior clergy, and the Bishop of Rome to judge the metropolitans. This law was addressed to the Prefects of Gaul and Italy. It came, of course from a purely worldly source. The Bishop of Rome and his subordinates at once acted upon it, and never once claimed a spiritual authority for their newly-found jurisdiction. The entire West submitted to this law with the exception of the Celtic Church in Ireland and Britain. In 445 came the edict of Valentinian III. and Theodosius II., in which the Roman Pontiff is styled the "director of all Christendom"—"rector totius Ecclesiæ." Pope Leo is supposed to have inspired this decree. Finally we find a decree from the Emperor Phocas, issued in 606, constituting Boniface III. Universal Bishop. Here again there is not a shred of claim to Divine authority. It was the hand of a murderer which encircled the brow of Boniface with

THE MITRE OF UNIVERSAL EPISCOPACY.

The Papacy had now a legal existence. Its power and influence shot up and flourished so rapidly that the civil power which had given it birth began to take alarm. But it was too late. Like a magician who forgets his spell, the civic power which had created the Papacy was unable to lay the spectre it had evoked. In due time the Western empire fell, and then only did the Bishop of Rome begin to search for titles in support of his newly acquired power. The Apostle Paul had clearly foretold all this, "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed" (2 Thess. ii. 7).

Now we hear, for the first time, of the Pope's claim to universal dominion, because of his succession to the "blessed Peter." Pope Gelasius (492 to 496) informs the world that it became kings to learn their duty from bishops, but especially from the "Vicar of Blessed Peter." The same Pope proclaims at a Roman Council, A.D. 495, that "to the see of Rome belonged the primacy in virtue of Christ's own delegation, and that from the authority of the keys there was excepted none living, but only the dead." In due time, as we shall see, even the dead were brought under the power of the keys, but Rome was now in process of what Newman called "development." We may well ask, if the primacy came to the Pope from Christ's delegation, how did he come to accept it from the blood-stained hands of Phocas? But the emperor had ceased to be a power in the West, and so Divine Right was put in his place.

But one thing more was wanted—namely, that the "Presbyter of Rome" should step into the vacant throne of the Cæsars, and the "Prince of this World" soon made even that step easy for his subordinate. The last of the Merovingian kings had been hurled from the throne of France, and Pepin, the late mayor of the Palace, sat in his place. Pope Zachary, pressed on all sides by enemies, wrote to Pepin to come over and help. An usurper catches at a straw, and even the Pope's countenance and sanction was a welcome acquisition to Pepin. He crossed the Alps, defeated the Lombards, and bestowed the sovereignty of their country upon the Pope. This was in 755. Charlemagne, Pepin's son, confirmed and enlarged the gifts of his father. In return Pope Leo III. on Christmas Eve, A.D. 800, placed upon his (Charlemagne's) head the crown of the Western Empire. Formerly the election of Pope was confirmed by the Emperor: now the election of Emperor was confirmed by the Pope. Vandals, Ostrogoths, and Lombards were slaughtered, and their countries made over to the "Presbyter of Rome." Leo probably did not know sufficient of Daniel to realise how literally he was fulfilling the prophet's forecast. Three horns were here plucked up to make room for a little horn.

Here, then, we behold the "mystery of iniquity" in full swing. The Pope is no longer the "Presbyter of Rome." He has got his mitre from the murderer Phocas, and his crown from the usurper Pepin. "All these things will I give Thee," said the devil to Christ, "if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." But the reply then was, "Get thee hence, Satan." The tempter returned some centuries later, and leading the Roman Pontiff to the top of the Capitoline Hill, said, "All the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." The Pontiff is quickly upon his knees, and the contract speedily ratified.

THE STUNDIST PERSECUTIONS.

By A LADY STUNDIST.

During last year the Russian Evangelical Christians called Stundists were deprived of the last vestige of the protection which they should enjoy as Russian subjects. In September the Minister of the Interior published an Order declaring them to be the most dangerous of all sects, wherefore they are henceforth to be deprived of all rights and exterminated. In this Order they were accused of "rejecting the authorities, denouncing war, refusing to take part in military service, and spreading Socialistic views with regard to property." Those acquainted with the Stundists know very well that they are the most peaceable and industrious of citizens; they obey all the orders of the Czar, and only refuse to subject themselves to those rites and ceremonies of the Greek Church which are opposed to the Word of God. On the strength of the Order referred to, the persecution of the Stundists has increased in severity.

To give greater effect to the Order, a secret circular was issued in November by the Ministerial Committee in St. Petersburg, prohibiting the holding of prayer meetings by Stundists; these meetings being specified as "the principal source of the spread of the dangerous Stundism." In consequence the people have been hunted by the police, their movements being closely watched. At Elisabetpol, in Transcaucasia, to which so many of the Stundists have been exiled, the condition of things is sad in the extreme. Destitute and sick, the exiles find themselves in new surroundings, and among people speaking a language they do not understand, and nearly all of them Mohammedans. They are not able to earn more than about three halfpence a day, so slow starvation invites the release of death. In the region known as Little Russia, the persecutions have taken a violent form, many of the Stundists having been forcibly taken to Orthodox churches, and compelled to kneel before the pictures of saints and kiss the cross. Those who have combined resistance with refusal have been imprisoned and banished. After proceedings of this character, the official press announces the return of Stundists to the Orthodox church!

Some extracts from a letter written in January last from Caucasia will be read with interest. Having quoted 1 John iii. 16, "Hereby know we love, because He laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren," the writer said: "The Lord's work among us is on the whole prosperous, in this sense, that the brethren, in spite of all prosecution, do not allow themselves to get discouraged. Many have been banished, but they take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and endure patiently all kinds of sorrows and sufferings for the truth sake. Many workers for Christ show the same zeal and energy as previously, and are always prepared even to die for the truth, if it should be necessary.

"Our Evangelical churches all over Russia count not by tens, but by hundreds, and are so organised that their spiritual life is developing. There are many thirsty and awakened souls, and, praised be the Lord, their number is growing year by year. But, it must be added, all these churches, consisting of simple and uneducated Russian peasants, require fostering care. They are young, and as yet unable to stand without help. It is true that a few of our brethren have means, but how many? Five or six, to several thousands of the poor, who are unable to satisfy even the most essential wants of our churches. We must also bear in mind that many heads of families and others, who are banished, cannot support even their nearest relatives, and a large number of us are being summoned before the courts, and have to pay high fees to advocates.

"If our brethren in Sweden, Germany, England, and the United States would help us at the present time, they would not be losers. How can we rejoice when we read about the costly houses of worship in some lands, while we have not even a hut to live in, but have to meet for prayer in stables, or, for want of even such places, cannot have any meeting at all?"

The Late Rev. Richard Chew.

The United Methodist Free Churches have recently sustained a great loss in the death of Rev. R. Chew, of Sheffield. This loss is felt all the more, inasmuch as it followed on the death of another prominent minister, Rev. M. T. Myers, of Rochdale, formerly of London. These two men, though unlike in mental characteristics, had both done good service; and, singularly enough, they were the only two men who had twice filled the presidential chair. The loss of each is deeply regretted and will be long felt.

Richard Chew was born at Ramsbottom, Lancashire, in February, 1827. He early became consecrated to God, and, having been recommended by the Bury Circuit, was received into the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodist Association when twenty years of age. In all the Methodist denominations ministers have to undergo a probationary course. Mr. Chew's novitiate was long. He was not recognised as a fully-accredited minister until he had served for eight years. At a later period he was chiefly instrumental in the abolition of a system which inflicted so severe a probation on all candidates for the itinerant ministry.

In 1857 the union of the Association with the Wesleyan Reformers took place, and the Connexion known as the United Methodist Free Churches was formed. Mr. Chew was too young at the time to be a factor in the formation of the new body, but he soon became favourably known. In every great movement after 1857 he was prominent, and eventually his counsels became predominant in all legislative or administrative action.

There is an impression on some minds that church leaders acquire their authority by questionable means; that they are men of policy rather than of principle; that they take advantage of the weaknesses of men, and flatter, threaten, or cajole, according to circumstances; that they appeal to men's prejudices or passions rather than to their reason, and aim at victory rather than at truth. Nothing could be more untrue of Mr. Chew than such representations. He made no florid or fervent appeals, for he was singularly cool and unimpassioned—logic personified, not rhetoric. But he had a sound judgment, and to his clear insight he united forceful expression. Moreover, his sincerity was manifest. He fulfilled the condition, "An orator must be a good man." All who heard him felt that he sought to convince men of what he felt to be true. It is said that votes in the House of Commons are seldom affected by the speeches that are made. This could not be truthfully said of past Annual Assemblies of the United Methodists. Sometimes it was doubtful how a matter would turn until Mr. Chew had spoken. When he resumed his seat anybody could predict how it would end. He gained his brethren's votes because he carried their convictions.

It might not interest readers of The Christian to enumerate the matters of interior administration with which Mr. Chew had to deal during his long ministry of forty-eight years. We may, however, mention some of the more public movements with which his name is identified. It was on his motion that a Foreign Missionary Committee was first appointed. He was active in the establishment of an institute for the training of ministers, and ever since it was opened he was annually elected one of its governors. He was one of the founders of Ashville College, a school for the education of ministers' and laymen's sons; and, at his death, he had held the office of secretary to the college for nine years. His legislative tact was displayed in recent negotiations with a view to union with the Methodist New Connexion. Even those members of the United Committee who thought it their duty to thwart the proposals were struck by his statesmanlike powers. At last Assembly he was prominent in a new movement for the training of the young.

While thus active in all denominational affairs, it is right to say he was a diligent and successful Circuit minister. He did not need to confess, "Mine own vineyard have I not kept." Circuits know how their ministers serve them, and in Sheffield, Hanover, where Mr. Chew died, he had laboured in two terms of ministry—ten years.

His powers as a preacher of the Gospel were not so transcendent as his governing powers. In respect of preaching ability he had many compeers, though, in his own denomination, not many superiors. Yet, though he never attained pre-eminence here, he was an excellent and a successful preacher. He sometimes subdivided too much, running into a number of minute particulars rather than enforcing a few main truths. This was a defect; and not being an emotional man, militated also against his widest acceptance. Yet there was always a glow of earnestness, though seldom a gush of feeling. In the pulpit it was the grand old Gospel that he preached. He had no theological novelties to present. He believed in Rowland Hill's three R's: Ruin by the fall; Redemption by Christ, and Regeneration by the Spirit of God. In preaching these he felt he had scope and verge enough. He was admirable on the platform, and a master in debate.

Mr. Chew, though a frequent contributor to the denominational serials, did not do much in the way of authorship. He wrote, however, the lives of two notable men with whom he was on terms of intense friendship, viz., Revs. James Everett and William Griffith.

For many years Mr. Chew was the official examiner of ministerial candidates and probationers; and at last annual assembly he was designated Principal of the Theological Institute, to enter on his new duties in August, 1895. This election was grateful to him. It was on the line of his past studies, and he thought it would enable him to continue in active service for a time so that he might give to the Connexion fifty years of work. But his Master had otherwise determined, and on Friday, April 12, he fell asleep in Jesus. We believe he has received the Master's well done.

THE MILDMAY MISSION HOSPITAL.

The important work being done by the Bethnal Green Mission Hospital associated with Mildmay has often been noticed in our pages. The new report shows that 431 indoor patients were received last year in the hospital, while 5319 outdoor patients were treated, and 363 were visited in their own homes by the physician. Many deeply interesting and most encouraging incidents are narrated in the fresh report, as evidencing the remarkable way in which God continues to bless the work, both in the men's and women's wards, as also among the children. From these incidents we select one:—"A poor man who had been brought to the Saviour some years before in the hospital, was being taken in a cab to the infirmary, accompanied by a friend. The cabman was very kind, giving up his cushion to make the sick man comfortable. On the return journey the friend was asked by the cabman, 'Are you a teetotaller?' 'Yes,' was the reply. 'Are you anything more?' 'Yes,' he answered, 'I have got a Master.' 'Who is your Master?' 'Jesus Christ,' was the answer. 'And He is mine, too,' was the rejoinder. 'Some time ago I was in the hospital, and the doctor sent me to Barnet. I got converted, and since then I have got a cab of my own and two horses.'" Another man, who was brought to the truth years ago in the hospital, had the joy lately of seeing his wife deciding for Christ while coming to us as an out-patient. Their only child—a girl—the mother believes to be a true Christian also. Thus the good work spreads, through the blessing of God, from one member of a family to another.

We note that of the fifty beds and cots, only two are as yet endowed, while a third has its endowment almost completed. A good many are either wholly or partially supported, but for more than half the number no definite provision has yet been made.

The work among the out-patients has gone on steadily during the year, and much encouragement has been given in it. The number seen at the dispensary is limited on Tuesdays and Fridays to about 150. The attendance at the surgery on the other days has much increased, and often there are forty or fifty men, women and children, to be seen and attended to for surgical dressings, bandaging, etc. Daily, before the work is begun, there is a short service of Scripture reading and prayer—the main truths of the Gospel and man's duty in regard to them being earnestly and lovingly pressed.

The Women's Bible-class has an average attendance of 100, while the Gospel services are most encouraging. The Ossulston Convalescent Home at High Barnet, supported by Lord and Lady Tankerville, has been for many years an unspeakable blessing to thousands of the poor of the Mildmay Missions throughout London, and a special help and valuable supplement to their hospital work.

The General Mission operations of varied character carried on at the Mission House in Church-street are full of interest. It is noted that from among the inmates of the lodging-house trophies of grace have been won. The work of the Men's Institute is well maintained.

This work must commend itself fully to the Lord's people. The report may be had of the treasurer, Col. J. F. Morton, the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

THE BASLE MISSION has published some encouraging statistics of its operations in India, China, the Cameroons, and the Gold Coast. It is in the last-named region that the work of the Mission has been specially productive. The population in West Africa is more easily influenced than that in the great Oriental empires with their hoary religions and caste barriers. Thus on the Gold Coast the Gospel has become a mighty power, the number of Christians (13,036) having doubled during the last decade. In India the Mission has twenty-three stations, with 11,903 converts, whereas in China the converts number 4071, and in the Cameroons 1103, making a total of 30,200 Christians under the pastoral care of the missionaries.

The Evangelist.

HOW TO CONQUER SIN.

One afternoon I was trudging up the hill from Gallows Inn to Ilkeston, a thriving little town in Derbyshire, when a seedily-dressed working man accosted me. I was behind time, hurrying to keep an appointment, and as he looked like a tramp I offered him a penny, without waiting to hear what he had to say. My charity was rejected.

"I don't want your money, sir." There was a slight accent of contempt in his tone. "I want your help."

"It isn't quite clear what you mean," I replied. "How can I give you help?"

"You see that?" He pointed angrily to a roadside inn about a hundred yards from where we stood, an attractive little hostel, with a gay sign suspended over the invitingly open door. "Take hold of my arm tight, will you? I want to get to my lodgings sober this time. Lead me past that public-house."

I laughed; the request was absurd, and the situation altogether ridiculous. I began to chide the dejected one for his weakness. "Haven't you a will of your own? Surely you can walk straight on if you try. The landlord will not throw a rope round your body and drag you in by main force. Be a man! Act with resolution!" The poor fellow was disappointed. I saw in a moment that I had hurt his feelings. It was sympathy he needed, not reproof; so I changed my manner, and proceeded in a more persuasive way:—"Well, I really think, if I were you, and the drink had become so very masterful, I would give it up. Whatever may be said for those who are able to take the stuff in moderation, there is no sense in you having anything to do with it." Then I commenced cautiously to descant upon the advantages of total abstinence. With ebullient impatience he stopped me.

"I know all about it, guv'nor; mayhap, I know more nor you can tell me. I've come from Whitby, and when I was there, for seven months I was teetotal; yes, for seven clear months."

"And did you get a notion that teetotalism wasn't agreeing with your health, or anything of that sort? If you had persevered, your system would soon have become accustomed to it, and you would have picked up your strength again quickly."

"Stay, you are wrong again; them was the seven blessedest months of my life!"

"By all that is strange, then, why did you break?"

"I'll tell you. It was company what did it. Yes, I was all right at Whitby; there was guardian angels at Whitby! There was a church parson and his wife and daughter, and they kept a sort of open house for us, with papers and games, and sometimes a bit o' singing! It was like as though someone was always at your elbow to keep you straight, and there was no getting away from them neither. I remember, one night, a feeling came over me that I'd like a sup o' whisky—just threepen'orth on the sly—but as I was turning into the 'Goat and Compasses,' I felt a pull at my sleeve, and, looking round, who should I see but Miss Lucy! It fairly knocked me over; it was like magic. Read this."

I took from the hand of the inebriate a soiled letter; it was produced from many wrappings, and looked like a missive that had been read through and wept over again and again. It ran somewhat as follows:—

"Dear John,—You will be sorry to learn that my loving mother has passed away. She has gone to be with Jesus. It was on the last day, and while she was waiting for the Saviour to come and take her to Himself, that she thought about you. She said, 'I wonder how John is getting on. I have often prayed for him. I do hope he is keeping his pledge.' Then she asked me to find your address and see you, or write you. I am keeping my promise to her, John, by sending this letter. Never drink again. May the thought of my mother recur to you when you are tempted. I shall be glad to hear from you. I have great faith in your power of endurance. I please myself by thinking sometimes about the increase of happiness that has come to you—the blessed change that was brought about by the promise you made us, never more to touch or taste the intoxicating cup. And you are keeping the promise, John, are you not? You were so sincere and earnest when you made it. We all wish you well. My father was wondering this morning how you are getting on. With much sympathy and Christian goodwill, yours truly, Lucy W——."

All the pitiful feeling of which I am capable set toward the poor wreck of a man who stood beside me. He had been almost saved, and yet appeared to be altogether lost; he had tried to get out of the slough, and a helping hand had been extended to uplift him. The struggle had ended dismally, and down into the deeper depths of degration he had sunken once more. I slipped my arm within that of my new but disreputable acquaintance, drew him under my umbrella—it was showery weather—and turned aside from the public road into a quiet country lane. He continued his story:—

"Yes, as I was saying, up in the North there was always somebody at my elbow to keep me straight. But when the contract the gaffer had there was finished a lot of us was obliged to leave. I came on into this country. It was lonely. At nights I didn't know what to do with myself; the other chaps went to the 'King's Head' Mondays, Fridays, and Saturdays, to a 'free-and-easy.' I held out for a bit. Worse luck, Blind Aleck, the fiddler, turns up. I'm powerful fond o' the fiddle, and I knew Aleck when I was a boy. It was more nor I could stand. I mind it well: a wet afternoon last November; it was dark and cold; but as I was passing the 'King's Head' I could see the gases was alight, and a fire was blazing in the bar-parlour grate, and the old man drew the bow across the fiddle string, and it pulled. The strain of 'Bonnie Annie Laurie' pulled, I tell you, and I seemed to half know it was hell I was going in to, but it was a merry laughing hell just then, and I couldn't help, I couldn't help."

It was well that we had reached a secluded part of the narrow miry lane, and were some distance from the busier thoroughfare in which we met, for my companion, becoming excited with the telling of his story, had raised his voice, and was speaking with some show of passion.

"Look!" he continued, and he thrust his hand under his crumpled shirt front, and drew forth from where it had been resting, next his skin and pressed to his bosom, a little ivory crucifix. "They gave me this when I was leaving Whitby—Miss Lucy did. They said I was to wear it, that it would hold me true to my promise, that it would keep me from falling away. It's lost its charm, sir; it's lost its charm." The voice of the speaker was husky, but charged with emotion. His faith in his fetish had almost gone. "You don't think there's any good in it, do you?" I was reluctant to answer. It seemed to me, that though that little ivory relic had been invested with a virtue of which it was destitute, I could not speak of it contemptuously without giving pain to the poor fellow, who had so long regarded it with veneration. Yet it was desirable that he should know the truth. I had a Gospel for him; so, after a moment's hesitation, I spoke according to the faith I have—spoke slowly, and perhaps with an impressiveness of manner of which I was unconscious.

"It isn't a Christ like that, on the cross in ivory, that helps a man; but a living Christ, who is able to enter your heart and abide there. You have heard about the good Saviour, I suppose? He died that He might save, and now He lives to help. He is able to control you, and make you do right, even with everything against you." I had a most sympathetic listener. I cannot recall much of what I said to him. I know I talked about the grace which is all-sufficient. I remember we prayed, as we stood side by side under the umbrella in the drizzly rain. He got safely past the place of danger; we separated, and have never seen each other since.

Thousands upon thousands are in the same plight as that poor fellow was when I met him—are in moral servitude of a most degrading kind—and it is useless to lecture and reprove them, for they are keenly and painfully sensible of their abject condition, and unless Divine energy is applicable to vitalise and intensify the weak will, we might as well hold our peace. But to every man, down and trodden upon, and under the heel of the oppressor, the Christ of God appeals: "Bruised and fallen one, you have tried to break your fetters and have failed. Trust Me, and I will help you. I will inspire you with my own mighty and invincible Spirit, and you shall be gloriously free." I speak of what I know. Multitudes have taken the Saviour at his word; they seemed to have no mind, no will of their own, their nobleness, all but a few traces of it, gone, but they said they would let Him save them and He has done so. To-day they are on their feet, the ruling passion, greed, lust, spitefulness, love of gambling or love of drink, is strong as it used to be, but they are stronger: "more than conquerors through Him that loved them."

Arthur C. Perriam.

AMONG JAPANESE SOLDIERS.

By MISS H. M. BROWNE.

During the time the Second Division was in Hiroshima, one preaching place was kept open eight days and another twenty days, from three to six o'clock in the afternoon, for the special benefit of the soldiers. At the former place three Bible-women and myself did what we could on the Sabbath forenoon. It was a hotel of two large rooms, and conversation was opened with the group in each room, and in the back room kept up for several hours. Two of us distributed tracts to the coolies in two of the temples. One tract was taken by a man, who became deeply interested, and he took it to an evangelist with ten marked places which he did not fully understand, and inquired more fully of him. On my second or third visit to one of the wards of the Second Branch Hospital, thirteen men asked for New Testaments, some saying, "Be sure to send them before we leave the hospital to-morrow afternoon." On my next call at this ward, three more were asked for. I told the men I could not give them New Testaments to be soon cast aside. But they all insisted that they really wished to study and use them.

In one of the wards a man mysteriously beckoned to us. On going near, he said, "What is this Christ and the Christian doctrine?" I want to know." Very many say, after hearing a few minutes, "Ah, we never knew before; we can't believe until we hear." We can hardly count the invitations to come again that we have had from patients and nurses. On remarking to one man that he looked quite ill, he replied, "Yes, this is my last journey." I at once gave him the tract I had in my hand, "Guide to Eternal Life." I visited him two or three times afterwards, and at each visit found his perception of the truth increasing, and hope and joy in his face. The truth seemed to take fast hold of him.

Another man, from a tract first, and then a book concerning faith, became an earnest believer. The other men of the ward laugh good-naturedly at him for being so zealous, but that does not deter him. His inquiries roused an inactive Christian nurse in the same ward to explain the New Testament to him every day. From this another nurse obtained a New Testament, and says he is going to believe, and a patient who at first did not care to receive a tract even, asked me for something that would explain the truth, for he wanted to examine into it. Christian talk in that ward seems to have become as common as the news of the day.

The man so in earnest has got two friends who visited him to study the Bible, and says, "I must go home soon and get the people of my village to believe." On my remarking that he must become well grounded himself first, he replied, rather astonished, "Why, it will never do for me to believe this alone; I must tell them."

A NOTABLE MOVEMENT IN JAVA.

By Mr. J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

A very interesting work is in progress at Modjowarno, in the eastern end of this island, rendered all the more so by the fact that it is the outcome, not of a mission, but of a faithful life of a humble shopkeeper. Half a century ago, the son of a Russian colonist and a Javanese woman, who kept a rice shop in a nominally Mohammedan village, was converted in consequence of a dream that God had called him to evangelise the natives. This he forthwith commenced, and the Mohammedan teachers being aroused, he summoned them to a public discussion. Public opinion decided in favour of the Christian, whose disciples a large number at once became. Their teacher, Mr. Coolen, hesitated, however, to baptize the converts, but in a neighbouring town was found a German watchmaker, who was a Christian, who with success urged them to take this step, performing the rite for many of them.

But trials followed, and the converts decided to emigrate to another district, where, being freed from the superstition in which they had been brought up, they made a clearing in a forest, which, in the belief that it was haunted, had been left to the tigers. A hundred or so here established the Christian village of Modjowarno, and at their request the Dutch Reformed Mission sent them as teacher in 1851 Mr. Jellesma, whose modest hut, now the back part of a native pastor's house, I had the pleasure of visiting.

From this beginning has grown a prosperous settlement of some 2500 Christians and their children, besides about a thousand more in eight out-stations. It was still more encouraging to learn that most of

THE CONVERTS BECAME EVANGELISTS.

There are eight unordained native preachers, who are supported by the local church, which, in addition, recently raised 16,000 gulden (£1333), towards a total of 26,000 gulden (£2166), expended on new church, school and hospital buildings, to which also the natives contributed all the locally-supplied material, and much free labour.

The hospital has recently been opened, but medical work has long been carried on by Mr. Kruyt, who, though a layman from a medical point of view, was able to alleviate the suffering of many thousands annually, till Dr. Bervoets took over the work last year.

In the schools, with 725 pupils, no foreign languages are taught, not even Dutch, only Javanese and Malay, as the object is to strengthen the native Christian Church, not to Europeanise. Useful handicrafts are, however, included in the curriculum, and there is a special class for those who wish to become teachers. All the various buildings, including the homes of several native pastors and teachers, are grouped together in an unenclosed spot, through which a high road with a steam tram now runs, and the villagers feel that they are theirs, and make themselves at home throughout. Several such Christian colonies as this have been established in various parts of Java.

A very interesting sight was the kindergarten, the toys and exercises designed entirely by natives, and it was a great disappointment that clouds prevented the use of my kodak on them. Some of the youngsters played native bamboo instruments and drums, to the time of which the others went through their performances. The idea of letting natives thus employ their own invention with native materials is an excellent one, worth recommending elsewhere. Not only is their personal interest deepened, but the apparatus is cheaper and much more easily renewed. We are apt to import too many Western notions into mission work abroad.

Such a work as this—a native growth from one civilian's faithful planting—suggests the advisability of more self-supporting Christians going forth to heathen lands. Their influence is great, as they are not open to the charge of being professional religionists employed for money. In Soerakarta, the capital of one of the Mohammedan kingdoms of Java, where missionaries are prohibited from working by treaty with the Dutch, I had an encouraging instance of this. Every inquiry elsewhere having failed to ascertain the address of Dr. Schoerer, who as medical man has been permitted to take up his residence there recently, I was recommended at the post-office to call on Mr. Kuchenius, manager of the Java Bank, as

A MAN WHO KNOWS ALL ABOUT MISSIONS.

I was not disappointed, for I found a really earnest brother, a bright shining light. On his office desk lay the latest issue of The Christian, which afforded a pleasant introduction, and I soon obtained the information I sought. Mr. Kuchenius was overjoyed to meet a traveller who took an interest in Christian work, and the writer was still more so to find a man in that position so faithful a witness.

"Ah," said he, "if we only had a few more lay Christians here, such as you have in British India, where you have such noble men and women, who must be a great help to mission work."

I was not astonished to learn subsequently that Mr. Kuchenius preached the Gospel in Malay, and every Sunday might be seen going, Bible in hand, to read in a filthy hut outside the town to a poor blind lame man. From the position he holds he is the head and side of every local movement or enterprise, and no one can tell what his influence means. Two of his brothers, equally faithful, manage two other branches of the Java Bank. His father it was who, as colonial secretary, sent the official request to the Netherlands Missionary Societies to increase their agencies in the Dutch East Indies (with a view to counteracting the spread of anti-Dutch Mohammedanism) which made such an impression at the Missionary Conference in 1888. Later on, as Prime Minister, the same man preached the Gospel in the Holland Parliament, standing Bible in hand, to refer to it as the basis of every law, and boldly proclaiming "Of Him whom millions serve as they have served none other, I have the honour to be the slave." A brother of his, an uncle therefore of the Mr. Kuchenius whom I met, was formerly Dutch Resident in Soerakarta, and when after years of work he was recalled, he said in his farewell speech, "Gentlemen, I know why I leave you; I have urged on you a way too strait for you, but by the grace of God I stand here to-night to tell you once more that there is salvation in no other than Jesus Christ."

Well may we praise God for such a family.

EARTHQUAKE IN FLORENCE.

For many centuries Florence has not experienced so severe an earthquake as the one felt on Saturday, May 18. Just previous to the shock, dogs began to bark, horses to neigh, some even broke loose, as if aware a convulsion of nature was about to take place. Suddenly and fearfully it came on us all. We could hardly at first realise what it was. Many believed it was the end of the world; others that it was a gas explosion, or a bomb, or some infernal machine.

Men, women, and children rushed down the stairs of their houses, one on the top of the other, frantic, in an agony of terror, seized with panic, out into the streets and open squares. Chimneys fell, strong walls were cracked, some ceilings gave way, ornaments and crockery fell in every direction, pictures hung aslant on the walls, clocks stopped, heavy furniture upheaved, people knocked down, lamps swayed to and fro, all seemed dancing and moving around. It was a time of horror never to be forgotten.

One poor woman, with her infant ten days old, had her bed moved from its place and then swung back again. Our baker's child had a miraculous escape from imminent death, for a chimney fell on their bed. In a house close to us three floors came down; fortunately most of the inmates were unhurt. Many camped out in the squares. One party had a table carried out into the Piazza Cavour, and spent their time playing at cards. Some went about the street singing patriotic songs, possibly thinking by so doing to give courage to the people.

A little English girl, the daughter of a Baptist minister, begged her father to preach to the people that "in the risks of life they should be prepared." A lady who lives on the upper floor of a very high house where the shock was felt with great intensity, bore all with heroic calmness. Her husband said, "Are you calm, my dear?" She answered, "Yes; I am praying." God was her strength in that terrible moment, when a fearful death seemed to yawn before us all. When earth is failing, we know we have a building not made with hands eternal in the heavens.

At Miss Robert's (medical missionary) the ceiling of one little room came down; fortunately the caretaker had vacated it only some minutes before, or she would probably have been killed. Many houses are in danger, ready to fall if another earthquake of the kind were to occur. We have many slight shocks, and more they say may occur, but the great danger now is believed to be over. God is with us. We are in his hand, and nothing can separate us from his love, who is our refuge and strength during the time when we have entered into the experience of Moses when Mount Sinai shook at the voice of God, and Moses said "I exceedingly fear and quake."

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

I had the great pleasure, with my sister, of passing some weeks in the happy mission home of Pastor and Mdme. Lopez-Rodriguez, at Figueras, in the province of Gerona. The Mission buildings are very compact and convenient, being situated in one of the best streets of the town. The large hall is bright and airy, and it was a pleasure to see so many men and women gathered on the Sunday evenings to hear the Gospel preached and join in singing hymns, which they did very heartily. The Sabbath school meets in the afternoon and is well attended, the pastor usually giving the address at the close with blackboard illustrations. The day schools are built above the church, one for boys, the other for girls, and the early training on Sundays and weekdays which these children are receiving is one of the most hopeful parts of the Mission. On Sunday mornings two bands of Mission workers start for neighbouring villages to conduct Sabbath schools in them also, and they quietly persevere, even though discouraged by many difficulties.

At the back of the hall the new medical mission premises have been erected, where a doctor attends twice a week. Some of the workers speak to the patients and distribute tracts while they are waiting, and thus access is gained to many who could not otherwise be reached. Funds are still required to clear off the debt on these premises. We met three of the evangelists, who work under the pastor's supervision. Each lives in a town or village as his headquarters, from which he visits the places round about, preaching, giving tracts, and trying to find openings to do good. The pastor longs to have more of these agents; the villages are so numerous and yet scattered that the work of visiting them is very arduous. The pastor and his brother, Don Alexander, carry on meetings in a number of places round Figueras weekly or fortnightly. We went to several of these, and were much interested in seeing the nice little halls so clean and tidy, perhaps an upper room of a small 'fonda,' or the largest room of a dwelling-house. We drove to San Pedro Pescador, a fishing village some eight or nine miles off, one afternoon with the pastor, and it was pleasant to see the warm greetings he got from the converts.

Madame Rodriguez, aided by the young lady workers, had a large mothers' meeting, weekly at Figueras, and another at a village near, but one of the brightest gatherings of all was the Thursday prayer meeting, held in their own house, when some seventy or eighty men, women, and children, assembled like a large family as if glad to meet, and bound by a common bond of sympathy and brotherhood. How little we in this free country can understand the isolated position of such a little flock from the ignorance and intolerance that surround them; and how apt we are to forget the debt of gratitude we owe under God, for our liberty, to the resolute courage and strong wills of our Protestant ancestors. THE PROTESTANT PRESS ASSOCIATION.—In connection with the Roman Catholic Church in Great Britain, there is an agency called "The Apostolate of the Press," the members of which watch Papal interests in the journalistic world. The Protestant Press Association has been organised to perform a similar service to the cause of the Reformation. Members undertake to supply reports of matters affecting Protestant interests, and to rebut attacks upon Protestantism, and expose Romish errors and assumptions. A register will be kept of all who are willing to co-operate, and ladies are invited to bear a part. Further particulars may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. C. F. Henwood, 27, Bouverie-street, E.C.

MAY MEETINGS.

Bowron House Deaconesses.

At the fourth anniversary of the Bowron House, the Free Methodist Deaconess' Institute, in Pimlico, S.W., addresses bearing on the work of the Deaconesses were given by Mrs. Lees, organising secretary of the Women's Union, Sisters Lily, Annie, Ella, and Beatrice.

In the evening, Mr. J. A. Bowron, one of the founders, presided. The report stated that last year there were associated with the work two lady officers and fifteen Sisters. Now the number of sisters has increased to twenty-two. Sister Emmie, who is preparing for foreign mission work, has been at the Institute two years. The Sisters Lily, Ella, Annie, Alice, and Beatrice are labouring in connection with Churches or Mission stations at Leeds, Sunderland, Ipswich, Shoreditch, and Shaw, near Rochdale. Others had been engaged in evangelistic work and district visitation. The work of the past two years had so impressed the committee with the help the Sisters can render the country churches that it is fully persuaded the agency will be of greater service to the Connexion in the villages.

The Chairman expressed his pleasure at the great success of the movement. In an interesting way he told the history of the inception of the Institution, which was started by his brother and himself in memory of their father. Later in the evening he told how that when his father was a class-leader in London one of the Queen's servants was a member, and on her being persecuted by some of her fellow-servants the Queen paid a visit one day to the class to see how it was conducted. Mrs. Lees gave an account of a remarkable mission she had been conducting through Cornwall. She, however, pleaded for the churches to make more preparation before a mission to conserve the results. Rev. Andrew Mearns said that he believed in the work of women. There was much work, especially in London, that could only be done by them. He further believed in the Sisters being trained for the work, and therefore had great faith in such institutions as Bowron House.

National Protestant Church Union.

The annual meeting of this Union was pronounced an undoubted success, affording evidence of the vitality of the organisation. Viscount Midleton, who presided, devoted his opening address largely to Lord Halifax's recent address and the Pope's letter, and closed by maintaining that without distinct compromise of principle, without giving up those very truths which underlie the whole fabric of the Reformation, it is utterly impossible that anything in the shape of a union with Rome—as the Archbishop of Canterbury, in reply to our memorial, ably pointed out in curt but dignified language—it is utterly impossible that any union between the two Churches can take place.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe began by declaring, "there can never be re-union with Rome while Rome remains what she is," and proceeded to show the impossibility, so long as we are faithful to God, of any compromise with Rome. In the course of a stirring address he said that those who are hankering after re-union do not realise that the condition of re-union would be absolute submission on the part of the Protestant Church of England. Now, the question is whether we are prepared to send back in all tenderness and firmness from every part of this land our determined utterance, which shall reach even the Pope's ears, that we as a people are exactly as independent as our forefathers were, that we know nothing of the possibility of an abatement of one of the privileges that our fathers have bestowed upon us, and that to ask us to accept his indulgences, to accept the doctrine of the Holy Rosary, to accept the Virgin Mary as our Holy Mother, is simply, though he does not mean it, an insult to the people of England. To that letter must go the decisive answer from the north and south and east and west of this land, that we will have none of the proposed conditions of re-union, God helping us, as long as this nation exists.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man, Mr. J. K. D. Wingfield Digby, M.P., Lord Kinnaird, Archdeacon Hughes Game, Rev. H. J. R. Marston, and Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., followed on equally vigorous lines. One of these summed up the matter thus:—"I believe that if we are to keep the people with us it must be by a spiritual force. It will not be by ritual or by fine services, but on the old principles of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. I believe we should get a blessing from those whom we might send forth on missionary work. I was hearing yesterday an instance from a clergyman who had given his daughter to foreign missions; and shortly afterwards a letter he read from her was the direct means of the conversion of five of his young people, who gave their hearts to God from the appeal of the clergyman's daughter away out in India."

Italian Church Reform Association.

The annual meeting was held on Wednesday afternoon, last week, at the Church House. The chair was taken by the Archbishop of Dublin. The secretary and treasurer, Col. Williams, M.P., read statements, from which it appeared that the income of the Association had shown a decrease since the last report was issued.

The Chairman reviewed the work of the past year. There were matters for sorrow in the loss sustained by the death of the late Canon Thornton, the failure in health of Miss Mayor, necessitating her partial withdrawal from the work, and the alarming illness through which Count Campello had passed. There were also matters for rejoicing in the progress of the work, particularly in Arrone, where the Count has organised schools for artisans, in Papigno, where he commenced the work in response to the invitation of the people themselves, and at San Remo, where Rev. Ugo Janni has a body of fifty communicants. An interesting feature has been the accession of an earnest reformer, Signor Bruno Bruni, to the work of the Association. With regard to the future of the movement, there was a desire that Count Campello should be made Bishop of the Old Catholics of Italy.

The Bishop of Salisbury, in moving the adoption of the report, paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of Canon Thornton. He was seconded by Canon Meyrick, who dealt with the history of the Old Catholics of Europe. Rev. Sydenham Dixon referred to the liturgy which has been lately compiled for the use of the Reformed Episcopal Churches of Italy. He was sure it would commend itself to all members of the Church of England who had studied it. Sir Geo. G. Stokes, Bart., F.R.S., expressed his hearty sympathy with the movement.

Field Lane Institutions.

The Mansion House assumed an unwonted aspect on Friday afternoon, when the fifty-third annual meeting of the Field Refuges and Ragged Schools was held, and in connection therewith an "Industrial village" was formed in the Pillar Saloon. This village consisted of a number of stalls on which were displayed the workmanship of the boys and girls of the Industrial Homes maintained by the Institutions. On entering we found groups of the inmates of these Homes busy at work tailoring, shoemaking, bread-baking, sewing, and knitting. The Lady Mayoress having declared the village open, the little tailors set to work; that is to say they worked as well as they could in the great press of friends, whose numbers must have gladdened the hearts of Mr. Platt and his helpers, even while they interfered somewhat with the labours of the merry young craftsmen. A boys' choir, and afterwards a girls' choir, sang a variety of pieces. Musical drill was gone through by parties of girls and boys; and altogether a bright and busy hour was spent in practical illustration of what these rescued young people learn to do in the Industrial Homes.

So far by way of introduction: these scenes soon gave place to the annual meeting, held in the Egyptian Hall, and presided over by Sheriff Hand.

Mr. Peregrine Platt presented an outline of the report, which showed that during the year ending March 31 last 906 men and women were sheltered in the refuges, and 263 boys and girls trained in the industrial schools. In addition, twenty-two friendless girls were maintained in the servants' home. Then there were the following attendances:—2924 attendances at the crèche; 29,135 at the ragged church; 11,750 at the adult mission services; 76,223 at the Bible ragged schools and classes; 7193 at the Band of Hope; and 15,436 at the mothers' meetings. Fifty-nine bags of linen lent from Maternal Society; 19,216 gifts of broken food: 18,204 loaves of bread distributed; 280 persons placed in, or assisted to obtain, employment; and 5677 hot dinners given to poor children. The society was in debt, according to the statement of the secretary, to the extent of £838. The committee earnestly appealed for increased support to enable them to continue the operations of the institution.

The Chairman dwelt on the stirring history of Field-lane, one of the earliest of ragged schools. Who could think, without profound thankfulness to God, of the thousands who had found hope and heart at Field-lane, who had been rescued from despair and sin, and their feet set in ways of peace? Besides, many thousands of children have passed through the schools, and had been taught to live honestly and industriously. The object lessons given in the Industrial Village had shown how the children learned to use their hands. Altogether, he felt justified in appealing strongly for generous support on behalf of Field-lane Institutions.

The treasurer said that while their income was somewhat over £9,000, their expenditure was £10,000, and in April last £692 was required to pay current accounts, with a balance in hand on March 31 of only £100.

Canon Barker contrasted things as they were fifty years ago, when these schools were in their infancy, with the state of things to-day, and maintained that ragged schools had conferred untold benefits on the nation at large, as well as on the poor children themselves. Rev. George Hawker followed with a vigorous speech on behalf of the work, and the proceedings were closed with the National Anthem.

Women's Protestant Union.

A conference of Christian workers among Roman Catholics was held last week in the Exeter Lower Hall, beginning on the Wednesday and ending on Friday evening. A sale of work was held at the same time, in order to defray the expenses of the conference and work undertaken in connection with the Union. In harmony with the basis, the proceedings were characterised by a prayerful spirit.

On Wednesday morning Signor Golia Mauro, of the Waldensian Church, gave an address; in which he emphasised the difficulties of work in Italy. Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie, of Dunkerque, spoke of France with its priest-ridden millions, and deplored the rapidity with which England is assuming the fetters from which France is seeking release. Professor L. J. Bertrand, whose work among French priests is well known, said that to-day the Church of Rome recruits the priesthood from the lowest social grades. Misses Larritt and Wilson, of Haute Savoie, spoke impressively of the darkness of the women of that region, who, through Romish oppression, seem to have lost all buoyancy of life and moral individuality.

Mr. Donald Matheson, on Thursday, described Miss Grant Brown's work in Corsica. The lady's influence has been recognised by the priests, who have designated her "La Papesse," and her helpers "les Femmes Apôtres." Converted Corsican priests are printing the first number of a Protestant magazine. Mr. T. E. S. Botham, of the China Inland Mission, gave a sketch of "Rome among the Chinese." When reading of large accessions to the Roman Catholic Church, we should remember that the numbers include infants who are secretly baptized, and converts who are secured by bribe in times of famine, and help in lawsuits or protection in quarrels. A priest once told him that the Chinese are "a very mercenary people; he did not know one who had joined the Church for the love of it." After conversion to Romanism, the lives of the people are unchanged. Miss Cox, of Milan, told of mission work begun under great difficulties, but now so flourishing that a large congregation has been gathered into the Mission Hall. Rev. T. Connellan enlarged upon the dangers of the confessional. Pastor Fanstone made a rousing appeal on behalf of Brazil; and Rev. H. H. Pullen pleaded the cause of the Spezia Mission.

Mrs. Arbuthnot, president of the Union, enlarged upon the need for a Protestant Nursing Institute, which would provide against Ritualists and Romanists obtaining access to English Protestant families where the income is limited, and the ordinary nursing fee of £22 is prohibitive. Such an institute would immensely curtail the opportunities now so readily seized by Romanisers. The Misses Wellington followed with an outline of their experiences in Evian-les Bains and its environs. They declared Savoie to be as dark as any heathen place where missionaries are sent. The worship of the Virgin is so interwoven with the religion of the poor ignorant people, that as one poor old woman said to Miss Wellington, "If you take Mary from me, you take everything. It is she who will bend over me when I die and take me straight to heaven. If I am not saved by her, I shall be lost."

On Friday morning the principal speaker was Signor Luigi Capellini, pastor of the Military Church at Rome, who, through an interpreter, described Protestant Evangelical work in Italy. The Word of God is permeating amongst the military, and Protestants are at work where the Papacy cannot enter, which rouses the Pope's wrath. The priests have become terrified at the work of the Military Church, which has become the parent of many churches scattered throughout Italy.

In the afternoon the speakers included Dr. Blackwell Fenn, who dealt with Spain and Madagascar; and Pasteur and Madame Lecoat, of Brittany, who, among other things, said that there are large numbers of young English ladies in the French convents. In the evening a conversazione was held.

Strangers' Friend Society.

The 109th annual meeting of the members of this old institution for the relief of the sick poor of London, took place last week at the office, 52, Finsbury Pavement, when Mr. W. S. Gard presided. The society's hundred and sixty visitors are Christian men and women, who render gratuitous service, and in pursuing the necessary inquiries, they investigate cases for subscribers, and are made the almoners of their private charity. The society's relief is not confined to merely handing over so much money or food, or in making a solitary effort for the recovery of the downfallen—the poor are led to look upon the visitors as friends who will do their best to help them. Many have dated their hope of eternal salvation from the time when they were benefited by the assistance and sympathy of the society's agents. If the society is to persevere in its good work, it must have a larger income.

Army Scripture Readers' Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held in St. Martin's Town Hall on Wednesday week. The report, presented by Col. Phillips, gave gratifying testimonies from soldiers and readers as to the success of the work in "bringing our soldiers to a knowledge of Jesus Christ." The Readers now number 70—47 being at work in England, 8 in Scotland, 9 in Ireland, and 6 abroad.

General Lord Chelmsford, who presided, felt that seventy Readers were wholly inadequate to the requirements of the army at home and abroad; the income of the society ought at least to be doubled. It was very sad to think that there were only three Readers for an enormous country like India, where there were 70,000 British troops. He could testify from his own personal experience to the benefits accruing to the soldiers from the work of a Scripture Reader amongst them. When he was in command of the 95th Regiment, stationed at Poona, he had striking evidence of this. He could not say that it was a model regiment—indeed, the men were not steady men. But there came amongst them a Scripture Reader named Bailey, for whom he had always cherished the highest regard, and whose name he retained in his memory most gratefully. He worked amongst the regiment for about twelve months, and he could safely say that the good that man did was truly remarkable—so much so that when he (Lord Chelmsford) left Poona six years afterwards there was certainly not a better regiment in the whole of India. That showed what a good and judicious Reader could do by going in and out amongst the men. The soldiers learnt to trust and to look up to him as one who had their welfare at heart.

Archdeacon Sinclair, in closing a sympathetic address, said that some were inclined to ask, Why are Scripture Readers wanted in the army, when there were chaplains provided by the Government? Scripture Readers were wanted in the army for precisely the same reason that they were needed to assist the parochial clergy. The chaplains had their hands full; in addition to their regular ministrations, they had to look after the wives and families of soldiers, as well as the sick, and they therefore had no time to go to the barrack-room constantly and talk to the men. And it seemed to him that such a work was much better done by the Scripture Reader, who was generally a man who had been a soldier himself and knew their peculiar trials and difficulties. The nation ought never to forget its indebtedness to its soldiers, and while they must be exposed to an unnatural life, and to special temptation, it was the duty of the nation to provide for them such helps as were possible. They owed a great deal of sympathy to the army, and he trusted the Army Scripture Readers' Society, which had done so much in the past, and was capable of doing so much more in the future, would have the resources it needed placed at its command.

Amongst the other speakers were Dr. Ord Mackenzie, Major Seton Churchill, Canon Cooke, and Capt. Wiseley.

Homes for Working Girls.

The annual meeting for praise and prayer was held at one of the nine Homes, viz.:—Lincoln House, 12, York-place, Baker-street, on Thursday, the 23rd inst. Mr. John Shrimpton, hon. director, presided, and mentioned how graciously Almighty God had continued to bless the work, and how signally He had watched over the Homes during his lengthened illness. The Homes were as popular as ever among the young workwomen of London, over two thousand having passed through them during the past year. He referred with much gratitude to the devotedness of the service of the various superintendents. The weekly Bible Talk Meetings held in the Homes were a great power for good, and he acknowledged with thankfulness the valued help of the large number of clergy, ministers, Christian men, and ladies who so kindly conducted them. The want of money to carry on the work had been greatly felt during this year, and he appealed for the sum of £800 to meet some pressing payments which had to be paid without delay. The slackness of the west-end trade had caused much anxiety to numbers of young workwomen dwelling in the Homes, and naturally increased the general expenses in sustaining them.

The meeting was devotional, in which Canon Acheson, Rev. J. C. Elliott, Mr. A. J. Gillespie, Mr. Seth Smith, Mr. Basil Woodd, and Mr. Stow Thompson took part. Communications respecting the Homes should be addressed to the honorary director, 3, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.

London Female Guardian Society.

On Wednesday week the eighty-eighth annual meeting of this Society was held at the Training Home, Stamford House, High-street, Stoke Newington, Mr. John Deacon presiding.

The secretary, Mr. W. E. Page, read an abstract of the report, which stated that during the year ended March 31st last, the average number in the Home was ninety-four. Fifty were placed in domestic service, three were reconciled and restored to their friends, twenty-one withdrew at their own request, six were sent to hospitals from ill-health, six were sent to more suitable Homes, and ten were expelled for improper behaviour. Eighty-nine inmates remained under the care of the Society.

The Chairman said he was sure they must all feel gratified by the satisfactory nature of the report which they had just heard read. He had, on looking over it, been struck with the fact that since the foundation of this Home no less than 10,000 women had enjoyed its benefits, and out of that number many had reason to thank God that ever they had come.

Rev. P. Carmichael thought the work done in that institution was an exceedingly honourable one. Its great object was to deliver those women from their sin through the grace of God, There was no sin under the sun that took such a fearful grip of men and women when they fell into it. He rejoiced to know that their work was successful.

Mr. D. Marshall Lang spoke specially of the work done at the Probationary Home. The work there was of a rougher kind. Women were taken in there before being drafted into the Home at Stoke Newington; which was in reality the complement of the work begun in the Guardian Home at Bethnal-green. That was a Home of long training, of which there were but very few in London. Most of the Homes took in and quickly passed their inmates through; but their idea was that a lengthened training was absolutely necessary if the influences of the past were to be got out of the thoughts and minds of those who came under their care. Therefore they prescribed a minimum period of eighteen months for training. In that Home the inmates were subject not only to discipline, but they did good honest work all the time they were there.

Rev. J. Nettleton said that the Society was an approved success, not an experiment. They might meet with that in their work which disappointed reasonable expectations, but when they remembered that 10,000 women had passed through that Home, and the aggregate of approved success, they had every reason to thank God and take courage.

Mr. Lalmont reviewed the position of unhappy women in heathen lands, and closed by saying that of the women trained in that Home such a large number turned out well. They went forward in their work with confidence, feeling that they were treading in the footsteps of their Divine Master and that the work would prosper in their hands, and that they would be placing many poor creatures on the road to peace, prosperity, and godliness.

Met. Tabernacle Colporteurs.

The colporteurs of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association held an interesting conference on Monday afternoon at the Tabernacle, and gave facts about the work both in London and the country. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon addressed the men on constancy and consistency. In the course of a very effective address Dr. J. A. Spurgeon showed that it was not so much the brilliant men as the plodding ones who in the end succeeded. Mr. Thomas Spurgeon presided at the evening meeting in the Tabernacle, when a number of colporteurs gave addresses descriptive of their work, and showing its extreme need in all parts of the country.

The new secretary of the Association is Mr. W. E. Alder. During the past year the seventy-three colporteurs disposed of about 816,000 publications, besides paying many visits to the people in their homes, distributing 75,000 tracts, and conducting some 8500 services.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

The eighty-eighth annual meeting of this Society was held at the Mansion House on Monday evening. Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, said that the object of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society was one of the best—viz., the soothing of the last years of those who had spent life in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. People were not admitted who had more than 7s. per week, or 10s. if married. He thought a £5 5s. pension too small; but it just made a small difference in the comfort of the recipient. Christians should esteem it a privilege to help their aged brethren. In so doing they were only carrying out the Apostle's injunction "to minister to the saints." He hoped they would not only be able to raise the number of pensioners, but also the amount of the pensions.

The Secretary read the report, which stated that the Society was the project of the late Rev. James Bisset, and was started with three pensioners; but it now numbered 1313. The total number relieved since its formation was 6664. Any aged Christian of sixty years of age and upwards, not possessing more than 7s. per week, or 10s. if married, could be entered as a candidate, and upon approval received the first pension of five guineas. After three years these might be placed on the seven guineas rotation, and every year ten pensioners who had attained the age of eighty-five were advanced to the ten guineas pension list. One hundred and seventy were receiving the ten guineas, 327 the seven guineas, and 816 the five guineas pension. In several instances pensioners had been on the books twenty-five years, and had received from £171 to £204 in pensions. The balance sheet showed that the Hornsey-rise Asylum Sustentation Fund was overdrawn by £194.

Mr. Sheriff Hand moved the adoption of the report, and urged that the society had a strong claim on their support. Rev. Canon McCormick seconded the motion, which was supported by Rev. J. G. Train, of Norwood, and Rev. J. Bush. The following resolution was also adopted:—"That the Scriptural basis and widely-extended work of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society and its Homes commend the institution to the support of all who sympathise with God's aged poor, and who desire to see them provided for in their latter days."

LEGACIES OF £1000 each have been bequeathed to five American Baptist institutions under the will of Mr. John Thore, formerly a working-man in Taunton, Somersetshire.

HOME OF REST, LITTLEHAMPTON.—In connection with the anniversary of this Home an all-day convention is to be held in the Hinde-street Chapel, Manchester-square, W. Speakers: Revs. F. Paynter, J. H. Hopkins, J. G. Mantle, and E. R. Gibbens, Dr. F. M. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Reader Harris, and Dr. Woods Smyth.

DR. DALE ON REVIVAL.

In a sermon on the history of Congregationalism, given in last week's British Weekly, the late Dr. Dale said many wise things, applicable to other bodies besides the one specified. We make some extracts :—

THE EVANGELICAL REVIVAL.

The most popular men, men like James Parsons, men like Mr. James, men like Dr. Leifchild, were penetrated through and through with the spirit of that great movement which changed the religious condition of England in the last century. They had a profound conviction that men are in danger of awful suffering if they do not trust in the Lord Jesus Christ and receive through Him pardon of sin and the new life given in regeneration. They, therefore, were always endeavouring, and endeavouring most strenuously, to convert men. In their sermons there was a great deal of direct and vehement appeal. Some of the more eminent of them cared very little comparatively about the main substance of their sermons. Dr. Leifchild, I remember, stated that he did not care at all how he got on during the first half-hour; it was during the last fifteen minutes in which he concentrated his strength on the appeal to the conscience and the heart of those to whom he was speaking. The appeal to fear as well as to the conscience and heart was still frequent, was sometimes most solemn, most impressive, most effective. The theory of most of them was that they ought not to preach a sermon that hadn't something in it to convert men.

WHAT TO EXPECT.

You remember with what intensity and earnestness my predecessor wrote in his book, which had an immense circulation, called "The Earnest Ministry," and with what earnestness hardly less intense he wrote in his second book called "The Earnest Church." He and his contemporaries looked back with infinite regret upon the fire and excitement of the great religious movement which they remembered in their youth, for the Evangelical revival, although something of its irregularity had passed away before this century began, was still flowing, and flowing in a great and mighty stream all over the country. These men remembered what that revival and what its methods, through God's grace, had accomplished. Notwithstanding the intense earnestness with which these attempts have been made again and again during the last fifty years to recall and re-awaken the kind of life that distinguished the better parts of the last century, these attempts have not been successful. God does not repeat Himself. The Evangelical Revival was unlike previous revivals, and the next great revival of religion will be unlike that. What we have to do is to appeal to God to speak to us in our own time in his own way, and to work through us in our own time after his own methods.

THE LAW OF LIBERTY.

There are many amusements which our people now take delight in without any scruple which, fifty years ago, were altogether avoided, on the principle that it was desirable to surround the moral life with a certain environment favourable to the development of the graver and more serious virtues. Family prayer was, I suppose, universally observed among the members of the Congregational churches in those days, and I have some fear that it is not so universally observed among the members of the Congregational Church in our own day. We have come to see that no external law binds us in these things. The Corinthian Church set us an example of the manner in which persons who are not spiritual appeal to that spiritual law of liberty which is the glory of the Christian Church. The carnal men, men who had received the Divine life, but who had not risen to any great height of spiritual achievement in the Corinthian Church, abused the law of liberty frequently and to their own serious harm, and it is possible that among us there may be a similar abuse of the law of liberty. Restraints are not unwholesome whilst the Churches are undisciplined to freedom; the restraint must be relaxed if the capacity for freedom has been accomplished. The premature leaping of the unspiritual man into the liberty of the spiritual, a liberty which is regulated by an inward law that has a severer restraint in the face of outward precept, is often perilous to the new faith.

THE SCOTCH ASSEMBLIES.

Last Thursday, the supreme courts of the Established and Free Churches of Scotland met in Edinburgh. The new Moderator of the former Assembly is Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod, of Park Church, Glasgow. He is a great favourite with the Assembly, an admirable business man, and a good debater. He is deeply interested in Home Mission work, and parties are looking forward with interest to his closing address, in which he is almost certain to summon his brethren to renewed activity in seeking the salvation of the many thousands in large towns of Scotland who have sunk into utter indifference of the means of grace. The Moderator of the Free Church, Dr. Hood Wilson, began his ministry in one of the poorest districts of Edinburgh. When he was transferred to the Barclay Church, he retained his love for his old work, and headed his people in carrying on vigorous Home Mission efforts in different parts of the city. In his brilliant and burning address from the chair on the opening day, he pressed home the thought that the Church should be a great missionary institute, composed of those who are workers as well as worshippers. The churches, he said, should not stick to stereotyped means and agencies in seeking to rescue the perishing, but should be ready to adopt methods that have proved successful.

On Thursday evening, a crowded meeting in connection with the Free Church, under the presidency of Lord Overtoun, was held in the interests of the temperance cause. Friday was a day devoted, in the forenoon, to devotional exercises, and a conference on the state of religion; in the evening Dr. Wells gave his report on Jewish Missions, which was hopeful in tone. Speaking of the converts of the Mission, he said that one of them claims attention as the bringer-in of a new epoch in Galilee. A promising youth of Safed has just been baptized in Tiberias—the first Jew who has been baptized around the Sea of Galilee, it is said, for 1500 years. There is good reason to believe that several young Jews in Galilee might confess Christ if a good example were once set them. They have come to the threshold, and then drawn back. "For fear of the Jews" is still a terror beyond our imaginings. Jews do not disown their sons when they become sceptics, but they do disown them when they become Christians, and sometimes seem as willing to murder them with their own hands as were the comrades of Saul of Tarsus. In some remarks on the outlook Dr. Wells said: "It is the fashion in some quarters to mock at Jewish missions. Does not that look like mocking their Founder, who described Himself as 'sent to the lost sheep of the House of Israel'? Some of the critics of missions seem to stand in need of the missionary. The world will not believe in our Christianity, and we will scarcely believe in it ourselves, if we despair of the conversion of either Jew or Gentile."

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

Dear Christian Friends,—I do not often make known to you my wants and anxieties (except through the advertising columns of The Christian), as, under exceptional conditions, I venture to do so now. I have had continual cause for thanksgiving that my efforts to comfort and help the little ones and their mothers in the East End for nearly twenty-five years have been generously supported. But for the last two or three years I have occasionally had to pass through very deep waters, and now my funds are so exceptionally low as to imperil the efficiency of the institution under my care. I feel it therefore incumbent on me to make my anxiety known.

I have done my utmost to reduce expenses, even to the refusal to admit some very sorrowful cases into the temporary home. I have closed for a time the country branch, which is a sore trial to me, as the country is now so beautiful and the dear children would benefit so much by a sojourn there. Trusting that some special help may speedily come to tide me over this time of trial, I am, in the service of the little helpless ones,

Marie Hilton, Founder and Hon. Supt.

Shore House, Shore-road, South Hackney, N.E.

[Our good friend has for many years very devotedly given her best thoughts and energies to the service of the little ones in East London, at great sacrifice of personal strength and comfort. We hope that in this time of exceptional need many friends will rally to her help.—Ed.]

UNION HALL MISSION.

It seemed a sad blow to this Mission when, after a brief illness, Mr. Robert Bilke laid aside his work and fell asleep in Jesus. For thirty-five years he had laboured in the Mission, and many friends expressed the fear that the work must now be given up.

The meetings which were held on Thursday last in connection with the anniversary will, we think, dispel such fears. A larger number of friends gathered in the afternoon than has been present for many years. The time was chiefly spent in praise and prayer, but brief addresses were given by Messrs. Inglis, Sprunt, and Sims. After tea a large number gathered, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Seagram. Mr. Edmund Ives read the report, and the financial statement was given by Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe. Testimony was borne to the faithfulness of the late Robert Bilke's labours and to the blessing which God has made him to many who are now to the forefront in the service of God. Mr. Algernon Coote alluded to early reminiscences of the work, and spoke cheery words to those who have undertaken the responsibility of the Mission. Mr. J. E. Taylor gave an interesting account of his conversion thirty-five years ago, through the instrumentality of the late Mr. Bilke. Messrs. Kyd, Brocklebank, and Cook also gave brief addresses.

It was mentioned during the evening that Mr. Edwin Cook, who was converted in Union Hall twenty years ago, had undertaken the chief responsibility of the work, with the help of a committee of the trustees and friends of the Mission. The prayers and practical sympathy of readers of The Christian are earnestly sought for this work, which has been so much blessed in the past.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A great meeting in celebration of the centenary of this Society was held in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, last week. Rev. F. B. Meyer, who presided, introduced Mr. S. J. Cowdy, stating that the young men of Christ Church had raised sufficient money among themselves to send him to college to be trained as a missionary for the foreign field, and to be their representative. He had been chosen by them, and had been approved. Mr. Meyer, in the course of his address, said he was convinced that Christ Church would be found doing most work at home when it was doing most work abroad. The Society was one of the things he was proudest of, and the church was going to carry on its great missionary traditions by the aid of living souls. He hoped the meeting was the first of a series to testify its enthusiasm in the work.

Rev. Dr. Newman Hall related how the L.M.S. came into existence, and how it grew. It had met with persecution and disappointment, but did not the very same thing happen to the apostles of old? After showing how wonderfully the Society had prospered in spite of many drawbacks, he suggested that at the present time 130 million pounds sterling are spent every year in strong drink, and that two million pounds represent the amount spent by Christians on intoxicating liquors every year. Let these followers of Christ deny themselves for one year of this drink, and give the money thus saved to the missionary societies. It would not then be how to get the money, but how to spend it. The other suggestion was that bands of artisans should go out and settle among the heathen, work and teach.

Rev. R. M. Ross, of Amoy, China, gave some very interesting details of work in China, and bore witness to the great earnestness and liberality of the 10,000 Christian Chinese that are at present in Amoy. Two thousand communicants had subscribed £1000 to the Society—giving out of their poverty, and when the Chinamen's pocket was reached, his heart was also reached.

Rev. Dr. Macfarlane followed with reminiscences of experience among the heathen. They could often teach the people of England a good lesson, and he was convinced from studying their languages and their manners that in the past they had, many of their tribes, been highly civilized nations who were now on the down-track.

The Chairman said he was very glad to announce that Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Newman Hall had given £100, to be forwarded to the parent society.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

The new report of this valuable society will cause many to rejoice that the Gospel, clearly and faithfully spoken, should be so widely preached. Says the secretary:—"In these days when Ritualism and infidelity prevail on all hands, so that in some districts it is difficult to find any place in which the simple truths of Christ's salvation are preached, when the Word of God is disparaged, when the simple and ignorant have no opportunity of hearing in their own language the wonderful works of God in redemption, our evangelists are needed, both in town and country, more rather than less than in earlier days. No organisation on exactly the same lines exists in this country; and as long as our work continues on its present basis, no town or village need be without the proclamation of the Gospel, preached apart from all denominationalism, so that all Evangelical Christians can unite in the missions of its agents."

Interesting instances are given of fruit after many days. The following letter from a Norfolk village illustrates many such:—We have much reason for encouragement with regard to the work in this neighbourhood in previous years. I have spoken to several who were blessed through the tent mission and other missions, six of whom are now local preachers. We have also a woman who was brought to the Lord through William Taylor years ago." In Australia a friend met with a Christian whose spiritual life began under the preaching of W. W. Martin, who departed to be with Christ nearly ten years ago.

Deeply interesting accounts, illustrated by telling incidents, are given of missions in many parts of England and Scotland. One, for example, writes:

"During a mission recently held at Staplecross, Sussex, at the close of one of the services, a man, seventy-seven years of age, came up and spoke to me. He had walked five miles through the snow to tell me that he had been led to Christ at a mission held five years ago in his own village, Sandhurst. I at once remembered the circumstances. He had lived a very godless, disreputable life, never going to any religious service. His besetting sins were drunkenness and profanity—to use his own words, 'they were the devil's chains which held him down.' He, however, was induced to attend the mission services, and my subject the first night he came was used by the Lord to convince him that he was lost. Before the mission closed he was able to rejoice in Jesus as his Saviour. His life since that time has been a pattern of consistency, ever testifying to the truth of God's Word, that He is able to save to the uttermost. Having been a well-known character, his changed life has made a deep impression on others."

Another says:—"I have been greatly encouraged by learning that much permanent good has been the result of the mission held here (Ancoats, Manchester) last year. I have met with many who at that time were brought to know the Lord. Mr. Morris has told me that they have been reaping fruit all the year from the work done then. Among other interesting items, he has told me that they received an addition of no less than fifteen teachers into their ragged schools from among the young men and women who were brought to God during the mission."

The evangelists visited last year 1137 places in England, Scotland, and Wales. The tent work also was greatly blessed last season, and preparations are being actively made for a full and busy summer's work. The Scottish branch is reported as thoroughly organised, and increasingly active with the best possible issues, indeed in several places very remarkable results. But on these we cannot here enlarge. We regret to notice that the funds have considerably fallen off; yet wide doors are open, and the need for such service is more imperative than ever. The report ought to be prayerfully pondered by all who long for the evangelisation of our people. Copies may be had of the hon. sec., Evangelisation Society, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

A CHRISTIAN SUMMER SCHOOL.—The Harley House friends are again arranging for a Christian Summer School at Cliff College, Derbyshire, during the month of July. A fortnight can be spent at this picturesque spot, with the added privilege of Biblical study, under competent teachers and Christian fellowship, the charge only being fifty shillings. A detailed programme (price 2d.) can be had from Harley House, Bow, E.

"NO PLACE LIKE ROME."

In her report of work among the Roman poor, Mrs. Wall says that in the spring of last year she received from San Paolo, Brazil, a letter in the handwriting of a man who had been in the habit of attending her meetings, by name Luigi de Rossi. He said:—"By the goodness of God I have emigrated from Rome, and am employed as a labourer in Brazil, surrounded by Italians, Portuguese, and Spaniards. I have meetings continually, and pray God for the conversion of the unbelievers in San Paolo, by whom I am mocked and insulted in return. I left Rome so suddenly that I forgot to bring my books; but I hope you will send me a hymn-book and a large print New Testament. I can only repay you by praying God for your health and safety."

On this Mrs. Wall remarks:—"Owing to alterations in our house, this letter was mislaid, and I could not answer it. My pleasure was very great when, a few months ago, I found it. Having an opportunity to send a parcel, through a family going to the same part of Brazil, I decided to wait until they started, hoping that, meeting with this man, they would be able to encourage one another to persevere in the things of Christ. At one of our meetings for poor men, I told them what I was doing, and asked them to unite with me in special prayer for De Rossi. But what was my surprise after the prayer when a man rose from his seat and told me he was Luigi De Rossi, that the Lord had spared his life in the midst of great dangers, and brought him back to Rome!

"In a conversation I had with him, I found that his son at San Paolo was getting on pretty well, and would have liked his father to continue to live with him, but the wickedness of the people was such that he could not be happy there. He said he was sorry to leave his friends at San Paolo; they had so much enjoyed singing the hymns he had taught them, talking with him about Jesus, and praying for the friends and relatives they had left behind them in Italy. His son paid for his return journey, but when the day came for him to sail, the crush on the pier was very great, and being partly blind he could not make his way as the others did, so he was in danger of being left behind.

"When the last boatful had started for the vessel, he was still on the pier. Seeing an empty boat near, he thought it offered the only remaining hope of reaching the steamer; he tried to get into it, but before he could do so the boat suddenly left its moorings, and he was left hanging to the wall. His strength soon failed him, and he fell into the sea. He sank twice, and twice rose to the surface, no one being near enough to help him. The third time, however, a sailor came to the rescue, and took him more dead than alive into his boat, and thence to the steamer. Owing to the kind treatment he met with on board he soon recovered.

"He told us he felt that his life had been spared that he might have the opportunity of doing something for Jesus. His joy at being present again at the meetings is very touching. Not being able to work on account of his partial blindness, he is dependent on the daily kindness of friends. His face bears no marks of worry or anxiety, but is always bright and happy. He is able to say continually, 'I will trust, and not be afraid.'"

Communications to Mrs. Wall should be addressed 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

BURMAH.—A Times telegram from Rangoon says:—"On the morning of the 23rd inst. thieves entered the American Baptist mission-house at Thibaw, and murdered Mr. Lambert, the young Englishman in charge. The Tsawbwa has offered a heavy reward for the detection of the criminals." Mr. Lambert was formerly a worker in connection with the China Inland Mission, and went out from Blackheath. He was on a visit to Burmah, and was 'holding the fort' at Thibaw during the temporary absence of the American missionary."

ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES.—Earl Compton, M.P., presided last week at the annual dinner of the Royal Hospital for Incurables, at the Albion, Aldersgate-street, and made an appeal in aid of the funds of the institution. The Hospital is situated at West-hill, Putney Heath, and it affords accommodation for the most sad of all invalids, those suffering from incurable disease. There are over 225 inmates, and in addition there are a large number of pensioners in receipt of outdoor allowance. Subscriptions were announced, amounting to over £2300.

A MORNING BY THE SEA.

There is a little watering-place on the north-east coast, against which many visitors bring the indictment of its being too townified, but let them leave the cliff, where the rows of severely respectable buildings give colour to their complaint, and go down an obliging stairway of fifty steps, down amongst the grand boulders that crowd one delicious nook on the beach, and then they are alone with the sea, as I am this morning, and oh how magnificent it is! The waves curving round the pier, and dancing in a wild May-dance of excitement to the shore, leaping over the rocks, and crackling amongst the shingles with a hoarse shout of triumph in their fulness of life. And I sit and think of the first day of public view at the Academy—a hot, stifling view it assuredly will be on a day like this—and of the crowds who will search their catalogues for the well-known names, and level their glasses with critical aspect at their productions. But they will see no "new eternal picture fresh from God" like this one. And the artist is here! I am alone with the sea, and with Him who made it, and who holdeth its waters in the hollow of his hand.

But an interruption has come, which shows that in this same Hand are also held the threads of human lives, which He can weave together very unexpectedly. Just now a stranger appeared, walking slowly along, and evidently drinking in her fill of this grand, free beauty, but unmistakeably a stranger, and looking as she passed, somewhat wistfully, as if for a word of comradeship. I gave it, and then she gladly accepted the offer of some reading, and sat down at a little distance to enjoy it. Then she returned and entered into talk, saying what she had to say with a quiet intelligence that chimed in well with the influence of the place. She had been for many years manager of a depot for the sale of work done by gentlewomen of straitened means, and she spoke of the pathetic cases of privation and suffering, so patiently and bravely borne, that were thus often brought under her notice. Then she told me of a purchaser coming in one morning and leaving with her—unasked—a small sum of money to be used for the relief of one or two of the sorest sufferers, "I divided it between two," she said, "one was a lady—quite a lady, but so poor—who was dying of a most painful disease. She was much cheered by this kindness of an entire stranger, but most of all by a hymn-leaflet she had also left. It was pinned up in her room, where she could read it over and over again, and when her pain and her poverty made her sometimes almost doubt her Father's love, its sweet words spoke comfortably to her, and soothed and upheld her. Now she is dead, and so is the other poor sufferer who was so kindly helped. I never knew the lady's name, or I would have liked to have told her how much she had done to make the valley less dark to two of God's children." But I knew the name! it was that of my oldest and nearest friend. I remembered that visit of hers to the depot, and the leaflet was one which she greatly valued, and always kept copies of in her little hand-bag. It would be the third verse, no doubt, that sounded so sweetly in dying ears.

Being in straits I cry
Lord, make a way!
Open a door for me,
Help me, I pray!
Gold Thou hast—endless store,
Strength—all I want and more.
All hearts are in Thy hand,
Nothing can Thee withstand,
Lord, look, and give command.
Lord, make a way!

A door had been opened, a way made for the redeemed of the Lord to pass over into the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, when there shall not be any more pain. So I am carrying away from my morning hours by the sea a tender and sacred surprise and joy. Truly our hearts may devise the way, but the Lord directeth our steps. M. C. F.

THE CHRISTIAN TRAVELLER'S CONTINENTAL HANDBOOK is a manual which we have from time to time commended to the notice of visitors to Continental countries. The seventh edition, revised, has now been published; and it is in many respects a great improvement upon its predecessors. It has been edited by Rev. George H. Giddins, secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society; and useful notes on travel are supplied by Mr. F. Yeats Edwards. For holiday-seekers or others desiring to see Christian work in Continental centres, this handbook is an indispensable vade mecum. (6d. Elliot Stock.)

Letters to the Editor.

CONVENTION OF HISTORICAL STUDENTS OF PROPHECY.

Dear Sir,—While admiring the tone of Rev. H. E. Brooke's letter in your last issue on the above subject, I trust it will not be allowed to divert attention from the proposal made by Major Porcelli, which is, I think, one of great importance. Mr. Brooke has been unnecessarily alarmed at a phrase, by which probably the writer meant nothing more than to suggest a series of meetings for the exposition of the historical system of prophecy. As this view nerved the arms of the Reformers in their battle for the liberties we now enjoy, and is moreover a powerful antidote to the Romanist and Ritualist poison being so insidiously instilled far and wide to-day, it is well worthy of being the subject of conference by "all those who love His appearing." If it can be discussed in the temper of Mr. Brooke's admirable letter, and with less of dogmatism and more of charity than is sometimes shown, it will be so much more to the furtherance of the truth, and to the glory of Him whose coming we all, of both schools, desire to hasten. Hoping the proposed meeting may be arranged, I remain,—Yours sincerely, Sidcup, May 24. John Jackson.

Dear Sir,—When I saw in your issue of 16th inst. the letter of Major Porcelli, suggesting conventions on the subject of our Lord's return to advocate the views which are held by the historical school of interpreters, I felt thankful that other voices were to be heard announcing the pre-millennial coming of Christ besides those who adopt the futurist interpretation; for, though I sympathise with the latter school, it is better far to have both schools pressing home the central truth of our Lord's speedy return than to be content with a silence like the silence of the grave upon a subject which occupies so large and prominent a place in Holy Scripture, and which is declared to be the Blessed Hope of the Church.

I am glad if the conventions held last year and this are stirring other groups of teachers to sound forth the warning cry that "the Lord is at hand," and I trust they will keep in view, as my friends have done, the main points which need to be pressed home, namely, the plenary inspiration of Holy Scripture, God's purposes in Israel, and the personal and pre-millennial coming of our Lord and Saviour. We do not expect them to withhold from the people subsidiary matters (though they are matters of great importance) upon which we differ from them, and they must not expect us to be silent upon these points.

Why should it be deemed so very harmful that students of unfulfilled prophecy should differ in their readings of the orderly sequence of the great events which lie in the future, and which are, to some extent, hid from our eyes; when so many questions divide Christians relating to the accomplished facts of redemption and the final teachings of the Word of God in regard to worship and church order? Whether we like it or no, teachers differ and tell out their differences of belief regarding the extent of the Atonement of Christ; the Wesleyan churches are mainly Arminian in doctrine; the Presbyterians continue to be Calvinistic, and do not conceal the fact. Large sections of the professing Church claim to be in what they call the Apostolic succession, and hold to all that is supposed to accompany that position; other large sections of believers smile at these pretensions, and deem them but a Popish figment. Many Christians love a liturgical service; others are content with worship of a simpler character. The free churches of our land view as Erastianism the connection of Church and State in what are called Established Churches, and deem that alliance to be mischievous and unspiritual in its results. If, then, large and important questions such as these are still in dispute, and nothing like unanimity can be secured in regard to them, is it wonderful that differences should be found amongst students of unfulfilled prophecy, a subject which has not received very much attention in comparison with other matters with which theologians have occupied themselves?

To-day, I feel convinced that a larger number of devout and Bible-loving men are giving their minds and hearts to the study of "things to come," than probably in any previous age; and it is in harmony with God's dealings with those who reverence his Word and seek his Spirit's guidance, to anticipate much further unfolding of the truth to the diligent and prayerful student; and ere our blessed Lord returns I humbly believe that clearer light will be thrown upon much that is now deemed obscure. If we tell what we know in the spirit of love, good and not evil will result from our discussions.

If you, dear sir, agree with our honoured brother, Rev. H. E. Brooke, and with our unknown friend, "Quartus, a Brother," rather than with these remarks of mine, will it not compel the discontinuance of the papers upon "The Unveiling," with which we have been favoured week after week? Many of us are unable to agree with "M's" readings of what the Apocalypse is designed to teach us. And as regards conventions, it is better in my judgment that each platform should embrace only those who are of one mind, than to give an uncertain sound in any convention by trying to manifest a complete unity of belief which does not really exist.—Believe me, yours sincerely, James E. Mathieson.

May 24.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SOUL.

As bounds the ship before a Western gale,
And skims her way across the shining sea,
So should the soul expand her heaven-trimmed sail,
And sing with joy, "'Tis gladness to be free!"

As heavenward rises oft the lark, and sings,
Thus scattering music the wide meadows o'er,
So should the soul, upborne on joyful wings,
Flee to the Cross, to be enslaved no more.

As o'er the mountain peaks the whistling wind
With unchecked freedom doth its course pursue,
So should the soul its fetters leave behind,
And seek, rejoicing, the celestial blue.

As rushes towards the sea the torrent wild,
That human hands would seek to check in vain,
So should the soul, unhindered, undefiled,
The bondage of all earthly ties disdain.

As flashes through the mind the instant thought,
And wings its way across both land and sea,
So should the soul by heavenly wisdom taught,
Seek with swift flight, thy shore, Eternity!

As greets the world the roseate hues of morn,
That far away dispel the gloom of night,
So should the soul, to better life new born,
Spring freely forward to embrace the Light!

With lightning speed the message onward flies,
That none may read save at its distant goal;
So, when its mortal casket sinks and dies,
Should freedom fire the never-dying soul.

The ransomed of the Lord alone can know
The freedom of the soul He came to give;
For them alone the waters freely flow,
Who trust Him, when He says, "Believe and live!"

Walton, by Clevedon. Wm. Kitching.

TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION IN ALBERT HALL.

A notable demonstration was held in the Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon in support of the Local Control Bill. Sir Wilfrid Lawson presided, and in the course of a vigorous speech declared that with unbroken ranks they would march against what Mr. Chamberlain had called the swollen tyranny of drink, and would achieve a triumph which would make England the freest, happiest, and noblest land on which the sun had ever shone. Mr. Benn, M.P., said some of their adversaries prophesied the Government would fall because of this Bill. He thought not; but, if it should be so, better fall in the cause of right than stand upon a pedestal made up of beer-barrels. Following Mr. Benn in support of the motion came three other members of Parliament—Mr. Pickersgill, Mr. Lough, and Mr. Diamond. Mrs. H. J. Wilson observed that every woman could do something for the cause. Lady Henry Somerset contended that the measure had taken a strong hold upon the wage-earning classes, to whom its fate was ultimately to be committed. Rev. Canon Wilberforce declared that it was essential that they should all support the Government. The second resolution, providing that a petition be presented in support of the Bill, was moved by Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., seconded by Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., and brief speeches in its support were delivered by Mr. T. Burt, M.P., Miss Balgarnie, Mr. J. Malins, Mr. Raper, and others. A large overflow demonstration was held in Hyde Park for the benefit of those whose applications for tickets to the Albert Hall could not be entertained.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The national conference of the Italian Y.M.C.A. will take place at Rome towards the end of September.

A second Association has been founded in Vienna in one of the quarters at a distance from the centre of the town.

Largely as the outcome of a mission by Mr. George Clarke, a new Association has been formed at Gloucester.

The Genoa Association has taken premises at Via S. Luca, 11, where visitors from England and other countries will meet with a hearty welcome.

Mr. W. von Starck, of Berlin, has accepted the post of secretary of the Association recently constituted at Breslau. The address of the Association is Freiburgerstr, 3, I.

From Norway Professor Waage writes:—"The Association work is flourishing with us; to-morrow I repair to Masö for a meeting of presidents of the Associations of the South-east of Norway, and on Friday I intend going to Aalesund to attend the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Association in this locality."

The Central International Committee at Geneva have agreed to ask Mr. Christian Phildius, the well-known general secretary of the Berlin Y.M.C.A., to accept the position, with Mr. Charles Fermaud, of associate secretary to the Committee. Mr. Fermaud and Mr. E. Favre, representing the Committee, are visiting the Associations in Belgium, for the purpose of reviving the work in that country.

The Trowbridge Association held their business annual on April 21, to commemorate the fifth anniversary. The members presented their esteemed president (Mr. J. Poynton Haden) with an illuminated address and an enlarged opal portrait of himself, both framed in oak, with a request that the latter might be hung in the rooms. Mr. C. Carey (secretary) presented the report, showing the strength to be 120 members and thirty-nine associates.

The North-Western Metropolitan District Union of Associations held its quarterly conference at the Westbourne Grove Association on the 20th inst. Mr. J. Compton Rickett presided, and was supported by Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote, Dr. Parker Young, Mr. C. C. M. Baker, B.A., and other leading representatives of the work. A proposal for extending Y.M.C.A. effort among the large number of railway clerks engaged at the different West Metropolitan termini, in co-operation with the Railway Mission, was determined upon.

On Tuesday week Sir George Williams opened the new Jubilee building of the Y.M.C.A. at Croydon, which has been erected at a cost of £7500. Among those present were Mr. J. Compton Rickett (a liberal donor to the building fund), Dr. James Spurgeon, and many of the local clergy. Mr. Pye Smith, the treasurer, announced that the sum of £2300 was still required. Mr. F. John Horniman promised to contribute £250 when the amount required was in hand. At the close of those proceedings there would still remain owing a considerable sum, and as a memorial of his late lamented wife he would contribute in her name a second £250, providing the residue of the sum required was collected.

Mr. A. Adlof sends the following: "The Prague Association numbers at present 133 active members, 122 associates, twenty-eight founders, and one honorary member; the Pilsen Association has thirty-seven active members, eighteen associates, and four founders; the Prague Association has increased by some members, whereas the Pilsen Association shows some decline. Our activity has besides slackened during the whole year. The persecution at Hussinec, some particulars of which you may have read in the papers, and which even reached the Parliament at Vienna, is unfortunately still going on. The Government seems to fear above all things that the Gospel should take root at Hussinec and be made known to all the people."

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, presiding over the annual meeting of the Army Temperance Association, expressed his satisfaction at the rapid progress of the movement, which was of great benefit to the Army, and mentioned that in his command at Aldershot there were 1286 teetotalers, or nine per cent. of the whole. The Association, which includes moderate drinkers and abstainers, has a membership of 8641.

COREA.—The Corean Government, in an agreement with the Episcopal Methodist Mission, undertake to send 200 students to the Pai Chai College, agreeing that they shall strictly observe all the rules of the institution. The students are to receive instruction in the English language, geography, arithmetic, the sciences, and in such other studies as may be determined on by the teachers in charge. A Japanese foreign mission-board has been organised, with the aim of beginning work in Corea. It is on an interdenominational basis.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A party of members of the Park Mission branch, conducted by Miss Butler, had an enjoyable outing to Pinner on Saturday afternoon.

At the Woman's College, Baltimore, in addition to the regular Sunday afternoon service, a short prayer meeting is held in the students' rooms one evening a week. These prayer meetings have been felt to be a great source of strength.

The Newcastle-on-Tyne Y.W.C.A. Nurses' Branch, which was inaugurated last February, now numbers over seventy members. The boarding house in Saville-place has at present fifty inmates, consisting of teachers, business employés, and others.

Esther M. Clapham, Hon. Sec.

At the Oregon Convention, held at Albany (U.S.A.), Rev. R. Little thus paraphrased the motto of the Y.W.C.A.: "Not by the might of organisation, nor by the power of young women, but by the Spirit of the Lord working through the organised effort of consecrated young womanhood."

At the Washington Convention, Miss Ruth Karr, of the State University, in a paper on "The College Association," pictured the many influences for good of a College Y.W.C.A., and showed how the entire direction of a girl's life and influence, not only while in school, but through all after life, would be affected by the help of such a sisterly organisation.

A meeting of ladies connected with the Press was held last Friday afternoon at Kent House, 89 and 91, Great Portland-street. A number of daily and weekly papers were represented, and the visitors were received by the Viscountess Portman, president of the London Y.W.C.A. The meeting took the form of an open conference, and various suggestions were made for rendering the work of the Y.W.C.A. more extensive. Mrs. Boldero, the Hon. E. Kinnaird, Miss Morley, Miss Graham, and others took part.

The Continental work at 316, Regent street, instead of being a division of the English Y.W.C.A., is now a department of the World's Y.W.C.A. This arrangement seemed to provide greater scope for energy, and certainly of much larger results than had been hitherto attained. The tokens of cheer have been manifold, and the individual cases which have been helped, temporally and spiritually, have been numerous. The Employment Agency succeeded last year in filling up 160 situations. The French and German Bible-classes held at the office are encouraging. The work on the Continent is opening up, and specially cheering news has been received of good work begun in Italy, hitherto a most difficult country to reach. The committee earnestly entreat for sympathy and help. Miss Manning and Miss Macandrew are the hon. secretaries.

IRISH NOTES.

The Jungle Tribes' Mission, in connection with the General Assembly, is doing a good work in India. It has now some half-dozen workers in the field, and its income last year was nearly £1000.

Mr. Thomas Payne has had a fortnight's mission in Dublin and Kingstown in connection with the Irish Church Mission. The workers were much encouraged by the results.

Much regret is felt in the North of Ireland at the death of Rev. W. J. Storey, of Ligoniel, a highly-esteemed Methodist minister, who has passed peacefully away, aged sixty-seven years.

The seventh annual convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in the Ancient Concert Rooms, Dublin. Rev. Chas. Inwood was amongst the speakers. A similar series of meetings has been held in the Parochial Hall, Dalkey.

The latest departure of the Belfast City Mission has been the opening in Glengall House, immediately adjoining Grosvenor Hall, of a Girls' Parlour, in which girls at business in the city can meet in the evenings, write letters, and read wholesome literature.

Professor J. A. Chancellor, D.D., the most eminent member of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod of Ireland, died at his residence, Cromwell House, Belfast, last week, aged seventy. He had been a minister for forty-eight years, and filled the Chair for thirty years of Theology and Church History.

The annual meeting of the Island and Coast Society of Ireland, established in 1838 for the promotion of Scriptural truth in remote parts of the coast and adjacent islands, has just been held in Dublin. The society has thirty-five schools under its care, in which there are 915 children, and these were provided with school requisites, and in many cases with warm clothing.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For meetings where Lord Radstock and others will speak in the Conference Hall, Eccleston street, Sundays in June and July, at 3.45 and 7 p.m.; also for meetings of Christians, Fridays at 3.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Mr. W. Quarrier has received yet another gift of £1000 towards his scheme for consumptive hospitals.

The Sabbath Alliance of Scotland held its annual breakfast in Edinburgh on Saturday, and right views of Sabbath observance were warmly advocated.

The Aged Christian Friend Society of Scotland has on its roll of beneficiaries some 200 persons. It is intended to enlarge the scope of the Society in Glasgow.

Much regret is felt in Aberdeen at the death, at the age of fifty-one, of Mr. George Milne, who was an active worker on behalf of the Y.M.C.A. and other good institutions.

At a recent meeting of the Aberdeen Evangelical Association, it was stated that the Rev. John McNeill would be invited to conduct a mission in the city; that special services in connection with the Sunday-schools were being arranged for, and that a convention for the deepening of the spiritual life will be held in the autumn.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson has returned home after his long tour, and may be addressed, for the present, Portsmouth.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone has been chosen chairman of the board of directors of the L.M.S. for 1895-96, the centenary year, and has consented to serve. The deputy-chairman is Mr. J. E. Liddiard, hon. sec. of the Watchers' Band.

Mr. C. F. Johnson, who has been in London a few weeks on his way home from Queensland, has now returned to Sweden, his native land, hoping to give himself to evangelistic service, working from Gothenburg as a centre.

Pastor D. M. Cameron, of Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth, desires it to be known that he is free to serve in other places by holding Gospel meetings, as friends desiring his help may arrange. His address is 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Mr. George C. Needham asks us to state that he cannot accept invitations to preach or lecture other than those made for Mildmay and Keswick until his arrival. His stay will necessarily be brief owing to engagements in America. Mrs. Needham accompanies him, and will share in his labours.

Mr. William C. Morris, of the Boca Mission, Buenos Ayres, South America, is now on a visit to this country. With a view of interesting Christian friends in the progress of the work under his care, he would be glad to address meetings in London or the provinces. His address is Glencairn, Pellatt-grove, Wood Green, N.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. J. H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded his mission in a tent at Lenham Heath. Judging from the numbers that attended night after night the mission was a decided success. The tent has been moved to Pluckley, where the mission commenced on the 26th inst.

Rev. J. Manton Smith has concluded a Gospel Mission at Great Malvern. On two of the days he had the valued assistance of his former colleague in Gospel work, Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester. Large numbers came together during the mission, and the Gospel message was powerfully preached and sung.

Ireland.—Mr. S. G. Montgomery, General Assembly's Evangelist, has held a Gospel mission in Corlea Presbyterian Church; a similar mission has been held in Sligo by Rev. Canon Robinson, rector of Delgany, co. Wicklow; and in Powerscourt Church, Enniskerry, by Rev. S. A. Selwyn, of Bournemouth.

Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, W.—The two months' mission here by Mr. J. J. Sims has closed, leaving behind it many evidences of Divine working through the labours of his servants. The Gospel songs and duets by Mrs. Sims and Mr. Hutchins drew many people to the meetings, as well as carrying home the truth to heart and conscience.

Kingston-on-Thames.—A successful three weeks' Gospel Mission has just been held at the Presbyterian Church by Mr. William Thomson, of Glasgow. Every week evening the Gospel has been preached, accompanied with limelight illustrations. The Bible afternoon readings on the higher Christian life have been helpful to many Christians from almost all the churches in the town. The interest at the children's meetings has been very great, and the Gospel services have been followed by many tokens of blessing.

OBITUARY.

MISS ELIZA WESLEY.

One of the few remaining links between the days of John Wesley and the present time has been severed in the calling home of Miss Eliza Wesley, aged seventy-seven, the granddaughter of Charles Wesley. Miss Wesley inherited much of the musical genius of her father, and was the first organist at the church of St. Catherine Coleman, Fenchurch-street. Afterwards, for forty years, she officiated at the organ of St. Margaret Pattens, Rood-lane. In character the deceased lady was the soul of high principle and benevolence, but of very retiring disposition.

MR. C. M. BURTON, EALING.

Many leaders of Christian institutions will have to mourn the death of Mr. Burton, who took a warm interest in philanthropic and evangelistic work. In fact, his death will be a serious loss to many institutions which for so many years received his liberal support and unflagging personal labours, labours for the most part hidden from the public eye, but known and valued by the committees of the various institutions for which he worked with such whole-hearted devotion, and the many poor and oppressed ones in humble life, who ever found in him a friend and benefactor. The Reedham Orphanage at Purley, Surrey, early attracted his practical sympathy, and for sixteen years past he has been one of the most constant and active members of its board of management. Another institution in which he took special interest is the Royal Hospital for Incurables at Putney Heath; for some twenty years he had been intimately connected with it and identified with its management. When in 1881 a special effort was needed to enlarge the accommodation he contributed so largely that he was entitled to name one of the principal wards of the new wing; its name to-day is "The Martha Burton Ward." With the Orphan Working School, Haverstock-hill, he was long connected. In foreign missions he took a deep interest, acting for some years as a director of the London Missionary Society. Mr. Burton passed away at his residence, Andover Lodge, Ealing, on Saturday week.

MR. H. BOWERS HARRISON, PRESTWICH.

Many are mourning the loss of this devoted servant of Christ, whose death we mentioned in our last issue. His labours in Salford have for more than a generation been strenuous and unceasing. He held for many years an important position in the Manchester and Salford Bank, and on his retirement a few years ago he devoted himself entirely to work of a public, philanthropic, and religious character. He was vice-chairman of the Salford School Board, and also a member of the Town Council. In the Wesleyan Methodist Church his loss will be severely felt. On taking up his residence in Manchester some forty years ago he attached himself to the Gravel-lane Chapel, and remained associated with that place of worship through all its vicissitudes. He stuck to the old place—endeared to him by a thousand happy associations—and it was his custom to spend Sunday after Sunday, and not a few evenings in the week, at the chapel and school. The Methodists generally had in Mr. Harrison a staunch friend, but, indeed, he was a true helper of every Christian effort. The Wesleyan S.S. Union of Manchester recall with gratitude to God the lengthened and valuable service he has rendered the Union, both as treasurer and vice-president. His marvellous energy and ripened wisdom, his warm heart and liberal hand, enabled him to fill both offices with conspicuous success. In his Christian character there was the combination of strength and beauty, by which he won a high place in the regard of all his brethren. We hope in an early issue to give a portrait and life sketch of the deceased.

MIDWAY PLACE, ROTHERHITHE.— Special addresses on the Lord's coming, etc., were given in the above hall, on May 9, 16, and 23, by Mr. James Sprunt. Christians here were much edified and stimulated. R. S. B.

EAST AFRICA.—Some interesting letters have been received from Bishop Tucker, describing a visit he has lately paid to Taveta. This place is in British territory, and formed a refuge for the missionaries after they were driven out of Mocha by the Germans in 1892. The Bishop was much pleased with all he saw at Taveta, and with the prospects of missionary work there. He held a conference with the chiefs, and asked them whether, in the event of female missionaries coming amongst them, they would allow their wives and daughters to be taught. The chiefs took a day to consider the matter, and in the end gave their consent, stipulating, however, that if their wives ran away from them and took refuge in the mission station they should be sent back. The Bishop is now in better health. He has had one or two sharp attacks of fever, but is now restored.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Archdeacon Farrar will be installed as Dean of Canterbury on July 27.

A memorial to the late Christina Rossetti is proposed in Christ Church, Woburn-square.

Canon Fremantle will leave Canterbury for the deanery of Ripon in the last week of June.

The death of Bishop Suter, of Nelson, New Zealand, who did excellent work in the colonies, is announced.

Rev. W. M. Richardson (said to be an advanced Ritualist) has been nominated by the Universities Mission as Bishop of Zanzibar.

Archdeacon Richardson, in his tenth visitation charge, addresses his clergy very earnestly on "Times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," how these are to be enjoyed and utilised.

Rev. J. M. Laycock, who for two years has held the charge of St. Peter, Colchester (the scene of the labours of Dr. Wm. Marsh), has through ill-health, and by the advice of the physicians, been compelled to resign.

Rev. J. R. Eyre, the new vicar of Sheffield, has resigned his honorary canonry of Liverpool, regarding his cathedral duty there, involving as it does parochial visits to Liverpool of a week's duration, as incompatible with the claims of his work in Sheffield.

The Correspondence Committee of the C.M.S. has accepted the following ladies as missionaries of the society:—The Misses Edith Brooks (of Highbury), and E. S. Fox (for Japan), and Mrs. Pickthall. Offers of service have been accepted from Mr. H. White and Rev. T. and Mrs. Russell for Allahabad, while the following Islington students have been also accepted as missionaries of the Society:—Messrs. F. E. Bland, H. Kitley, J. A. Cutten, H. Woodward, and R. Hack.

The Sussex C.M.S. Prayer Union met last week at Brighton. A crowded meeting was held at the Pavilion. Clergy were present from all parts of Sussex. Rev. B. Baring Gould gave an interesting account of his recent visit to Japan, and Mr. Hunt followed with an address on the right motives for taking an interest in missions to the heathen. At the evening meeting Mr. Baring Gould described his recent visit to the mission stations in China to a deeply interested audience. The Sussex Prayer Union has now 240 members.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Arthur Pringle, late of Maidstone, has commenced his ministry at Caterham.

New chapels are being put up at High-street, Rothbury; and Wall Heath, Wolverhampton.

For six months Rev. E. J. Boon, of the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, Worcester, has been unable to preach through ill-health.

Rev. S. Tamatoa Williams preached on Sunday farewell sermons at Trinity Church, Catford, the pastorate of which he has held since 1860.

Rev. J. Sheward, who did good service at Milton-next-Sittingbourne, from 1874 to 1885, when he resigned through ill-health, is now returning to his attached people.

Rev. H. S. Payne, who has been for several years a pastor in Kansas, U.S.A., is returning to settle in his native land, for the benefit of his health, which is greatly impaired.

The subject of the annual students' debate at New College, Hampstead, for the present year was "Does the Sermon Occupy too Prominent a Position in Nonconformist Worship?"

Rev. J. Mountain, of Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells, having been ordered a long rest, has gone to the Continent, his place being filled, during his absence, by Rev. Charles Stirling, formerly vicar of New Malden.

Mr. Josiah Vavasseur, of Blackheath, has built at his own cost a handsome hall and institute, costing £16,000, for mission and social work at East Greenwich, and has presented the whole to the Blackheath Congregational Church.

The first anniversary of Rev. Charles J. Pitman at Union Chapel, Gosport, has been celebrated. At the public meeting addresses were given by Mr. T. M. McCully, Revs. W. H. Lovell, C. J. Pitman (pastor), and Messrs. W. Whiting and B. French.

The Lancashire Congregational Union reports that the number of places of worship in the county is now 320, providing 161,532 sittings. Seventy out of these churches received aid last year in the form of grants from the Union. Their united accommodation is represented by 22,418 sittings. They have an average attendance of 9080 worshippers; with a church membership of 3888. In their Sunday-schools are 12,640 scholars, with a combined staff of 1143 teachers. The executive committee report two special efforts with a view to extend the work of the Union in Wigan and Barrow-in-Furness.

Calls.—Rev. J. Henderson, of Dudley, to New Wortley, Leeds; Mr. Henry Welch, to Canningtown (accepted); Rev. John Holden, to Chapel-in-field, Norwich; Rev. T. Nicholson, of Southampton, to Bromley.

BAPTIST.

A new chapel is being built at Heaton, Bradford, an old cause with a stirring history.

Rev. J. R. Russell, late of High Wycombe, has been recognised as pastor of Ashwood Bank Church.

The annual meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union will be held this year at Rhyl the last week in September.

New schools are being erected at Chesham, Bury, to be known as the "Harvey Memorial Schools," and to perpetuate the work of the late Rev. J. Harvey.

Brondesbury Chapel reports 650 Sunday scholars. In the recent anniversary the vicar of St. Cuthbert's, West Hampstead, Rev. W. J. Watkins, took part.

Rev. Robert Speed, minister of Bishop Burton, near Beverley, was found dead by the side of a hedge. He had been proceeding by a footpath to the neighbouring village of Walkington.

Rev. J. Hewson, of Grove Church, Stratford, has sailed with his wife and family in the Ophir for Perth, West Australia, failure of health having necessitated a change of climate.

The Faringdon Sunday School anniversary was rendered specially interesting by the completion of the superintendent's (Mr. J. Abel) twenty-fifth year of service in that post. His work has been much blessed, and his services highly valued.

The Bahamas Baptist Union reports that while mostly very poor, and finding great difficulty in the support of their institutions, the affiliated churches have attained an enviable record in the matter of self-support and aggressive Christian work.

At Maze Pond Baptist Chapel, Old Kent-road, the 203rd anniversary was celebrated on Sunday, when sermons were preached by Rev. F. C. Spurr. On Wednesday a public meeting was held, with addresses by Revs. J. W. S. Kerry, John Wilson, and F. C. Spurr.

The American Baptist Year Book for 1895 reports 1530 associations, 27,921 ordained ministers, 39,191 churches, and 3,637,421 members. The increase in the value of church property is nearly £340,000, in members 140,433, in associations thirty-two, and in ministers 1737. There were 205,857 baptisms, an increase of nearly 30,000.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon is benefiting by his sojourn in South Africa. His old church at Greenwich has recalled him to its pastorate in view of his return. He is not sparing his strength, and wherever he goes hundreds attend his evangelistic services. In every direction South Africa is opening out, and the Free Churches are doing well to enter where the door of service is being so plainly indicated.

The sixth anniversary of the Fulham (Dawes-road) Baptist Church was held last week. Revs. T. G. Pollard and R. A. Elvey preached on Sunday. The public meeting, which was held on the Monday following, was presided over by Mr. A. M. Ferguson. Mr. W. H. Prideaux, the secretary, reported a membership of 161, and encouraging progress in all the departments of the Church work. Revs. J. Garden, J. Spence, H. J. Shirley, and R. C. Evill (pastor) addressed the meeting.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Zenana Prayer Union in Bournemouth was held in the Cairns Memorial House on Wednesday, May 22. Mr. A. T. Frampton presided, and an address was given by Miss Angus, of London. The report showed that the amount raised by the Bournemouth Auxiliary for the past year was £76 17s. 7d., as against £68 6s. for the previous year. In seconding the vote of thanks to the chairman and Miss Angus, Pastor G. Wainwright suggested that Miss Way, who is soon to return to her work in Calcutta, should be adopted as the Bournemouth representative Zenana missionary, and be supported by a number of subscribers.

Calls.—Rev. Thomas Greenwood, of Catford, to Ramsden-road, Balham; Rev. E. A. Smith, of Bovey Tracey, to Dunstable; Rev. J. Stanley, of Semley, to Coates; Rev. C. Andrew, to Latchford.

Resignation.—Mr. W. R. Chesterton, of Christchurch, Hants.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new chapel is to be built at Dinas Powis.

The congregation at St. Paul's, Preston, are making earnest efforts to build a new church.

Principal Pryse, of Trevecca College, owing to failing health, is recruiting on the North Wales coast.

The Welsh churches of America contemplate bringing out a Welsh hymn-book, independent of the Connexional one now in use.

Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson have recently paid another visit to the convent on Mount Sinai to search for other early MSS. of the Gospels.

Rev. J. M'Leod Bain, who worked some time in London, has been appointed missionary to the new mission hall, in connection with Govan U.P. Church, Glasgow.

It is stated that the London Presbytery North, when the College Hall is no longer available, owing to the removal to Cambridge, will, it is expected, return to the lecture-hall of Regent-square church, where the meetings were originally held.

Several Presbyterians are to take part in meetings in connection with the general assembly of the Calvinistic Methodists to be held in London. Sermons will be preached by Revs. Principal Dykes and J. B. Meharry, and addresses will be delivered by Revs. Dr. Gibson, Dr. Pentecost, A. Jeffrey, Mr. H. M. Matheson, and Sir George Bruce.

Calls.—Rev. James Malcolm, to Glencaple; Rev. R. M. Thomson, to St. Bernard's, Edinburgh (colleague and successor); Mr. T. E. Williams, to Nantgwtheryn; Rev. J. M. Saunders, of Penarth, to Alexandra-road, Swansea; Mr. James Burns, to Cheltenham.

Resignation.—Rev. J. M. Callan, of Tarbolton.

METHODIST.

Primitive Methodism reports an increase on the home membership of 400.

Rev. H. Guard Price has offered himself for mission work in India after Conference.

New chapels are being built at Middleton, Leeds; Totley Rise; Guisley; and West Ella.

The New Primitive Methodist Hymn-book for special evangelistic services will be issued about October next.

Rev. Dr. Wm. Nicholas has been elected President of the Methodist College, Belfast, in the room of the late Dr. McCutcheon.

A new mission church is being erected in Hemshaw-lane, Stockport, as the result of a mission begun four years ago in connection with Trinity Church.

A mission-room is in course of erection at Dyehouse Ford, Greengate, Bradford, where for twenty-three years services have been conducted in a small room.

The Manchester meeting of the United Methodists reports an increase of 315 members in the district. During the previous ten years there had been an increase of over 1100 in the district, besides the increase of this year.

Rev. D. H. Carr preached on Sunday at Rivercourt Chapel, Hammersmith, in connection with the anniversary. His old and attached friends welcomed him warmly in revisiting a circuit where he formerly did good work.

The annual report of the Grosvenor-road, and North Camp Soldiers' Homes, Aldershot, for the past year reflects great credit on those who are placed in charge. Viewed financially, the effort has been very successful. Upwards of £1100 has been expended on the enlargement schemes at the two centres. The chaplains ministered to about one thousand Wesleyan soldiers while engaged in the autumn manœuvres.

Rev. J. Brown, of the Aqua River Mission, writes that during the past year at least one hundred new attendants have, after careful examination, been received into this vigorous native church. Mr. Brown pleads for a married missionary to be sent out, because of the great influence which a devoted missionary's wife would be able to exert. He also begs for a dispensary, there being no doctors in the neighbourhood.

At the last meeting of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Committee an interesting communication was read from Rev. W. H. Buckenham, who led the mission party to the Zambesi. The tribes are still suffering from famine caused by long drought and the devastation of the crops by the locusts. Mr. Buckenham had quite recovered from his accident, which led to arrangements for his return to England, and reports himself and the party as being in good health.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth's health is improving.

Self-Denial week is fixed for September 29 to October 5.

Arrangements are now under way for the immediate commencement of social work in Manchester.

The Government of India has presented the Army with a plot of land in Colombo for a Prison Gate Home.

The Salvation Army has commenced police-court work in Plymouth, assisted by Miss Soper, the sister of Mrs. Bramwell Booth.

The Swedish Municipal authorities in Stockholm have decided to hand over to the Salvation Army their shelter, and allow some 3000 kroner a year for the expenses of working it.

The Victorian Government has given the Army a farm of 600 acres for their social work, besides granting £750 per annum towards maintaining their Rescue and Prison Gate operations.

Major Jaya Veera, of India, reports that twenty-six Army schools for children are now established in that territory. Arrangements are being made to bring this number up to fifty before September.

Adjutant Erickson, the leader of the Salvation Army expedition to Iceland, has been most warmly received by the authorities, and reports good meetings. The Salvation Army hymn-book in Iceland language is now being printed.

The social work of the Salvation Army has been a distinct success in Brussels. It has recently been investigated by a gentleman, who has expressed his satisfaction and pleasure with the work by giving a donation of 14,000 francs for the extension of the work in that city.

G. Hopkins, aged fifty-seven, well known as a worker among the Friends at Lewes.—At Upper Norwood, Mr. James Robb, aged sixty-seven, a valued elder in the Presbyterian Church.—At Market Drayton, Mr. Philip Hall, aged eighty-five, a local preacher for over half a century.—At Chalk Farm, Miss Jane Locke, a devoted Sunday-school teacher and Christian Endeavourer.—At Plumstead, on 16th inst., Mr. James Ogilvie, senior elder at St. Andrews, and a devoted and consistent follower of Christ.—At Broadhill, Keymer, Mr. William Stevens, aged eighty-one, a generous giver and helper in the Lord's work at Brighton.—At Chelmsford, Mr. James Debnam, one of the oldest workers at London-road Church.—At Newport, Isle of Wight, Mr. J. Bevis, sen., aged seventy-six, for fifty years a helper of the church.—At Richhill, Mr. John Morrison, for many years an earnest local preacher, aged ninety years.—At Clohog, co. Armagh, Mr. Thos. Mason, an active Presbyterian elder, aged eighty years.

THE SUFFERING POOR.

Through the help of our kind friends we have assisted many families of the most deserving class to tide over the miseries and privations of the terrible winter. Coals have been sent to fireless homes, and bread and groceries to starving widows and orphans. Our funds are now exhausted, but there is little diminution of the need it is our object to alleviate. Here is a poor deformed widow, whose frail fingers seem scarcely able to hold the needle which she yet wields from morning to night, earning only a starvation wage for herself and child. Here is a mother who has systematically gone without food that her children may have her small share divided between them; and as the natural consequence she is so weakened by privation that health has failed, and nothing but mother love sustains her at her post of bread-winner, and perhaps more pitiful than any are the young lives which are crushed and broken by the iron forces of poverty.

Will our kind friends help us to give these sufferers a few days' respite from toil and grinding care in some country home, where they may gain fresh strength and courage to face the struggle for existence? Free letters for convalescent homes or gifts of money will be welcome.

(Miss) Annie F. Perram,

38, Westbank, Stamford-hill, N.

HYMN SHEETS

PUBLISHED BY MORGAN AND SCOTT.

TEN NEW SHEETS (Nos. 25-34),

Specially suitable for Open-Air Meetings, and other Evangelistic Services.

Well printed in clear readable type, on good paper. Two Pages each, 9d. per 100; 6s. 6d. per 1000. Post Free.

The first line of the Music (air) is printed at the head of each Hymn.

CONTENTS OF THE NEW SHEETS.

No. 25.
Work, for the night is coming.
To God be the glory!
Down in the valley.
Who, who are these?
Art thou weary?
To the work! To the work!
Redemption ground.
I've found a Friend.

No. 26.
Oh, come to the Saviour.
Showers of blessing.
Shall you? shall I?
Have you any room for Jesus?
Once again the Gospel message.
Tell me the Old, Old Story.
Sun of my Soul.
"Come unto Me, ye weary."

No. 27.
Dare to be a Daniel.
Jesus my Saviour to Bethlehem came.
Who is on the Lord's side?
Whosoever heareth.
He leadeth me!
Knocking—Knocking!
I will guide thee
Wonderful words of life;
Take me as I am!

No. 28.
Almost persuaded.
Stand up, stand up for Jesus!
Calling to-day!
Only trust Him.
I need Thee every hour.
More holiness give me.
Behold Me standing at the door.
Come to the Saviour; make no delay.
Yield not to temptation.
Rescue the perishing.

No. 29.
I am Thine, O Lord!
Oh to be nothing!
The Light of the world is Jesus.
Look and live.
Safe in the arms of Jesus.
Jesus loves me; this I know.
Have you been to Jesus?
Jesus, Gracious One, calleth.
Simply trusting!

No. 30.
What can wash away my stain?
The hem of His garment.
Oh, what a Saviour!
Whiter than the snow.
Only an armour-bearer.
Just as I am!
Firmly stand for God!
With harps and with viols.
Light in the darkness, sailor.
Free from the law!

No. 31.
What can wash away my stain?
Redemption, oh wonderful story.
What shall the answer be?
Behold Me standing at the door.
Oh what a Saviour!
Call them in.
Take me as I am.
Glory to God on high!
Ye must be born again.
Whiter than the snow.

No. 32.
Come to the Saviour, hear His loving voice!
Man of sorrows.
Gospel bells.
I've found a Friend in Jesus.
None but Christ can satisfy.
Out of bondage.
We have heard the joyful sound.
Washed in the blood of the Lamb.
Oh come, sinner, come.
Have you been to Jesus?

No. 33.
Hark! there comes a whisper.
The Spirit and the Bride say "Come!"
Sinner, how thy heart is troubled.
Have you any room for Jesus?
So near to the Kingdom!
Calling yet!
Come, sinner, come.
Come unto Me!
Awake, awake, O heart of mine!
Come with thy sins.

No. 34.
Rock of Ages!
I heard the voice of Jesus say.
Jesus, thy blood and righteousness.
How sweet the name of Jesus sounds.
Just as I am!
All ye that pass by.
When I survey the wondrous Cross.
Tell me the Old, Old Story.
There is a fountain.
Jesus, Lover of my Soul.

Nos. 1-25 (Two pages each) may also be had at the same price.

DARTFORD "BRITISH WORKMAN."—This room, now named "The Blackwood" Temperance Hotel and Mission Hall, observed its nineteenth anniversary on Wednesday last week. Colonel Morton, of Mildmay, presided, and unveiled a portrait of the late Sir Arthur Blackwood, presented by the Dowager Duchess of Manchester. Addresses were given by the chairman, Rev. Geo. Savage, General Anderson, Mr. John Kirk. Rev. J. E. Martin, and local friends, testifying to the importance of the work carried on by the institution. The undertaking is working satisfactorily and commercially pays, but there is, unfortunately, indebtedness of more than £2000 in respect of the buildings, for which the superintendent, Mr. T. W. Stidolph, Parkstone, Dartford, will be thankful to receive help.

CONSUMPTION, AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.
INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

NINETIETH INTERVIEW.

With Mrs. BENNETT, 9, Park-terrace, Whitby, relative to the case of her Daughter and others.

RESULTS OF INFLAMMATION OF THE PLEURA, AND GENERAL DEBILITY.

Miss Bennett's case was published May, 1890.

The case of Miss Annie Bennett, who lives with her mother at the above address, was in some respects a singular one. Commencing with bronchitis, severe inflammation of the membrane of the lungs followed. This became chronic, and for a long time proved very difficult to remove. Under Mr. Congreve's treatment, however, complete restoration to health was secured, to the great joy of all who knew the patient.

Chatting with Mrs. Bennett, the mother, recently, she told me:—

"In 1888, Annie, then a child, suffered from bronchitis, and a good many other illnesses. Ultimately inflammation of the membrane of the lungs made its appearance, accompanied by a seve cough, much offensive yellowish expectoration, great pain in the chest, and loss of strength—she was getting weaker every day, although she was under the doctor's case. I asked the Rev. G. Bromley, at that time our minister, to write to Mr. Congreve, being recommended to take that course by a friend, and having seen the benefits derived from his treatment in other cases."

"Please tell me what the result of this was?

"Well, after about a month the doctor reported that the lungs were better, and the expectoration was much less. We were able, two months later, to report a still further improvement, and she gradually progressed until all traces of the disease had left her, though at one time I didn't think she would get better. Since that time she has had no trouble with her chest. I may say that I have used the medicine for another of my daughters who had bronchitis, and she has remained well. In addition, I have recommended it to many others, and shall continue to do so."

Miss Bennett, whom I had the pleasure of seeing, certainly did not appear to ail much.

Before I left Mrs. Bennett accorded me her full permission to make public her testimony.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Notes and Comments.

THOSE who give earnest heed to the progress of missions to the heathen are learning to watch with increasing hopefulness the development of native evangelism, recognising that natives reach the heart of their fellows in a way no missionary of another race can hope to do. The hope for more rapid advance in the future lies with the native Christians.

This lesson came home to us with much force in listening to the speakers at the China Inland Mission meetings. As our report shows, this was the key-note running through the various addresses. The several speakers seemed to have this burden on their hearts. From all parts of China came cheering testimony to the self-sacrifice, devotion, and success of native evangelists—both men and women. As one put it, "There is sometimes a tendency to speak of these as mere 'paid helpers,' they are not; they are as truly consecrated servants of God, as full of ardour and enthusiasm for souls, as our own missionaries." And in token of this many instances were given, showing how greatly their labours are being blessed among their own people.

Rev. John O. West, of Birmingham, in a letter on page 24, advocates a monthly day of intercession, having for its objects: (1) The increase of real godliness amongst all who name the name of Jesus—in separation from the world to Him, in the deepening of brotherly love, courage for Christ, and full consecration for his glory and service. (2) The increase of the Spirit's power in conviction of sin and leading souls to accept the Gospel. This proposal will, we feel sure, strike a welcome chord in many hearts. We understand that July 1 has been decided upon by Christians in Birmingham as marking "the beginning of months" in this regard.

In reply to our dear friend Mr. Jas. E. Mathieson, in his letter of May 30, we remind our readers that the papers on "The Unveiling" were stated from the first to be "a contribution" to a study of supreme importance. They make no claim to be exhaustive even on their own line, and are compatible with a past, a present, and a future fulfilment—a continuous fulfilment leading on to a culmination. If we felt that these papers were calculated to create discord rather than harmony, by setting one system of interpretation in antagonism with another, we would discontinue them. We think they contain principles which are essential to a sound exegesis on any lines, and that nothing is asserted which is not in keeping with other Scripture.

The Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, sitting last week in London, having received from its Representative Committee a report on the opium question consequent upon the reports issued by the Royal Commissioners, has adopted the following for circulation :—

We have at this time reviewed our position as a Christian Church in reference to the traffic in opium carried on by the Indian Government. After very careful consideration of all that has been laid before us in the light of fresh evidence as to facts, we are brought to the conclusion that nothing has transpired to shake our deep-rooted conviction that the trade in this drug for other than medical purposes is morally indefensible, and that no question of expediency or of supposed political necessity can justify us in giving the least countenance to that which is the cause of so much evil to multitudes of our fellow-men.

We therefore desire that the efforts of our own members and of our fellow-Christians everywhere to bring about the entire suppression of the opium traffic may be prosecuted with unabated vigour until the overthrow of this iniquitous system is complete.

Signed on behalf of the meeting,

CALEB R. KEMP, Clerk.

Rev. John Watson, of Liverpool, has done a timely service by his speech before the Free Church Assembly on "A Plea for the Spirituality of the Church." His genial satire of the many ridiculous claims upon a minister's time and care ought to make some folks ashamed. Why should a minister be concussed into the service of all kinds of trumpery societies? Has not the full time come when he ought to be released from the burden of financial affairs, whether building a church or assisting a dozen business men to administer a few hundred pounds? The worst of it is that many ministers are forced into this needless kind of work because, unless they attend to it, it will not be done at all, or there will be contention over the doing of it. They go to it as peacemakers rather than as business men, in order that they may safeguard the highest welfare of the churches. Ought this so to be?

A more important word fell from Mr. Watson's lips as to the relative value and importance of apologetic work and evangelistic work :—

We have defended Christ long enough, we shall now declare Him. The world accepts the Church as a well-managed institution; let her hear the Church as the standing witness to the hopes of the soul, to the person of Jesus, to the life everlasting.

Let these words sink into the souls of preachers. For nothing do men care so deeply, so universally, so abidingly as the great question of pardon, justification, and everlasting life. To deal with lower themes is to miss the great end of the minister's calling. Mr. Watson, however, went out of his way to attack mission halls, in defence of which we may have something to say next week.

A remark of Rev. J. E. H. Thomson in an article in The Thinker on "The Miraculous Element in Daniel," seems to us to be true of nearly the whole of the writing which goes by the name of the Higher Criticism. He says :—"The real objection to Daniel which influences most of the opponents of its authenticity is not drawn from history or philology; it is really the presence of the miraculous element." Mr. Thomson thinks that the Israelites were saved from their proneness to idolatry, not only by the discipline of exile, but much more by the evidence which, in exile, they saw in the miracles wrought on behalf of God's true servants, that Jehovah was the true God. Thus "Marduk or Merodach was the god whom above all others Nebuchadnezzar worshipped; to him he attributed his conquests, and to him in all likelihood he erected the statue in Dura. He, among other attributes, was the god of fire. When the three Hebrew youths refused to worship the golden image, they defied the great god of the Babylonian Empire." The whole article is thoughtful and satisfying.

Mr. Harry Quilter brings, in the pages of The Contemporary, a serious, but, we think, perfectly fair charge against some evening papers and illustrated journals of doing more than even fiction or the drama "to degrade art and excite the animal appetites." Any railway bookstall contains only too much evidence of the harm that is being done. As for the artists themselves, he says :—

It is nothing less than pitiable to see these talented young fellows, with all the fair world of art before them, producing week after week, pictures of drunkards, costermongers, and cocottes, vying with one another in the debasement of their best ideals. It is vulgarity which is the raison d'être of our new illustrated papers, and they are daily vulgarising England.

Unless our artists, young and old, forsake this corrupting work, they will never be anything but a curse.

In Blackwood Mr. Hugh E. M. Stutfield has a vigorous and well-deserved condemnation of the "decadent" school of fiction. His appeal to women ought not to be in vain :—

The matter rests largely in the hands of women. I do not wish to say anything unfair, but I think it cannot be denied that women are chiefly responsible for the "booming" of books that are "close to life"—life, that is to say, as viewed through sex-maniacal glasses. They are greater novel-readers than men, to begin with, and their curiosity is piqued by the subjects dealt with in the new fiction and drama, and not a few of them regard the authors as champions of their rights. In all matters relating to decency and good taste men gladly acknowledge the supremacy of women, and we may surely ask them to give us a lead in discouraging books which are a degradation of English literature.

Some of the fault may perhaps lie in the readiness of men to leave this kind of thing with women. Men and women should in all things act together; men should not be blindly led by women, nor women by men. We are confident that many children go astray because fathers leave them too much to the care of mothers, and mothers are too ready to take their sole management. The child is safest under a blended rule, unless one of the parents be dead, in which case the living parent often strives to make up in authority or in gentleness for the one who has been taken.

An attempt is about to be made to abolish the barmaid. This, when done, will be good for her, for the men who congregate around her, and for society at large. No more offensive sight can be seen than foolish young men and wicked old men hanging round girls in refreshment rooms and at refreshment bars at railway stations. Young persons who are travelling ought not to have to see it. A change will be resisted, really for the sake of the owners' profits, but ostensibly because it will be hard upon the girls themselves. No doubt there will be hardship for a time, but it will lead to ultimate good. Of course it would be best if the evil were corrected alone by the action of a healthy public opinion.

The law of divorce, as it affects both the guilty and the innocent persons, is before the public, and whilst an amendment of it is clearly required by justice, and by the law of our Saviour, we think that the High Church party will prevent any reform at all if they press for all that they usually contend for. One thing, the first thing, and a thing as clear as day, is, that divorce should be only for adultery; this is so in the case of the woman, but in the case of the man there has also to be cruelty in addition. Thus, immorality in men is condoned and fostered, and a double standard of conduct set up for the sexes.

Canon Barnett points to a characteristic of our times which needs bold effort to efface it—impertinence. He attributes it to consciousness of power. Of course we have always had with us the boy who knows a good deal better than his father—the prodigal was of that order—but, in addition, we have a general tone of flippancy which pervades both writing and speaking, and is in the Church as well as outside of it. Some of the precepts of the ancients need reviving. "Likewise, ye younger, be subject unto the elder." "Be clothed with humility." "Walk humbly with thy God." No one can walk humbly with his God and be impertinent to men. The fear of the Lord, reverence for "the King Eternal," is the only remedy for this phase of modern life.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

It was pleasant to turn aside from the rush and bustle of Bank Holiday in London to the quiet, happy meetings which were held as usual in connection with the above mission at Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, N.W.

In the afternoon Dr. McKilliam gave an address on "Victor Crowns," which was listened to with great interest by an unusually large audience. One pleasing feature of the gathering was its representative character, which was manifested in the ready response to Mr. C. Russell Hurditch's invitation for special prayer for any part of the Lord's work. Requests were made by workers from China, New Zealand, Manchester, and for a large number of places in London, including Dr. Barnardo's Homes and similar centres of Christian effort.

The evening meeting (following a comfortable social tea in the large schoolroom of Kilburn Hall) was still more largely attended, and inspiriting addresses were given by Pastor Fuller Gooch, Mr. J. J. Sims, Mr. James, from China, and others. Mrs. Sims and Mr. F. H. Hutchins sang several Gospel duets.

PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS.—The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was recently held at the Sunday School Union House, 56, Old Bailey, Mr. P. Cadby presiding. It appears from the report that the sum of £753 has been divided among sixty-three beneficiaries during the past year. There is every prospect that during the year now commencing the number of grants will be considerably increased, as many new applications are already to hand.

DARTFORD.—The occasion of the nineteenth anniversary was used to rename the British Workman and Mission Hall in Heath-street the "Blackwood" Temperance Hotel and Mission. Colonel Morton made a genial chairman on Wednesday evening, rendering his tribute of affection to the sainted memory of Sir Arthur Blackwood. Rev. George Savage, speaking as an intimate friend, also epitomised his character as a man of prayer, fond of Bible research, a powerful speaker, a tract distributor—withal never worried, but genial, friendly, and cheerful. Mr. Stidolph, the founder and hon. superintendent, gave an account of the work, the property of which was being put in trust. An appeal was made for funds, which was emphasised by Mr. John Kirk and other friends.

The Power of Christ's Resurrection.

By REV. W. CROSBIE, NOTTINGHAM.

There is no power like it; neither mechanical, nor dynamical, nor vital. It is the power of an almighty force, acting on our whole complex humanity, raising, transforming, ennobling, glorifying it, and exalting it finally to the very throne of God, and harmonising it with all its august and ineffable conditions and relationships. Realising it, the subjects of its operations, through faith's union, we are translated even now into a new realm, and enter upon a process of renewal and upon a path of progress, whose culmination will be equality of position, conjoint heirship, and perfect conformity of character with the risen, victorious, and enthroned Christ. "The exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to that working of the strength of his might which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead!" (Eph. i. 19, 20).

The resurrection is a power when there is unfaltering conviction of the truth of it, when it lies in the mind as an assured article of belief, when faith grasps and holds it as a fact, and the imagination as an ideal. But its greatest power is its power as a vital, spiritual energy, as the veritable and victorious life of Christ, streaming down, and into, and possessing those who are organically joined to Christ. Gentle it is sometimes as the falling dew, or as the tender sunlight, but always mighty as omnipotence. And strong, great, beautiful, holy, all-conquering is the life that is linked and filled with it.

It is the world's only hope, if men will but consider. Not in parliaments, nor in the reforms and social reconstructions of theorists, is the needed salvation; but in the power of Christ's resurrection. Here is the moral gravitation that is to lift a fallen world, and make all things new. Here is the supreme potency; here is the mightiest factor in the progress of the ages. In the risen and enthroned Christ reside the all-subduing forces; and in Him is the pledge, the guarantee, of glorious reconciliations, and re-creations, and restitutions. "All authority hath been given unto Him in heaven and on earth" (Matt. xxviii. 18). "And He must reign, till He hath put all his enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. xv. 24).

The Holy Ghost, it may be truly said, is The power of Christ's resurrection. "This Jesus did God raise up. . . . Being, therefore, by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear" (Acts ii. 33). What manifestation of that power on the Day of Pentecost, ten days after Jesus took possession of the mediatorial throne! But there should be grander manifestation of that power in the days that are coming, preliminary and preparatory to the end of the age. "The residue of the Spirit" is more than the measure already poured out; the Pentecost to come should surpass the Pentecosts of the past, and when the necessary channels in the Church's desire, and faith, and resolute and united pleadings are all open and vastly multiplied, when the terms and conditions of the original manifestation are renewed, with a great and universal renewal—the Church casting herself wholly on God, giving herself to special, prolonged waiting upon Him—more dependent, more self-renouncing, and, therefore, more closely and more vitally linked with her risen Lord—that mightiest baptism of the Spirit will come; and the Church will go forth splendidly equipped to her last witness-bearing, and to the accomplishment of the final triumphs of the Gospel.

Oh, for the dawn of that better time, when the Church, no longer on the low levels of unbelief and carnality and coldness and inefficiency, shall mount up to, and move along, the high planes of resurrection privilege and power and life; a mighty conquering host; "her neck like the tower of David, builded for an armoury, whereon hang a thousand bucklers all shields of mighty men" (Cant. iv. 4). "And looking forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners" (Cant. vi. 10).

KESWICK IN MANCHESTER.

[From a Correspondent.]

Manchester has been the scene of a Convention during the past week which all who were present at cannot but feel will leave its mark on the city and neighbourhood. The Holy Spirit was powerfully present, and has sent back to their parishes and congregations the large number of clergymen and ministers who attended (and the number was remarkable) deeply impressed with this great truth—That there was a life of blessing to be lived higher than anything they had yet realised, and that the power to live it is pledged to every fully yielded soul.

Those who know Manchester know that it takes something to stir its busy people so as to fill its great Free Trade Hall—yet for three consecutive nights this was the case—and for three consecutive days, beginning at 10.30 each morning, there were large attendances at the four other meetings. With the ministers' meeting, held at the adjoining Y.M.C.A., this made six large gatherings each day.

The Convention had been long and prayerfully prepared for. On the Sunday previous in many pulpits—specially Church of England, where the movement has taken a deep hold—the subject was spoken of. On the following Monday evening there was a prayer meeting of wonderful power in the Y.M.C.A., when the "drops" of the coming shower were felt by all present. The Convention opened on Tuesday morning, May 28. Those privileged to hear the addresses will not soon forget the Bible readings of Prebendary Webb-Peploe and Rev. Charles Inwood, or the addresses by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, Evan H. Hopkins, and J. J. Luce, nor the addresses to business people by Rev. C. G. Moore.

The following results call for devout thanksgiving to God:—(1) A spirit of prayer has been given in a larger measure than ever before. (2) A spirit of union has been poured out, a sinking of "ism," and a drawing to Christ. (3) A spirit of longing for holiness and likeness to Christ has been given. For all this we praise the Lord. We shall watch the near future with hope and expectation. Many clergymen and ministers have had their prejudices removed. It was beautiful to see cathedral dignitaries and ministers, who had hitherto shown no sympathy, quietly laying all prejudice aside and attending meetings, and from some quiet corner learning precious truths which were taught by the Lord Himself.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—St. Nicholas' Mission, started a little over a year ago by two deaconesses and two young helpers from Mildmay, has rapidly developed. A prominent feature of the work is the Girls' Institute. Another branch is the rescue work carried on at Hope Cottage. The mission and home visitation in a somewhat neglected corner has proved a means of much blessing.

THE INFANT ORPHAN ASYLUM.—The report states that sixty-one children had been admitted during the year, and sixty-seven had left to take their share in the struggle and turmoil of the world's business. In the daily course of its operations no less than 608 fatherless children have participated in the maintenance, the protection, and the teaching provided by the institution. The responses to the appeal made last year for new annual support had not been very encouraging. Under those circumstances, the board stated, a serious difficulty had arisen, which would have already assumed a formidable character but for the large amount received in the shape of legacies during the past year. It was useless to put aside the fact that the annual subscriptions to the asylum had seriously lessened for some years past, in spite of the varied appeals and incessant efforts to arrest the decline.

THE UNVEILING.—22.

"MY TWO WITNESSES."—II.

The Unveiling, as we have seen throughout these studies, lays bare the inward and spiritual causes of outward and visible effects. The hidden sources of all wars and fightings are the lusts which war in the members. The testimony of the witnesses of Christ appeals to the inner life, rebukes the law of sin in the members, and substitutes for it, where the testimony is obeyed, the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. The staying of rain, the turning of waters into blood, the smiting of the earth with every plague as often as they will, are therefore to be interpreted primarily of the inner life. The outward plagues with which Moses smote Egypt had their spiritual counterpart in the woes with which Jesus Christ the Faithful Witness smote the Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites (Matt. xxiii.), and in the words with which Peter smote the same Jerusalem sinners after the murder of their Messiah, constraining them to cry, "Ye mean to bring this man's blood upon us."

Saul was full of desire to hurt the witnesses on earth, but the word of the Faithful Witness in heaven, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" burnt like fire in his ears, slew the enemy within him, and made him a minister and a witness of the very truth he had endeavoured to destroy.

Stephen's retrospect of their history, culminating in the words, "Ye do alway resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye," fell upon them like a veritable plague, so that they gnashed upon him with their teeth, and ran upon him, and cast him out of the city, and stoned him. His prayer, "Lord lay not this sin to their charge," his cry, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit," and his face shining like an angel's, smote as with fire the heart of the young man named Saul, at whose feet they laid their garments.

If we give our hungry or thirsty enemy to eat or to drink, we heap coals of fire on his head. "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do," were words of fire out of the mouth of Jesus, which fell on the head and entered the heart of the thief who had been reviling Him, and turned his enmity into reverence and love. On the other hand, God's word of fire through Peter's lips slew Ananias and Sapphira, and through those of Paul smote Elymas the sorcerer with blindness.

The adaptation of outward circumstance to inward experience has always coloured the language of mankind. When Moses, blessing Israel, said, "His fountain shall be upon a land of corn and wine, also his heavens shall drop down dew," he spoke primarily of earthly prosperity, but we habitually use such beautiful words with reference to the inward life. When Jehovah says by Joel, that the locusts have barked his fig-tree, He means that their sins have ruined his people, and as a barked tree withers away, so joy is withered away from the sons of men.

The figurative and symbolic language of the Unveiling is to be similarly understood. We must not restrict the living poetry of the Holy Ghost to the outward letter. The life is more than the meat which feeds it, and the body of spiritual truth is more than the language which is its raiment.

None of the visions which John saw have been more variously interpreted than this of the Two Witnesses, and no part of it has seemed more difficult than the fire which proceeded out of their mouths; and the authority given them to shut the heaven that it rain not in the days of their prophesying; to turn the waters into blood; and to smite the earth with every plague as often as they will. This has been conceived to be so incompatible with the Gospel of the grace of God that it has been regarded as an important argument for an exclusively future interpretation of the Book of the Unveiling.

Let us first consider the last particular mentioned—"as often as they will." The first qualification of the witnesses of the risen Christ is, "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me." They had left all and followed Him, and they had continued with Him in his temptations. True, the needle of their faith deflected in the hour of his sorest need; they all forsook Him and fled; because they were stumbled by the disappointment of their mistaken hope of a temporal and earthly kingdom. Nevertheless, they were true at heart, and proved the reality of their confidence in Jesus by a ten days' waiting for the promised Spirit.

They each presented their body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, their reasonable service, and did not conform themselves to this age, but yielded themselves to be transfigured by the renewing of their minds, that they might prove the holy, acceptable, and perfect will of God. Their priestly, pharisaic, and sadducean enemies took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. They had the mind of Christ, who had left them an example that they should tread in his steps.

This was the mind of Christ: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God." "Not my will, but thine be done." When He said, "Father, I WILL that they whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am," He uttered the Father's will. He never merely submitted or consented to that will, but He actively and strenuously willed the will of God.

So it has always been with the witnesses of Jehovah in former dispensations, and of Jehovah-Jesus in the present.

Moses willed the will of God when he turned the Egyptian waters into blood. Elijah willed the will of God when he prayed that the heaven might be shut from rain, and when he prayed again and God sent rain upon the earth. All praying in the Holy Ghost, and all true witnessing to men, is the expression of the positive and active will of his servants in harmony with the will of God. For all that God does among men, is done through human agency. Therefore, the plagues with which Christ's witnesses smite the earth are the action of their own will in active harmony with the will of Christ.

The turning of the waters into blood is repeated with greater intensity under the third vial (xvi.). There the angel of the waters says, "Thou hast given them blood to drink, for they are worthy." Whatever outward fulfilment of this may be conceived as taking place in the past or in the future, are we not all agreed that the most terrible part of judgment is not that which affects the body, but that which affects the soul and spirit?

Did not Samuel shut heaven, that there was no rain on Saul during the days of his prophesying, when "the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets"? Do we not all know something of an experience in the spirit which we could express in no fitter words than that the heaven overhead was brass, and the rain of our land powder and dust? (Deut. xxviii. 23, 24); and was not this the effect, mediately or immediately, of the pungent and searching prophesying of Christ's sackclothed witnesses?

Were not the fountains and rivers in David's experience turned into blood from the day that Nathan the prophet declared to him, "The Lord hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die; . . . but the sword shall never depart from thy house?" The blessed Apostle who was caught up into Paradise, and was nothing behind the very chiefest Apostles, though he was nothing, says to Jesus, "When the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed I also was standing by, consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him." And when very near the end of his journey he thanks Christ Jesus his Lord for putting him into ministry, who was before a persecutor and injurious. He never forgot the blood of Stephen, though God had abundantly pardoned him (Isa. lv.). "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" If judgment begins at the house of God, and his saints reap what they sowed to the flesh, though the righteous God has put away and abundantly forgiven their sins, what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel at the mouth of his sackclothed witnesses?

Perhaps if we knew more of being clothed in sackcloth we should more easily and simply understand the powers wherewith God endows his witnesses. "The powers of the coming age" (i.e., of this present age)* are unknown to us, and we are weak and become like other men, because our Nazariteship is so largely lost.

There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in our philosophy.

There are more gifts and powers committed to Christ's witnesses, who go forth unto Him without the camp, than are dreamt of by priests and rulers within the city. M.

"LO! I AM WITH YOU ALWAY."

By the Authoress of "The Starless Crown."

Faith lends her wings to love's desire,
Thy promise to embrace;
Lord Jesus, bid us still aspire,
Touch every waiting heart with fire,
And crown us with thy grace.

We lift thy glorious standard, Lord,
Rejoicing in thy sway;
Our inmost souls thy voice have heard,
And fain would spread thy quickening word,
Thy last behest obey.

We have no might, but thine we claim,
The Spirit's glorious dower;
No wisdom, but to speak thy fame;
Our courage rises at thy Name,
That clothes us in its power.

Love's sweet compelling force we seek,
That draws the lost to Thee;
The touch that hidden bonds can break,
That brings thy succour to the weak,
And makes the blind to see.

Our lives surrendered to thy cause,
From earth's allurements freed;
Our highest glory in thy cross,
We find our gain in seeming loss,
And trust Thee with our need.

Thou wilt be with us where we go,
Thy mercy will defend;
Thy power is greater than the foe,
For life or death, thy love we know
Our portion to the end.

We worship low before thy feet,
Our all to Thee we bring;
Thy Presence makes our joy complete,
And while thy promise we repeat,
Go forth to serve our King!

* "In the New Testament, when speaking from a Christian standpoint the world [age] to come would signify the age beyond the judgment day, as in Matt xii. 32; but, speaking from the Jewish standpoint, as in Heb. vi. 5, 'the coming age' signifies the days of the Messiah, the incoming period between the First and Second Advent."

THE VISION OF THE HOLY WATERS.

Ezek. xlvii. 1-12.

By Rev. G. WAINWRIGHT.

The closing chapters of this book contain a remarkable vision, in which the prophet sees the temple at Jerusalem rebuilt, and sacrifices and priestly worship renewed. Our text makes the vision more mysterious still. Waters are seen to issue from the temple, going forth in an eastward direction, ever increasing in depth, fertilising the desert through which they pass, and finally emptying themselves into the Salt Sea, whose bitterness and death they heal. It is not surprising that authorities differ as to the meaning of this strange vision. Insuperable difficulties appear to attend every method of interpretation. It seems to foretell a future for the Israelitish nation, in which they shall occupy a position of highest glory, and shall be the centre from whence blessing shall flow to all nations. When the event itself takes place the accuracy of the prediction will be seen.

But meanwhile this vision is full of significance for us. It sets forth the truth concerning the Holy Spirit, whose influences are so often compared in the Old Testament and the New to the effect of waters in the desert.

We may learn something concerning the source, the increase, and the effects of the Holy Spirit in the life of every individual believer.

I.—The Source of the Holy Spirit. Whence does He come to us? The answer contained in this vision is most suggestive. "Behold," says Ezekiel, "waters issued out from under the threshold of the house...and the waters came down from under the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar" (verse 1). To find their source we must pass into the innermost sanctuary. From the most Holy Place where is the Mercy Seat, which is the throne of the King, these waters spring, and flow thence by way of the altar towards the desert.

This reminds us, first, that we owe to God Himself not only the gift of the Son, but also the gift of the Holy Spirit. We are accustomed to think much of the love which "in the fulness of time sent forth the Son made of a woman, made under the law," that by the sacrifice of Himself He might redeem us from the curse of the law. But the love which sent forth the Holy Spirit, not to inhabit a holy body specially prepared for Him, but to make his perpetual abode in the hearts of sinful men, surely this deserves equal recognition! (See Gal. iv. 4-6.) Let us include the Holy Spirit as well as the Son when we give thanks to God for his unspeakable gift.

But note also that the waters came forth by the altar, the place of sacrifice, where the victim accepted by God on behalf of sinful men was offered. Only by that altar can the Holy Spirit descend to dwell in us. It may be in the heart of God to give the Spirit; but the gift will be according to righteousness. Hence it was not until the death, and resurrection, and ascension of Jesus that the Holy Ghost could be given. The same truth was set forth in type in the wilderness. The Rock, which was Christ, shall yield waters to the thirsty Israelites—but when? Not until smitten by the rod of Moses. So it is only from the smitten and wounded heart of Jesus that the atoning blood and the life-giving water can flow. It is this explains the words of John, "The Holy Ghost was not yet, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

How should we value a gift coming to us from such a source, and which Jesus valued so highly as to deem it worth his while to die in order that we might possess it!

II.—The Increase of the Spirit. The waters rapidly increase in depth. After the first thousand cubits they are to the ankles; after another thousand they are to the knees; after a third thousand they are to the loins; after another thousand they become "waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over" (3-5).

This graphic picture is fulfilled in the increase of the influence and operations of the Spirit in the individual believer. From the first moment when the Spirit begins his work within us we may expect a never-ending increase. The ideal Christian life is one of continual advance, of endless progression, of ever-increasing fulness of blessing. Our light is to shine "more and more unto the perfect day." Our journey is "from strength to strength." Our transformation is to be effected "from glory to glory." We never reach a position from which there is no advance. The goal of to-day is the starting post of to-morrow, the summit just gained becomes the base of a loftier ascent. Neither in time nor in eternity will we ever be able to say "I have attained." There, as here, it will be true that "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." What infinite possibilities are ours if the Holy Spirit dwells in us!

Nor need we wonder at this when we remember that it is the special work of the Spirit to reveal to us the things of Christ. Is there any end to that revelation? Are not "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hid in Him"? Do we not speak of "the unsearchable riches of Christ"? Has it not "pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell"? With such a subject as Jesus, and such a teacher as the Holy Spirit, we need not be wading ankle-deep, but may lose ourselves in the unfathomable depths.

There is a very important principle recognised in this increase. The waters took a course first eastward towards the desert, then turned into the deathlike region of the Salt Sea. The need increased as the waters pursued their course; and the waters increased accordingly. They were deeper in the desert than at the temple, and deeper still where they were needed to heal the waters of the sea. This is the principle upon which Grace always works. We receive from God not according to merit, but according to acknowledged need. Conscious emptiness is the condition of being filled. He who has no need can obtain no blessing; he whose need is greatest obtains the fullest supply. "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground." The poor are filled with good things; the rich are sent empty away. Cultivate a sense of helpless dependence. Dread above anything a condition of self-sufficiency. Growth does not mean that we become less needy; but rather that we become conscious of deeper need, which leads us to trust for a more abundant supply.

III. The Effects of the Spirit. Wherever these waters from the Sanctuary came, they produced most remarkable changes. Barrenness gave place to fertility; desolateness to beauty; death to life. Two pictures of these effects are given.

(1) The Healing of the Salt Sea (8-10). What a mysterious sea that is! Travellers may have exaggerated in their descriptions of its deathlike character. But all efforts of recent authorities only modify somewhat, without materially altering, earlier statements as to its desolate and dreary nature. Little or no verdure is found upon its banks; few, if any fish, are found in its waters. No fishing-boats are ever seen upon it; and no fishers spread their nets by its shores. But a change is to take place. Its waters, which have continued unhealed, though the Jordan has poured into it for centuries, shall be sweetened by these waters from the sanctuary. Fish shall abound in it as the fish of the Great Sea. From Engedi to En-eglaim fishers shall yet spread nets upon its coasts, the bitterness and loneliness and oppressive stillness of death shall give place to the beauty and joy and activities of life. That is the effect produced by the Spirit in the individual life. His first work is to quicken into newness of life those who are "dead in trespasses and sins." Then as dwelling within, He renews the spirit of the mind, and clothes the life with all the graces of the Christian character. Self gives place to the new life, in which the fruit of the Spirit appears. So powerful is his working that the vilest habit, the most obstinate evil, yields before his influence. In that part of our life in which we have most conspicuously failed, He can obtain his greatest triumph. Expect great things from the Holy Spirit who dwells within you.

(2) An effect not less remarkable is presented by the trees which grow on the banks of the river. Of these trees we are told that they are "very many," that they bear new fruit every month, that their fruit is never consumed, and that their evergreen leaves have a healing virtue (see verses 7 and 12). There is no difficulty in applying the metaphor; for Scripture frequently compares the righteous to beautiful and fruitful trees. Behold in these trees what God, by his indwelling Spirit, designs to make of your life. If the leaf which is the adornment of the tree represents the graces of godliness, then fruit represents the activity and usefulness of Christian service. Both are found in the man in whom the Spirit dwells and works. Do you not know some men whose outward character is all that could be desired, but who never bring forth any fruit for God? Are not these like the barren fig-tree, beautiful to the eye, but disappointing both to God and man? And do you not know others who are active and earnest enough, but who have none of the gentleness and meekness and amiability which should mark the true Christian? Seek to combine both. Even the leaves of the tree have healing virtue. A true Christian, by the very life He lives, may strengthen the weak, and bind up the broken-hearted. His cheerfulness does good like a medicine.

The fruit is described as varying, yet ever seasonable. It is "new fruit according to his months," or as the first Psalm puts it, "fruit in his season." That is, a Christian who is living in the power of the Spirit bears fruit suitable to his position and circumstances. The master bears the fruit of firmness, and gentleness, and righteousness;—the servant, the fruit of obedience, and respectfulness, and diligence. The parent bears the fruit of wisdom love, patience; the child, that of reverence and affection. And the fruit is always seasonable. Not that of speech when we ought to be silent, nor that of silence when we ought to speak. To be gentle under provocation, meek under persecution, brave in actual peril, stedfast under powerful temptation, patient under suffering—this is seasonable fruit.

Both fruit and leaf are owing to the waters "which issued out of the Sanctuary." Neither can be put on from without. Both must be a growth from the life within. Let every avenue of your being be opened to the living Spirit who dwells within, and neither leaf nor fruit will ever fail.

MR. G. CLARKE AT GLOUCESTER.

Mr. George Holmes writes:—"I send you a cutting from a local paper, The Citizen, of May 28, giving a faithful account of a remarkable mission just brought to a close in Gloucester, where I am staying for the purpose of forming a Y.M.C.A. as an outcome of the said mission. Two omissions are made in the report, viz., that of an open-air meeting in the Park, attended by about 4000 people, on Sunday, and the daily afternoon Bible readings, attended by an average of about 600 people. I have attended and taken part in many missions, but I never remember witnessing anything like the present. No excitement, no solo singing, nothing but a quiet declaration of the truth; and yet, night after night, numbers were unable to gain admission to the largest church in Gloucester. On the evening of May 27, at the Wesleyan Church, among others in the pulpit were four Church of England clergy, also Baptist, Wesleyan, Congregational, Presbyterian, and other ministers, and all confessed it was a remarkable close to a wonderful outpouring of God's Holy Spirit."

The Citizen said in its report: "Monday night marked the close of the most remarkable Evangelical mission which, for more than three weeks, has been the topic of interest among hundreds, we might almost say thousands, of nearly every class in all parts of the city. Rather, it was not the close of the mission that was marked, it was the closing service that was held, and a most impressive scene it made.

"It is said that some 600 have professed conversion during the mission....What explains it?

"Probably the only answer is that it has been God's power manifested in many agencies. There was a Power which compelled those who listened to acknowledge 'This is the Truth,' and it was the Truth that held them. 'Truth from His lips prevailed with double sway.' Then the unity that prevailed among many sections of the Christian Church (in the rostrum on Monday night Evangelical Churchmen, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians were all represented), and the prayers of Christian folk in all parts of the country for a blessing on this Gloucester mission were all owned in the result. It is evident that those who have been behind the scenes in the inquiry-room have a great faith in the lasting character of the movement."

THE PROPOSED PROTESTANT NURSING INSTITUTE.—With reference to the statement of Mrs. Arbuthnot on this subject, at the recent meeting of the Women's Protestant Union, we understand that the object is to provide against Ritualists and Romanists obtaining access to Protestant families where the income is limited, and the nursing fee of two guineas per week prohibitive. Further particulars of the undertaking may be had from Mrs. Arbuthnot, Plaw-Hatch, East Grinstead, Sussex.

PROPHETICAL CONVENTIONS.

WITH reference to the proposed meeting of students of prophecy of the Historical School, "with a view to discussing the propriety of making arrangements for a winter campaign similar to the one recently undertaken by the Futurists," Major Porcelli writes, explaining that he did not use the word "campaign" in any antagonistic sense. He used the expression to convey the idea of a series of meetings, and contemplated gatherings conducted in the spirit of Christ. Friends interested in the subject may communicate with Major Porcelli, Alverstoke, Hants.

We have also received the following letters:—

DEAR SIR,—After Mr. Mathieson's excellent letter in your last issue, I should like to be allowed to add to what I said before, that I think his advocacy of freedom of speech for conventions of differing schools of Prophetic interpretation may be fully accepted, if only unseemly rivalry and unbrotherly asperity of language be avoided. Mr. Jackson is probably right in thinking that I was alarmed at the word "campaign" which Major Porcelli used, and which is rather suggestive of a combative spirit, which on such subjects is undesirable.

I will own too what frightened me even more than this, was reading in The Morning Star some months ago a report of an address at a Birmingham Prophetic Conference, in which Mr. Pember used the language which I have already quoted. The heading of the address was "Divine wisdom and human folly!"—a somewhat unbrotherly description of the two differing schools of Prophetic interpretation.

If conventions can be organised to set forth the great subject of our Lord's coming in harmony with the historical interpretation of prophecy, and also in harmony with Christian brotherly-kindness, by all means let them be held. But I own I doubt the wisdom of attempting such just now. It will be very hard to avoid the appearance of rivalry before the world, and such language as Mr. Pember's is so provocative of a similar style of rejoinder, that it will require much grace on the part of Historicists to avoid unseemly licence of language.

If all Futurists wrote and spoke as Mr. Mathieson does, there would be no difficulty. However, let nothing that I have said hinder those who are anxious to show to the Church and to the world that there is another side of the Antichrist question; and one, as Mr. Jackson well remarks, peculiarly needed in the present day, as "an antidote to the Romanist and Ritualist poison."—Yours very sincerely, HENRY E. BROOKE.

Llandrindod Wells, Radnorshire.

DEAR SIR,—Might there not be a real conference of all schools of interpretation? Instead of the proposed "winter campaign," might there not be harmonious action in the spirit of inquiry? If a speaker of the Historical and Futurist school spoke at each meeting, and written questions were afterwards permitted, much might be gained by both parties.

There are Christian men among us who have commanded soldiers and ruled provinces, who might be asked to preside, and surely Christian people might be expected both to question and reply reverently and courteously. Seeing that the Historical and Futurist interpreters are alike looking for our Lord's speedy coming, they should rejoice that they cherish the same "blessed hope," though arriving at their conclusion by different paths. In regard to some things, both may be right in what they affirm, and wrong in what they deny. As M. Monod once said, "We reach the truth not by subtraction but by addition."

Let us remember that some things may not be wholly intelligible until they are fulfilled. Our Lord said to his disciples, "I have told you before it come to pass, that when it is come to pass ye might believe." Let us also remember that light is promised in the last times; Daniel was told that the words would be sealed until "the time of the end," when "the wise shall understand."—Yours, &c., H. G. ST. DALMAS.

TRAINING INSTITUTE, COLWYN BAY.—The annual meetings in connection with this rising Institution were recently held in the Public Hall, Colwyn Bay. Conferences were held at the Institute, when the election of officers for the ensuing year and general arrangements for the benefit of the Institution were satisfactorily completed. A new year of labour has commenced under encouraging prospects.

AMONG IRISH ROMANISTS.

"OLD F—— is dying, will you go to see him?" someone asked me; and of course the answer was, "Yes." The poor man lay weak and wretched, hoping against hope for his life, while his wife bustled about talking and fussing.

"Has the priest been to see you, F——?"

"No, miss; he doesn't care a bit to visit the poor; but he attends Mrs. B—— regular."

"Howld yer tongue," cried the wife, "shure ye must have patience, his riverince can't be always runnin' afther the likes of you."

"Well, F——, what can I do to help you? Let me see." Having looked to his bodily comforts, I noticed an old prayer-book lying on the window-sill and took it up, knowing that the beautiful Penitential Psalms and the Lord's Prayer, at least, were to be found there. Even Mrs. F—— could not object to my reading words from their own form of worship. The poor man drank in the sweet sounds gratefully.

Thus a beginning was made, and on further visits I was able to repeat hymns, chapters of the Bible, and once or twice to pray. He grew weaker and weaker, and the end drew near quickly. Anxious to know how he felt, I asked him one day, "Are you at peace, F——? Whom are you trusting for salvation?"

"Who but the Lord Jesus?" he answered.

"Then you believe that Jesus Christ alone can save you?"

"I do."

A few hours later he became unconscious, and was soon in the presence of the Lord.

Mrs. B——, a wealthy farmer's widow, was always considered a great "vochun" (anglice—bigot). It was with some fear I went to sit by her sick bed, and talk to her of heavenly things. But faithlessness was rebuked. She listened with pleasure to God's message, and delighted in hearing hymns. "Thy will be done," and "Just as I am" became special favourites. I read selected portions from her books of devotion, and presently verses from the Bible were gladly received. Mrs. B. still lingers on, wishing to live, but perfectly content with the Lord's will, whatever it may be, and her daughter has also given her future utterly into Christ's hands. Peace has come to both, and no fear of purgatory now seems to cloud heaven's light.

One afternoon, some months ago, I was on my way to visit a young mother who lived a considerable distance off, and did not feel at all inclined to delay, in order to speak to two children who stood by the roadside. But the sister of one had been ill, and I stopped to inquire whether a syrup sent her had done good? "Yes, it had relieved the cough, but she was terrible weak and low in herself." I talked awhile to the girl, and found some bright booklets with pictures, which she was delighted to receive. Having been obliged to leave home for a few weeks, I was met on my return by an imploring message, "Would I please go to see Janie L——. She had read the little tract I gave her sister, and did so want to speak to me."

As soon as it was practicable I made my way to the cottage, and found the dying girl propped up with pillows, evidently in an advanced stage of decline, but determined not to face death. She talked over her ailments, and then drank in the story of Lazarus, read through slowly, and with few comments. Then we prayed for peace of soul and body, and parted, promising another visit before long.

Janie watched for me eagerly, and resumed the prayers which she had neglected of late. She was nervous and uneasy, passing the beads restlessly through her thin fingers. I noticed the scapular fastened round her throat and the veiled image of the Virgin on the window-sill.

"She lost all hope this morning," the poor mother said, "and she frets about the cold earth over her; shure she'll get better still."

"No one can tell which of us may die first, but we should all be ready, and there is only one way. Jesus says, 'He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life.'"

Mrs. L—— sat down, and two other daughters came to listen at the door while I read parts of 1 Cor. xv., John x., and Revelation. Poor Janie's face grew calm and bright, and I felt that God's words were bringing light into the darkness. Pray that it may "shine more and more unto the perfect day."

In some parts of Ireland the priests would never have allowed this sort of evangelistic work among their flocks, yet knowledge of the way of life gives wisdom and understanding. On listening to a few chapters of the Gospel a certain man said, "The Word of God tells us that the blood of Jesus cleanses us from all sin, and He says Himself that He won't cast out anyone that will come to Him. Then, where is the use of paying for absolution, and for anointing, and for masses for the departed souls? To tell the truth, I believe that their chief use is for putting money in the priests' pockets."

It is wonderful how deeply some of these "unlearned and ignorant" ones penetrate into the secrets of God's plan of salvation. Upon hearing part of Acts iv. a Galway peasant remarked, "If St. Peter was the head of our church, as our clergy say, it's a wonder that their teaching and his differ so much. He says there very plainly that there is no salvation in any other, and 'no other name under heaven by which we can be saved,' but that of Jesus. I wonder whether our priests ever read that chapter?"

L—— said, "We are afraid of our clergy to look at a Bible;" while K—— remarked wisely,

"If the Saviour wished that sinners should ever pray to his Blessed Mother He had a grand opportunity to tell his disciples so, when they asked Him to teach them how to pray. It's strange that we can't hear anything in the Scriptures about her being a mediator for us."

"We are told that the Scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation. What must we think, then, of the priest that will call the Bible the 'Devil's Book,' and that 'anyone that will listen to it is a servant of the devil.' That's the way our priests teach the Scriptures!"

A great, but quiet, work is going on among our Roman Catholic population, and surely those who take part in it will receive, as well as bestow, blessing. C. M. B.

SUPPRESSION OF THE OPIUM TRADE.

THE annual meetings of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade were held on Friday in Westminster Town Hall. At the afternoon conference Mr. A. Webb, M.P., presided. The report presented by the secretary, Mr. J. G. Alexander, reviewed the work of the past year, and dealt largely with the situation created by the report of the Royal Commission. Addresses followed by Messrs. H. S. Newman, Chakrabarthy, H. J. Wilson, M.P., J. Hilton, Joshua Rowntree, and others.

At the evening meeting Sir Joseph W. Pease presided, and, in opening, said that he thought one of the most important anti-opium documents that had ever been published was the report of the Royal Commission, which could be regarded as the last struggle of Indian officialism to support the revenue. It had not been a full, fair, and open inquiry. The Government witnesses were prepared witnesses, having been collected and drilled beforehand. The habit of smoking opium had been characterised by all the Commissioners as a low and vicious habit, and it should be borne in mind that 90 per cent. of the trade with China and the Straits Settlements was for the purpose of smoking. How did the Commissioners treat the question of our participation in a trade identified with a "low and vicious habit?" They said, in effect, "If we do not find the drug for China, China will find it for herself." That was the most extraordinary doctrine of Christian morality he had ever heard.

Mr. H. J. WILSON, M.P., replied to the speech recently delivered in the House of Commons by Mr. Fowler. He combated the argument that the drug was of use to ward off fevers, and, dealing with the parallel drawn between opium and alcohol, pointed out that whereas only about 4 per cent. of the population of India used the former in a manner objected to, 93 per cent. of the population might be supposed to use the latter. He was even willing to admit, for the sake of argument, that drink was the greater evil, but what then? Were they to refuse to get rid of one curse because a greater curse existed? The use of opium was injurious to man and dishonouring to God.

Revs. Dr. MUIRHEAD and DAVID JONES described the intolerable evils of opium in China, and maintained that the Society deserves the continued and increased support of all who are interested in the spread of the Gospel in Eastern lands.

WELCOME TO REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

At Exeter Hall on Friday last, a breakfast meeting was held, on the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Head, of Wimbledon, with whom Rev. Andrew and Mrs. Murray are staying as their guests. The gathering was largely attended, and representative of evangelical Christians of various denominations. After preliminary words by Mr. Head, addresses of welcome were delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer, Lord Kinnaird, Rev. C. Inwood, and Mr. Eugene Stock, speaking respectively on behalf of England, Scotland, Ireland, and missionary societies. In the course of the addresses, repeated mention was made of Mr. Murray's invaluable books, and of the important aid rendered by Mrs. Murray in their preparation for English readers.

REV. ANDREW MURRAY'S RESPONSE.

You must feel how difficult it is for me to speak after what has been said. Nothing makes me so afraid as when I find that the expectations concerning my visit are so large. We can only look to God to do what is good in his sight. England and South Africa have been coming into close quarters of late. Politicians, the men of commerce and literature, are thinking of the extension of the Empire. In the name of Jesus England and South Africa shake hands. We are more closely linked together in spirit, and England has had more influence on our religious life than many of you know. The Divine influence which moved the British Isles in the revival time of 1859 and the following years reached South Africa, and in my own and other congregations we had blessed proofs that God was working amongst us. When we heard last year of the Day of Thanksgiving held here to praise God for what He had wrought since 1859, we also had a thanksgiving meeting for the blessing which God had given us. Mr. Moody's visit to your country was also felt later on in ours. Tidings from Edinburgh reached us, and the Spirit of God began to move us in like manner.

In the same way the series of letters in The Revival by "R. P. S." had a powerful effect. I had no conception from whom they came, but they wakened in more than one a yearning after a closer walk with God. And when we read later on of the Conventions at Oxford and Brighton we shared in the blessing. In the great missionary awakening of these latter years we have shared with you. Our Dutch people are sometimes spoken of as enemies to missions. There are some of whom this is true, as it is of the English, but I could point you to not a few who are as keen friends of missions as you have in this land. When building a Mission Institute some years ago, five men, and these by no means rich, were found in my own congregation each to give £100, and one later gave £500.

Very kindly mention has been made of my books. "Abide in Christ" was written thirty years ago, after the revival following 1859, for the sake of my own simple people, to help the young Christians in maintaining their steadfastness. There are in our country those who fully appreciate the same truth you feed on. Let me refer to one incident: I met with a woman in a country district, who, when a girl of seventeen, had been converted to God. She told me how for thirty-seven years she had tried to live the better life, and at last it dawned upon her that if she gave herself utterly to God's will, God could not refuse to take possession. She did it, and at once entered into a life of new joy and victory. She told me how, instead of struggling and self-effort, it became a resting on what Another was doing. People say they would get proud if they felt like that. They do not know, she said, how every thought of pride is kept out by the sense that it is Another who is doing all.

I came to this country because I felt God was leading me. I have had to walk in the dark, not knowing what is expected of me, but assured that I can only do what God does by me. In the invitation that was sent me mention was made of two things as the great need of the Church—the quickening of the spiritual life of believers, and the stirring up to a more entire devotion to God's work. I felt my insufficiency for the work, but I have been surprised at nothing more than the letters that have come to me from missionaries and others from all parts of the world—devoted men and women, testifying to the need they felt in their work of being helped to a deeper and clearer insight into all that Christ could be to them. Let us look to God to carry on the work He has begun in these last years, and wait on Him to reveal Himself among his people in a measure very few have realised. Let us expect great things of our God. At all our conventions and assemblies too little time is given to waiting on God. Is He not willing to put things right in his own Divine way? Has the life of God's people reached the utmost limit of what God is willing to do for them? Surely not. We want to wait on Him; to put away our experiences, however blessed they have been; our conceptions of truth, however sound and Scriptural they seem; our plans, however needful and suitable they appear; and give God time and place to show us what He could do, what He will do. God has new developments and new resources. He can do new things, unheard of things, hidden things. Let us enlarge our hearts and not limit Him. "When Thou camest down, Thou didst terrible things we looked not for, the mountains flowed down at thy presence."

As I have been meditating on what might be the keynote of my message, my mind has again and again rested on the wonderful words of 1 Cor. xv. 24-28: "Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father... Then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all." There is a day coming when even Christ shall, as it were, disappear from his place at the head of the kingdom, and deliver it up to God, even the Father. How little do we know what our Christ is, who does nothing but what God does in Him. "I can of mine own self do nothing; as I hear I judge; and my judgment is just, because I do not mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." On earth and in eternity Christ has but one object—to let God have his way, to let God show forth his glory, to let God alone be seen and honoured. If this is the Spirit of Christ, it must be the Spirit of the Christian too; this alone is the true Christ-life. We must allow God to take the initiative; and while we give Him thanks for the past, trust Him for the future, and wait, wait, wait on our God to take his place, to reveal Himself, and to do the greater things He has to show us.

No word is of greater importance than that word wait. There is only one place where blessing can be obtained—waiting at the throne of grace. Let us open our hearts heavenward, sacrificing everything, with the one object of seeing what God can do for them that wait on Him. If God gives us grace to say, "This one thing I do; I wait on the Lord," we may depend upon it that He will arm and lead his people on to blessing and power such as they have not known. If there be utter emptiness—that is the secret of true waiting—giving up everything to make room for God, He will fill us. It is one of the first axioms in dynamics that two bodies can never occupy the same space at the same time. That holds in the spiritual world. What the life of self occupies the life of God cannot fill. We speak of absolute surrender: the word means more than we imagine. God must show us how true it is that all may be truly given up. He cannot but come in. The only reason why we are weak is that something else occupies the place. SELF lurks somewhere, or God would fill us.

We are vessels of different capacity; but God will fill each. No power in heaven or earth or hell can keep God back from filling an emptied soul. What we need is that God lay his finger on the sore place, and show each of us, and all of us together as his Church, how much there is that we count good and true and lawful which must be given up and put away, if He as God is to fill all. Just think of the sunshine. With what willingness, what perseveringness, the sun sheds its rays everywhere. If for fifty years the shutters be closed, and the house be full of dust and vermin, the sunshine still knocks so gently, at door and shutters, ever whispering, "Open, open to me"; and when opened, with what joy the sunlight rushes in to discover the evil and prepare the way for its being cast out. And is not God, our Sun, with ten thousand times greater willingness and desire yearning and pressing on us to fill us with his light and love, if we will but let Him? God, who gave his Holy Spirit, will indeed not tarry, but cause his love to flow in, if we but remove the obstruction. Let us count upon it most assuredly, if we are but ready, like Jesus, to give all for God, we shall, like Jesus, prove how God will do all for us.

If you seek at any cost to be filled with the blessed Spirit, He will surely fulfil in you the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power. But remember the price must be paid; you must sell all. The merchantman found the pearl of great price, but had to sell all to get it. Let us beware of finding the truth about the better life, and rejoicing in it, while we do not actually part with all to possess it. Let us be sure that if we give all, God will see to it that we get all. Then we shall not only have power to go to conventions and seek and get blessing there, not only be stirred to take some part in supporting those who go out to the heathen, but we shall love perishing souls in our own neighbourhood, and have the courage and the power to bring blessing to them too.

On behalf of Mrs. Murray and myself, I thank you for the loving welcome you have extended to us in the name of our Blessed Lord Jesus.

EUROPEAN ARMAMENTS.

General Turr, the well-known Hungarian promoter of the Corinth Canal, has, in the course of conversation with a representative of the Messager d'Athènes, expressed some ideas on European military expenditure, which the Greek newspaper publishes under the title, "What Prince Bismarck Costs Us." In his remarks General Turr said:—

"No sensible man can deny that Germany, as also Prussia, and in particular the Hohenzollerns themselves, owe a great deal to Prince Bismarck. He is a man whose courage has been crowned with success. He used and misused in their turn all political parties, all nations, all statesmen, and even all sovereigns. He successively hypnotised and charmed them. Bismarck's achievements have cost Europe more than 125,000,000,000f., even if account is taken only of the last twenty-five years of peace, or rather of armed terrorism, organised by him with a view to guarantee the conquests of Germany. Twenty-five years have thus been lost, and 125,000,000,000f. have been squandered without anybody having had the courage to go to war. There still exists that formidable mass of destructive engines and explosive material which a mere spark, a clumsy telegram despatched by one of our great men, might instantly blow up. Modern wars are not of long duration, but they are expensive and sanguinary. Let us admit that six months would suffice to annihilate one or other of the belligerents, or to exhaust both of them. It will cost at least 5,000,000,000f. a month, or 30,000,000,000f. in all, to be added to the 125,000,000,000f. spent on preparations, for it is not true that the present preparations for war will be conducive to peace. When a million of men shall have been massacred in the frightful collision of peoples and races, each man killed will cost 155,000f. That is what Bismarck will have cost Europe.

"Now, if only two-thirds of that sum had been employed to increase the general wealth and welfare, and to improve the lot of the working classes in town and country, the social question would not now weigh like a fearful nightmare on all Europe. There would have been moral pacification, and we should not have had these periodical outbursts which shake the nations of Western Europe to their very foundations. One thing is certain—namely, that if the European Powers continue in the perilous path upon which they have entered they will soon have to face bankruptcy, which catastrophe will inevitably be followed by a period of decay like that which overtook ancient Rome and was only to the advantage of the barbarians. Let us not forget that the great invasions in the world's history have come from Asia. The 'yellow peril' is more threatening than ever. Japan has made in a few years as much progress as other nations have made in centuries. It is only twenty-five years since Japan entered upon the era of progress. . . . If the Chinese are aroused from their lethargy, if a man of genius comes forward to organise that immense empire, which comprises one-third of the human race, and only occupies one-fifteenth part of the habitable globe, the Chinese will be obliged to undertake for their very existence a struggle which will sweep away the famous Wall of China, behind which they have lived for so long almost ignored, and will effect an exodus towards the West. If Europe were united it would be able to resist this invasion of the yellow race. But its present state of folly will not admit of this. It will lead to ruin, and, as in the fifteenth century, it will open the gates of Europe to the barbarians of the East."—The Times.

THE GOSPEL AT THE DERBY.

THE epidemic of Epsomania which annually infects thousands, and ruins not a few, broke out again last week, and "the Downs" teemed as usual with an excited mob hundreds of thousands strong. It is a strange medley of motley sights and sounds. Tipsters, wrestlers, boxers, bookmakers, miscellaneous vendors, open-air preachers all rub shoulders on the course, while the ground is strewn with every kind of advertisement, and here and there a crumpled tract thrown down by an irate recipient.

Yet, giddy as the careless throng may be, it is not all given over to the devil, for a band of workers go down every year to uplift the banner of the Cross in the midst of the ungodly multitude. It is thirty-eight years since Miss Alexander—whose sweet face is now framed with silvered locks—first had laid on her heart the spiritual needs of this vast human concourse, and year by year she has been the moving spirit in the work, surrounded by men of honoured memory like the late Gawin Kirkham, and many others, some in glory, some whose race on earth is nearly run, and others fresh and strong ready to take the place of those who have gone before. But how sadly missed are many of the voices that have rung out the Gospel message of the love of God to men. The Elijahs have been called higher, and we look anxiously for the Elishas who are to follow in their turn. But the Master of the vineyard will not fail of labourers; the Good Shepherd knoweth his own sheep by name and leadeth them out.

There were three bodies of workers this year—(1) The Open Air Mission, under Miss Alexander and Mr. Frank Cockrem, augmented by the London City Mission Male Choir, representing in all some seventy workers. (2) The Racecourse Mission, inaugurated a few years since by Mr. Josiah Nix, now evangelistic secretary of the Polytechnic. (3) The Salvation Army, represented (this year for the first time) by a contingent of two hundred and fifty, led by Colonel Higgins.

It is not "for the fun of the thing" that these labourers enter the arena of sport and chance. I have visited many scenes of Gospel work in slum and den, and witnessed many an exhibition of Satan's power over men, but for virulent spleen and filthiness of tongue I have heard with which the effort to win souls was denounced by some of the habitués of the course, many of them well-dressed and old enough to give hope of better things. As I was the guest of Miss Alexander it is natural that I should dwell more minutely upon her branch of the work, though not to the exclusion, so far as one's sympathy is concerned, of the other agencies noted above.

The forenoon is occupied with the distribution of tracts at various points of vantage along the highways leading to the Downs, and with a prolonged service in front of the grand stand, at which brief addresses alternate with vocal and instrumental selections by the choir, under Mr. Williams's tactful leadership. At one o'clock the missioners return to the town, where they remain during the hours of racing, to disarm the ready gibe that they "only come to Epsom to see the races." In the evening two positions are taken up in the town for simultaneous open-air meetings.

There is not much to choose, at such a time as this, between the town and the course as a scene of Gospel work. At each though a standing audience is more easily secured in the latter, with less contingent bustle. In the evening the disturbers are generally more or less drunk; in the morning they are sober, and therefore, as a rule, more determined. Let the preacher who congratulates himself on having attained to popularity, by reason of his skilful presentations of religious truth before an attentive congregation try, his hand on this ever-moving, unsympathetic host, and he will soon be shorn of his pride, and find his level—and that a low one at the best!

But these faithful men who have engaged in such work for years have long since come to the end of any human power. I was struck with their earnest prayer when they met together in private before proceeding to their onerous task. "Of ourselves we can do nothing;" "If Thou be not with us send us not forth;" "Give us grace to stand anywhere, to do anything just for Jesus' sake"—these were the petitions wrung from their hearts, for they felt like "grasshoppers" in the presence of the "giants of the land."

"And is any good really accomplished?" is the question that naturally arises in the mind of the spectator. How much it is impossible to determine. The seed is cast into the ground, the Lord alone can estimate the harvest. But not a year passes without bringing to light some or awakening directly traceable to this uplifting of the Saviour of men. Here is sufficient warrant for its continuance, and if the opposition is bitter—well, "the disciple is above his Lord." "Marvel not that the world hate you." "If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you."

This is the way the Master trod;
Shall not his servants tread it still?

It was pleasing to see the cordial relationship existing between the Open Air Mission and the Racecourse Mission. The latter, started in 1889 on more "go-ahead" lines, hardly recognised, perhaps, the toil and heat which had been borne by the older movement. But the one has "toned down" a little in some of its methods, and the other may yet be "toned up" as time goes on; at any rate, there was a happy interchange of platform and speaker, and both parties met "around one common mercy-seat" to seek blessing upon their mutual endeavours. Mr. Nix has "a way with him" which never fails to draw an audience. His ready wit commands attention and respect, yet the smile has not time to ripple away ere, sharp as a knife, a home-thrust of searching truth is plunged into the conscience of his hearers—with what telling effect eternity alone will reveal.

The Salvation Army were, as ever, in dead earnest. On Wednesday, when I saw them, their members formed a good ring, and this attracted more, so that their faithful presentation of the Saviour's dying love was listened to by a goodly crowd, which came and went. If I may offer a single criticism it would be "concerning the collection," and the sale of The War Cry. However desirable this custom may or may not be at ordinary meetings, it was particularly unfortunate here, and when they returned at night to London they left a sorry legacy to the other missioners who remained behind. At every subsequent meeting held the fact was thrown up against them—for a racing crowd will not discriminate—and in some instances personal violence was threatened. This is one of the "grits" that makes the machinery "run hot," which will, it is earnestly hoped, have no place in the proceedings next year.

All money-taking has been so studiously avoided by the preachers on the course for well-nigh forty years, that I am sure our Army friends would not wish to imperil good work, or to give occasion to the enemy to blaspheme.

I cannot close this sketch without referring to a veteran missionary of the L.C.M., who, in his latter days, is stationed at Epsom to do such work as his strength will allow. Mr. Wm. Clarke has well-nigh reached his threescore years and ten, but there is plenty of life in him yet. He specially interests himself in the gipsies and nomadic families that go from fair to fair, and make the "Derby" their annual camping-ground. I had the pleasure of going with him amongst them, and was struck with the hearty welcome accorded him by these swarthy denizens of the wayside. But then they know him to be their friend, for does he not address them in their own secret tongue, which he has acquired that he may the more readily tell them of the Saviour who loves them? Miss Alexander, ever rich in good works, gives them an annual tea. Many a warm heart beats below these sun-tanned faces, and though steeped in native superstition and fatalism, yet indications are not wanting that there are among them some to whom the entrance of the Word has given light.

A VISITOR.

MR. I. D. SANKEY recently visited Atlanta, Ga., on his journey east from Texas, and consulted with friends as to arrangements for an evangelistic mission to be held in that city next fall by Mr. Moody and himself.

MR. MATTHEW BURNETT has completed a successful eight weeks' evangelistic and Gospel temperance mission in Middlesbrough, Cowcaddens (Glasgow), and Sunderland. Over 500 persons took the Gospel temperance pledge, many of whom yielded themselves to Christ. Mr. Burnett is now arranging his autumn and winter's programme of evangelistic and Gospel temperance work. Communications may be sent to Woodville, Norwich Avenue, Bournemouth West.

BOCA MISSION, BUENOS AYRES.

BOCA DEL RIACHUELO is the poorest section of the city of Buenos Ayres, and when mission work was begun there in 1889, its mixed population was sunk in wretchedness, and in a large degree criminal in character. Romish priests fostered the ignorance of the people, and seemed to defy Evangelical effort in the district. In the year named Rev. W. C. Morris and wife started their mission, and for four years carried on educational and Gospel work in rented buildings. All who attended the meetings were threatened with excommunication, disaster in the present life and perdition afterwards, and prophecies were floated that the Gospel Hall would speedily be closed. Some of the people declined to leave their souls entirely in the hands of the priests and nuns; and for attending the meetings and reading the Bible they were cast out of employment, ejected from their houses, watched as to their movements, and in every way possible harassed and punished. What threats did not accomplish was done by means of bribes, and the opposition was at times all but overwhelming.

The very activity of the Romanists excited the people, and at length they gathered round the much-abused missionary from motives of curiosity, if not from sympathy, and the various meetings were attended by hundreds of children and adults. Mr. Morris writes:—

"Wonderful success has attended the work; many sinners have been arrested in their downward course, and then edified in the faith of Christ. Here are some incidents: A poor friendless orphan Spanish boy, who came to our night classes, was persuaded to attend the services, and often spoken with and prayed for. After about seven months he came into the light, and now gives great promise of developing into an earnest worker and preacher. A dear old lady (Argentine) of about eighty-three years of age, was drawn towards the Saviour at the bedside of her dying son, as we read and talked and prayed. After his death she began to attend the services, a little later she was delivered from the former darkness, and notwithstanding the threats of the priests, the denunciations and entreaties of the nuns, and the ridicule of some friends and relatives, she left the Church of Rome, obtained a Bible, and prayerfully entered upon the Christian life. Amid very much trouble she holds on faithfully. Since her conversion five of her relatives have entered the way of holiness. A little Spanish girl first came alone to our Spanish Sunday-school, and afterward succeeded in bringing her mother, who in turn coaxed her husband and all her family. Now not only does she belong to the Lord, but her father (who was a drunkard and gambler), mother, and two brothers also.

"We have now in full working order Sabbath and week-night services in English and Spanish, and the English attendance is from 150 to 200, the Spanish from 250 to 300; a flourishing English Sunday-school of 120 scholars and eleven teachers, and a growing Spanish Sunday-school of 250 scholars; an English day-school of seventy boys and girls, and a Spanish day-school of 340 boys; a Gospel temperance society with a membership of 125, and colportage work in various languages. Daily visiting from house to house, distribution of Christian literature in various languages, helping the poor and sick, and other philanthropic endeavours: all these are included.

"In the month of June, 1893, the home of this work was removed from the old rented buildings to more commodious premises, which we purchased at a low price, and on convenient terms of payment, and which have been deeded over to the South American Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This property will thus serve as a permanent centre of Evangelical work. The site upon which the property stands is centrally situated, in Calle General Brown, No. 1050.

"The Boca of to-day is very different from that of 1889, and we can tell the story of many a changed life. The work among the young is specially encouraging. The current expenses represent 620 dollars paper (about £35) per month, or £420 per annum. The sum of £1500 is required to clear the debt off the new property, and about £8000 to enable us to purchase land and erect buildings for a Spanish girls' day school, which has long been urgently needed. I shall be thankful for opportunities to explain the work and plead the cause."

Communications to Mr. Morris should be addressed—Glencairn, Pellatt Grove, Wood Green, N.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 9.—HEBREWS XIII.

Christian Love (1-6).—Of course to the brethren. You may not like them all, but you must love them, in putting their interests on an equality with your own. Strangers and captives are too often forgotten in our prayers and ministrations. Think of the strangers who are being led into evil or are falling into poverty around us, and of the captives for the truth's sake in Turkish prisons and in foreign lands. The love of the marriage-tie must be unsullied, and we must watch against the tendency of love to entwine itself around things or gold. Why should we be ever thinking of money, when God has promised never to fail us? In the 5th verse there are five negatives. Who shall doubt God's word?

Christian Ministers (1-19).—They are described as those who have rule. Remember them; consider the issue of their life; imitate their faith; submit to them, in all matters that pertain to the best interests, when their advice is consistent with the Word of God, and evidently inspired by the Spirit of God. Ministers pass, but Jesus is always the same. Our place is outside the camp of this world; let us not flinch from it. Jesus went thither, and the servant is not above his Lord. (14) Oh, for more of the pilgrim spirit, that lives outside this world's clamour and opinion! (15) Like the priests in the old temple, let us praise more! Praise is as sweet to God as incense to the sense. (16) In addition to the sacrifice of praise should be that of almsgiving. (18) The writer believed that prayer did prevail in securing definite results.

Christian Perfection (20-25).—Perfection means here adjustment, the setting of a dislocated limb. We may be in the body, and yet not in working union with the Head. We need setting, and the God of peace will do it for us. He raised up the Shepherd, of course he can do as much for the flock. When once we are in living and organic union with Jesus, He will be able to effect through us all his will.

MONDAY, JUNE 10.—JAMES I.

Trials Without and Within (1-8).—How these holy men gloried to put their slavery to Christ in the forefront. The menials of such a king are nobles. Trials test faith, and during their prolonged pressure we learn patience, by being compelled to exert it. There will come a time when we shall lack in nothing, but it is not the acquisition of a moment of rapturous faith, patience must have her perfect work. (5) We need wisdom to suffer well. (6) It is easier to bear trial from without than to be swept by the surge of inward doubt. But there is One who can hush the storm to peace. The Lord give us the peace of the single mind!

Real Estate (9-11).—How strange are the reversals of human opinion in the clear light of eternity. The low are high, and the high low. The poor are rich, and the rich poor. Those who seem most stable fade as flowers; those who, like Abraham, strike no roots into the earth's soil, become the permanent landmarks of history. The rich may be glad when he exchanges the fancied stability and wealth of this world for the permanent possessions of eternity.

Temptation (12-18).—Sometimes there is nothing left for us but to endure. Life will be ours to the full as the guerdon of successful endurance. God cannot be tempted, so He became man, that He might be tested in all points as we are, to be able to succour us. Temptation does not necessarily involve sin, unless it inflames our desire, here called lust. (15) Mark the genealogy of sin. Lust is the mother of sin, and sin when mature is the parent of death. (17) How different to the blackness of this dark picture is the light of our Father's realm. His gifts, his unchanging, invariable love, his goodness and perfection. (18) If we are his sons, let us live worthily of so divine an origin.

Pure Religion (19-27).—To keep the mouth closed will stifle the fire within, which will die for want of air. In the 18th verse we found that the word of truth was the agent of regeneration, here it is the means of deepening sanctification. (23) We have only so much truth as we incorporate in life and act. (23) The only way to make holy impressions permanent is to translate them into Christian living. (24) The Word of God is a mirror, showing us what we are, and revealing the dear face of Christ, to which we may be conformed. (25) Many seem to think that blessedness is in hearing, and so they are always afoot to new conventions. No; the blessedness is in doing, in keeping pure, in bridling the tongue, and in visiting the poor and suffering.

TUESDAY, JUNE 11.—JAMES II.

The Rich Poor (1-13).—This sin of making distinction in God's house is as rife to-day as ever; and for this reason the Holy Spirit must withhold his approval. In the house of God at least there should be an equality. The pew system has much to account for in perpetuating the distinctions that obtain outside God's house. (5) God is absolutely indifferent to our position and possessions. With Him character is all. It is easier for a poor man to be rich in spiritual gifts than the rich, whose attention is diverted to the necessity of keeping what they have got. (8) If we do not feel and show an equal consideration for all, we are convicted of disobeying the whole law. A man may keep all the laws of health, but if he take one dose of poison, all else goes for nothing, and he dies; so one sin cancels the effect of an unsullied career. Obedience to the law is therefore a most precarious title for the favour of God, at any moment a single act may annul years of obedience. We need the safe standing secured for us in Jesus.

Saving Faith (14-26)—The mere profession of faith, or faith which is only profession, will no more save the soul than expressions of pity will clothe and warm the poor. A dead faith confines itself to words, a living faith utters itself in words, as a living bulb in flower. We are justified by works, because they manifest that the faith by which we are bound to Christ is a true faith. The Apostle is not speaking of works, apart from faith, but as the revelation of faith. And it becomes us to inquire whether our faith in Christ is genuine, as judged by its results in our daily life and character.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12.—JAMES III.

The Tongue (1-12).—It is so much easier to teach people what to be and do, than to exemplify our precepts in ourselves. Men do not so much want teaching, as power. The supreme test for all is in the speech. If you let Christ bridle your mouth, He can turn about your whole body. If He have his hand on the tiller of the tongue, He can guide our lives whither He will. The speech is index and gauge to the entire man. (5) A single spark may burn down a city. The upsetting of an oil lamp in a stable led to the burning of Chicago. Lighted at the flames of hell, the tongue can pass on the fire to earth. (8) Man cannot tame the tongue, but Christ can. (10) The evils of the tongue approve the evils of the heart. There is the seat of the disorder. Out of its abundance, the mouth speaks. Let Christ infill and keep the soul, then the fountain of speech will run sweet and clear.

Heavenly Wisdom (13-18).—True wisdom comes down from above, and is meek and wholesome. Some who profess to be wise, are jealous and factious, despising others and confident in their superiority: this is from beneath. Wisdom is something more than knowledge, it is the lofty moral condition of the holy heart, which knows God and things, not by study, but by sympathy. Pure, then peaceable: this is God's order—never, peace at any price. First the holy heart, then the quiet, gentle one. (18) And as the peaceful soul goes through the world making peace, it scatters seeds that presently fruit in righteousness.

THURSDAY, JUNE 13.—JAMES IV.

The Longing Spirit (1-10).—In the 5th verse, R.V., we learn that God has put his holy gentle Spirit within us, and that He yearns for entire control over the inner realm, and to overcome the strong tendencies of the self-life, with its wars and fightings, and lust for sensual indulgence. The self-life, in its covetings and strivings, even infects our prayers. How can God answer prayer which so constantly circles about self and its gratification. (4) Alas, that we are so friendly with the world, that it flatters and caresses us; it is a bad sign. The friend of God must be unpopular. (7) Like clay to God, to the devil like rock. (8) You can never draw nigh to God, with clean hands and pure hearts, without his immediate loving response. (9) Mourn over sin and evil, and for tears God will give smiles, for mourning the garment of praise.

Admonitions (11-17).—Against evil-speaking, because it arrogates to the censurer the office of judge. This is the exclusive province of the Almighty, and one into which we have no right to intrude. (13) Against arrangements from which the thought of God's will and plan is excluded. The one thought with man is trading and getting gain, but there is a prior consideration: what is God's will, and what work does He want done in the world? Our life and arrangements are in his hand, and that life is happiest and most useful which is ever yielding to his will. We need to write D.V. on all our plans, or even better to say, What wouldst Thou have me do? (17) To know the better and do the worse grieves the Holy Spirit, and deprives the heart of its sensitiveness to the distinctions between right and wrong.

FRIDAY, JUNE 14.—JAMES V.

The Sentence on Dives (1-6).—There have been and are plenty of rich men who have used their wealth as a sacred trust. Not against such does the Apostle write thus, but against those who make money by oppression, and hoard it up for selfish use. Such riches, which are not gotten righteously, ever bring a curse with them, and in the sight of eternity are corrupt and canker-eaten. The cries of the oppressed are never forgotten of God; He avenges them, and many a great house has been decimated by death, and overwhelmed with disaster, as a retribution for the woes of those by whose anguish it was erected. (6) It would almost seem from the rendering of the R.V. as though the righteous Lord Himself were again standing before his accusers, and being unrighteously condemned, in the person of his persecuted followers.

The Coming of the Lord (7-12).—To each generation that advent has been near. There is a sense in which the Lord is ever at hand, and present. His awful vengeance devours the adversary in the inevitable working of mighty laws which grind to powder. But He shall come again; then all wrongs shall be righted and the oppressed avenged. We have need of patience. Everything comes to him that can wait for it. It is unwise to judge the Lord by his unfinished work. Be patient till He shows the perfected pattern, the destiny to which He is leading thee. (12) In view of that judgment, we do well to use the simplest, plainest speech, for by our words we shall be justified or condemned.

Christian Deportment (13-20).—How shall we act in any given circumstance? Such is the inquiry which the Apostle addresses himself to answer. The suffering should pray, the glad sing, the sick confess his sins, and call for believing prayer. Wherever God gives faith for healing, He will give healing. The mutual confession of sin by one believer to another is a great means of grace. (16) Let us all pray more. Prayer has a reflex blessing, but it also works and energises much in the promotion of God's cause. (19) There is a double reason for the endeavour to arrest the sinner. He is saved, and his baneful influence on others is stayed.

SATURDAY, JUNE 15.—1 PETER I.

Our Inheritance (1-12).—Scattered strangers! The designation is true of us all. Note the presence of the Trinity in the opening salutation. Our inheritance is prepared and kept for us, and we for it. Our salvation is not complete, nor will be till the body is brought from the corruption of the tomb. (6) Trial is manifold, but it is only for a little while, and there is a needs-be for it all. Hope in the third, faith in the seventh, love in the eighth, and from the blending of these three the joy that passee speech. (10) The prophets, angels, apostles, and the blessed Spirit are represented as intent on the glorious salvation, which God has spoken to mankind in the Gospel.

Our Redemption (13-25).—Ours must be the girded loin, lest our desires trail after forbidden things, and get caught in the brambles, or sullied in the mire. This is easiest when there is the upward, onward look. (17) It is because we call God Father, that we fear. There is no fear like that which love breeds. (18) The thought of redemption by blood is also of mighty potency. How can we who have been redeemed return to grovel in the things from which, at such cost, we were ransomed? (21) Besides, the Resurrection of our Saviour summons us upward. (22) Moreover, the more we obey the truth, the purer our hearts become. (23) And the life, begotten within us by the Spirit through the Word, is so incorruptible and holy that it cannot do other than produce an unwithering life. All these are arguments for holy living; but all revolve around that word hope, which is the keynote of this epistle.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 16.

PETER AND THE RISEN LORD.—John xxi. 4-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 17.

VERSE 14 divides this chapter into two parts. The first (1-13) refers to all the disciples present; the second (15-23) is occupied particularly with Peter and John. This was the third appearance to the disciples as a body. Separate appearances to individuals are not counted by John.

The story takes us to Galilee, whither the disciples had gone to meet Jesus (Matt. xxviii. 7, 16). The Sea of Tiberias was an appropriate scene for such a significant event. Here they received their call to the apostleship (Luke v. 1-11). Here they are now instructed in symbol as to the work they have yet to do.

Our lesson opens after a fruitless night of toil (2, 3). Matthew Henry sees in the apostles' return to their old calling an evidence of their humility and their industry. But their non-success suggests the lesson they were intended to learn. Every worker who goes forth without Jesus will find "night and nothing." Let every teacher learn the lesson.

FAILURE TURNED TO SUCCESS (4-8).—How did it come about? They saw "Jesus on the shore" (4). It is always daybreak (R.V.) when weary, unsuccessful workers get into contact with Jesus. He watches our toil through the night, listens to our confession of failure, and waits to take charge of our work and to give it success. They obeyed his word (6). He knew where and when the net should be cast. All power was given to Him. Everything in land or sea obeyed his word (Psa. viii. 8). The disciples, though experienced fishermen, deferred to his authority, and found success in obeying Him. The peril of unsuccessful workers now is to resort to doubtful expedients in order to win success. The example of the disciples is better. The effect of obedience was miraculous both in the number and size (6, 11) of the fishes, and in the fact that the net was not broken. The Gospel net is still unbroken, and when cast under the direction of Jesus will not lose those whom it encloses, however numerous or however great. The miracle was a revelation of Jesus (7).—It was John who first recognised Him. He was the contemplative apostle, and thought while others toiled. And He saw that the resurrection had not changed the character of Jesus. He possessed the same loving sympathy as before. Note how the diversities in the apostles appear in this narrative. John is quick to know (see xx. 8). Peter, as impetuous as ever, is the first to go to Jesus. Yet in his zeal he did not forget the reverence due to Jesus, and so put on his fisher's coat. The other disciples (8) possessed neither the insight of John, nor the energy of Peter, but were they not equally necessary? Without them, how would the boat have reached the shore?

THE MORNING REPAST (9-13).—This was not a mere type of that which awaits every worker when his toil is ended, but rather of the refreshment our Lord provides for his servants while they are doing his work. There is very real communion between Jesus on the shore and his toilers on the deep. Jesus prepared the repast. He performs this lowly ministry for his disciples. Yet they contribute something to it (10) (see Psa. cxxviii. 2, and Rev. iii. 20). Best of all it was a repast with Jesus. The commonest fare becomes a feast if He sits at the table. What are the costliest viands without Him?

THE RESTORATION OF PETER (15-17).—Already Peter must have known that his sin in denying Jesus was forgiven (Mark xvi. 7; Luke xxiv. 34). But his denial had been public, and it was right, therefore, that his restoration to his position among the apostles should be public also.

Everything in our Lord's questions tends to recall the denial. The name "Simon, son of Jonas," instead of Peter, his new name; the suggested comparison in the first question (15), recalling the boastful words of Mark xiv. 29; the thrice-repeated question. No wonder that "Peter was grieved" (17). As a skilful surgeon, our Lord probes the wound before He heals it.

Perhaps the change in the word used added to Peter's grief. "Love" as Peter uses it is not the same word as that used by Jesus the first and second times. But the third time Jesus took Peter's word (see R.V. margin), as though love even in Peter's understanding of it was a matter of question. The humility that marks Peter's replies shows that he has learned the lesson of his fall.

The service to which love prompts, and in which it is to be revealed, is also differently described. "Feed my lambs" (15); "Shepherd my sheep" (16); "Feed my sheeplings" (17), Schaff. John seems to recall these when he addresses "Little children," "fathers," and "young men" (1 John ii. 12-14). The lesson Jesus teaches is that true love must express itself is lowly service; and that no service is possible except as love inspires it.

For the Young.

VERY PRESUMPTUOUS.

"WELL! I never heard such a thing! How very presumptuous!" exclaimed Ida Morton, laying down the book she held in her hand, and looking up at her old friend, Mrs. Montrose, with an expression half of dismay, half of disgust. It was a pretty picture. Ida sat on the flower-flecked grass, her lissom figure and fair, golden-framed face bent down towards the book she had been reading. White doves cooed in echo to the silvery tones of her sweet young voice; bees buzzed in and out of the rose and honeysuckle bushes round her, and in the big garden chair against which she leaned sat the dearest old lady in the world, owner of the quaint cottage in which Ida Morton was lodging while painting her last commission—a picture of glen and wood, with softly rippling, softly-shaded streamlet of silver beauty. Such a dear old-fashioned woman, in her soft pale, grey dress, lace crossover, and close-fitting cap bordering the silver hair upon her brow. On the lips is a smile of sweetness, in the eyes a look of love, over the face the light of peace—oh, yes! you would have called Mrs. Montrose a beautiful woman, although she was old and wrinkled, and grey-haired—just because you could not help it—it was the truth.

"What do you call presumptuous, my dear?" said Mrs. Montrose, laying her hand gently on the girl's arm.

"Just listen." And Ida read—

"The late Joseph Mackey, of New York, printer and publisher, was a great Bible-reader and Bible-lover. He determined to have a Bible of his own, and having a large number of workmen in his employ, he made them print for his private and individual use a complete copy of the Holy Scriptures, differing from the ordinary one only in this, that wherever there was a general promise or command he made it particular by inserting his own name before it. For example, he made it run thus:—'God so loved the world that Joseph Mackey believing on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life' (John iii. 16). 'This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom Joseph Mackey is chief' (1 Tim. i. 15). 'My grace is sufficient for Joseph Mackey, for my strength is made perfect in weakness' (2 Cor. xii. 9). 'Himself bore Joseph Mackey's sins in his own body on the tree' (1 Pet. ii. 24)."

Ida stopped suddenly, and exclaimed, "I think it most presumptuous, don't you?"

"No, my dear," said the old lady, very gently, but with a joyous gleam in her still dark eyes, "I don't think he went beyond his privileges. All that believe in and obey the good Lord are his children, and are entitled to the rich legacy He left them in his will."

"I quite understand," said Ida, "that salvation is a personal matter, but I don't quite like the idea of taking possession of the Bible promises in that way; it would make things so dreadfully real," pausing a little to select a word, and then using it with lowered breath. "And it would not always be comfortable; for example, I am not sure I should like this: 'If Ida Morton will come after Me, let her deny herself and take up her cross daily.' I do not so much mind the comforting bits of the Bible, but I do not like the commands coming so closely into my daily life."

"You speak very frankly, my child," said the old lady gravely; "I can imagine the Scriptures became a different book to Joseph Mackey when he read it in that way. We all like to claim God's promises, even though we can't go the length of printing our names before them like this man did. But when it comes to carrying out his commands, many besides yourself object. It is not presumptuous to assure ourselves boldly of God's word; it is but blessed faith."

"Well, dear Mrs. Montrose, it certainly would make my hope of heaven and grasp of God very real, if I read my Bible as Joseph Mackey read his, and I am afraid—don't be shocked, I only want to be quite honest—my life would be very different if I read the commands of Christ as literally," and the girl shut her book impatiently.

"Oh! don't look at me so gravely," she cried presently. "I am not good, I know; I'm only a half-hearted Christian. I'd like to be safe and happy, but I'd like to have my own way a bit too; I don't like giving up my will. It is hard, you know, Mrs. Montrose, when one is young, and the world before one." "Not hard to a true heart, my child. Our way, our will, can become the Lord's way and will. Believe me, 'tis better so. You are not happy, child, half-hearted as you are, you've not enough of Christ to enjoy Him, and you've just enough to spoil the flavour of all worldly ways and pleasures." "No! I'm not happy!" sighed the girl. "What shall I do? How shall I become whole-hearted? I long to be," she concluded piteously, the tears beginning to flow. "Begin afresh, dearie. Give yourself right away to Christ and believe He has taken you; then trust Him to take the 'don't want to' out of your heart. Let Him show you Himself. Ask Him to. The sight of his face in its love and beauty will blot out all others. His commandments are not grievous—it is your misreading of them makes them seem so. I think you must ask Him to teach you, for no one else can, dearie." There was silence for a moment. Then Ida looked up, tears glittering on her long, black lashes.

"I'm ashamed of myself," she cried; "I have never been real. Mrs. Montrose, will you help me to learn Christ? He has taught you, ask Him to teach me!" In the very words lurked a prayer which the Good Shepherd heard. For deeper than the longing in Mrs. Montrose's heart, deeper than the longing in Ida's, was the longing in the heart of Jesus to safe fold and lead the wilful, wayward heart of the weeping girl. Dear, young reader, do you stand where Ida stood, wanting to grasp the promises without fulfilling the conditions? Is your Christian life unsatisfactory? Suppose you try what claiming the promises and carrying out the commands of Christ will do for you. Put a little presumption into your Bible-reading, and see if you do not realise the promised blessing.

GEORGE YARD MISSION.

IN the June issue of The Sunday at Home, a pleasant account is given of several East London mission undertakings, among them the work carried on by Mr. Holland and his many helpers in George Yard. Describing a visit to a common lodging-house, the writer says:—"One of these houses is in George Yard itself. Entering the common kitchen, a large hospitable fire greets the visitor; benches and narrow tables are ranged alongside the walls. A religious service, conducted by Mr. Holland's assistants, was proceeding at the far end of the room, whilst the precincts of the fire were left free for the cooking and eating which in the case of a few of the inmates were proceeding quietly at the same time. Women and a few children were amongst the lodgers, the house being licensed for married couples. The simple, hearty, and brotherly service was over in twenty minutes.

"'We don't forget,' said Mr. Holland, speaking of the audience, 'that this is their home, and we are only here on sufferance; it would be a grave mistake to take up their room and time too long.' 'And they do not resent your visits?' we asked. 'On the contrary,' said Mr. Holland, 'if we neglected them a single night, they would very soon be sending down to us and wanting to know the reason why. In fact,' Mr. Holland continued, 'I never find nowadays any difficulty in getting a hearing for the Gospel among the very mixed classes who fill the lodging-houses, who are, it must be admitted, largely of the lowest type of humanity. It is true we have had to live down a great deal of opposition. Years ago life in George Yard was almost intolerable, so rampant and woful was the vice which hemmed us in and tried to scare us out of the district. But that time has passed. The Mission has conquered, so far as getting the confidence of the people is concerned.'"

The Papacy.—II.

By REV. THOMAS CONNELLAN.*

This brings me to the second section of our subject, and we ask ourselves what were and are the secrets and sources by which such a system has been able to captivate and enslave a seventh part of the human race? The causes are stamped upon the system, and may be easily detected. They may be all grouped under one head, namely, that Romanism offers everything our carnal nature craves.

Christianity, though pure in itself, was committed to the keeping of imperfect beings. Even the chosen people of God thought the Almighty too far away, and set up a golden calf with the shout, "These be thy gods, O Israel!" At the time of Christ the world was given over to sensuous and material influences. Even the Jew had taught himself to associate religious truths with visible rites, and to attribute more importance to the external ceremony than the internal or heart worship. The Jewish, the Roman, and the Grecian systems had all to be encountered and conquered by the Gospel of Christ. The converted, or semi-converted, Jew took with him the symbolism of the synagogue. The Greek attempted to engraft the philosophy of the academy upon the Christian stem; and the Roman, taught to regard Polytheism as the breath of his nostrils, carried his ideas and prejudices into the Christian fold. If Jesus, or the witnesses to his teaching and his glory, had continued at the helm, all would be well. But the apostles were gone, leaving no successors.

The presbytery upon the seven hills began to look more to the visible than the invisible church. Let the nations come in and bow to his sceptre and change their names if not their natures. Rome would be all things to all men; but, alas! in a very different sense to that intended by Paul. Constantine found it sound policy to call himself a Christian, and Christianity soon became the fashion. The Magian found room for his philosophy under a new name. The fundamental principle of that philosophy—viz., that the flesh is the seat of all evil, and that it becomes a sacred duty to weaken and mortify the body—soon found a home in the Roman system, and flourishes there at the present hour. The Jew took with him the ceremonial observances of Leviticus, and fused them with a

SENSUOUS RITUAL BORROWED FROM PAGANISM.

The Latin Polytheist resigned the names of Venus, Jupiter, and Saturn, but found equivalents in the Virgin Mary and the saints. The statue of Jupiter was changed into that of St. Peter, the two keys being substituted for the thunderbolt. Its toe is reverently kissed by pious pilgrims to the present hour. The Church that had followed Christ faithfully in the catacombs emerged therefrom to possess Pagan Basilicas. The very vestments were borrowed from Pagan sacerdotalism, and the Pope appropriately assumed the title of the Pagan high priest Pontifex Maximus, and calls himself Supreme Pontiff to the present hour.

In the fourth century images began to be introduced into the churches, the bones of martyrs hawked about as relics. Pagan festivals were changed, with a thin disguise, into Christian feasts. The Lord's Supper began to be dispensed at funerals, to develop at a future period into masses for the dead. Lamps and candles burned in the churches at noonday. Chasubles, copes, mitres, crosiers, flowers and incense all were combined in the worship of God who seeks to be worshipped in spirit and in truth. "The religion of Constantine," says Gibbon, "achieved in less than a century the final conquest of the Roman empire; but the victors themselves were insensibly subdued by the arts of their vanquished rivals." The ancient constitution of the Church was changed. The people were excluded from the administration of her affairs.

Next the rights and privileges of the presbyters were invaded by the bishops. For a long time bishop contended with bishop about their possessions and jurisdiction; they imitated in their state and manner of living the secular princes. Then the chief bishop got his throne established by secular authority, and placed his iron heel upon people and bishops alike. Ignorance spread her dark pall over the world. Corruption infected all classes. The most abandoned and wicked scourges of humanity were taught that their crimes might be expiated by donations to the Church at the moment of death. To build a cathedral, endow a monastery, or make a grant of land to the Church was more meritorious than a Christian life. Salvation no longer was of grace but by works. To abandon society with its obligations and duties, and bury oneself in a desert, surrounded by filth and indolence, was a proof of the highest virtue. To shirk honest labour and don the wallet of the beggar gave one the right to work miracles here and be canonised hereafter. The modest maiden was forced to tell the secrets of her past to a man generally a hundred-fold more sinful than herself. Priestcraft must be master, not only of the earth and the fulness thereof, but the very secrets of the heart must be laid bare at his feet.

But Satan was not yet satisfied. His hatred for the seed of the woman prompted him to go a step further. Accordingly even Christ was dethroned and a creature put in his place. Paul told the Thessalonians that there must come a "falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that He is God" (2 Thess. ii. 3, 4). The Pope arrogated to himself the title, "Vicar of Christ." Cardinal Bellarmine (Authority of Councils, Book 2, c. 17) assures us that "all the names which are given in the Scriptures to Christ, wherever it appears that he is superior to the Church, all those same names are given to the Pope." Then had Satan triumphed and

THE REIGN OF ANTICHRIST BEGUN.

It is a solemn thought for us, who bow the knee to nothing save King Jesus, that we are at the close of the nineteenth century confronted with this same system, still claiming all its old prerogatives, still sighing for universal domination. Now, this takes me to the last division of my subject. In the syllabus, approved of by the present Pope, Pius IX. teaches that the Popes of former days, in deposing kings, and claiming universal supremacy, never exceeded by a hair's breadth their just rights and prerogatives. Leo XIII. has forbidden Italian Roman Catholics to take part in the coming elections. Why? Lest he might seem to recognise in any way the present kingdom of Italy. So the Pope still sighs after temporal sovereignty, and hopes that some European convulsion may some day make him a king again. Meanwhile he is using, craftily and unremittingly, the weapons at his disposal.

Since the decree of Papal Infallibility the entire Roman machinery is moved by a single hand. He sits in his very agreeable prison at the Vatican, with the Superior General of the Jesuits whispering into his ear, and moves his subordinates as if they were pawns upon the chess-board. This is done secretly, and its effect upon the world is not lessened thereby. He is carefully providing for the future also. The school, the confessional, and the Press are his three great levers by which he hopes yet to sway the world. Get possession of a child in its tender years; isolate it from all contact except your own; teach it that darkness is light, falsehood truth, and hypocrisy religion; place it in a groove where it cannot possibly measure such notions with the views of the world around it, and probably your protégé will cling to such teaching to the death. The Roman Church all the world over is fighting for possession of the children.

The confessional is the most potent weapon in Rome's armoury. How can any man afford to quarrel with him to whose gaze he has laid bare the secrets he would hide from the child of his affections, the wife of his bosom? Together with changing men and women into slaves, it enables the priest to carry in his pocket-book all the secrets of his parish. Let but a single servant in a household frequent the confessional, and every secret of that household is the property of the priest. A doctor of divinity, in one of the tracts published by the so-called "Catholic Truth Society," says the confessional has never been abused. In the June number of my magazine I have quoted three cases, in which successive Popes have admitted the confessional has been abused, and enacted penal legislation with the object of guarding against the scandals arising therefrom.

The Press, too, and not infrequently the Protestant Press of England, has been inveigled into the service of Rome. Some time since I had a sharp controversy with a priest in a populous Scotch town. He found himself in a tight place, and in order to get out of it sent letters broadcast over Ireland, written upon official notepaper of an influential Protestant newspaper, asking, in the interests of truth, for private information. Several of these letters came to my hands, and were forwarded by me to the editor. Inquiry was made, and it was found that two Romanists on the staff of the paper had placed its official notepaper at the service of the priest.

What is the remedy for all this? The remedy is in God's Word, the Bible. There is no place in the New Testament for a sacrificing priest. I have been ordained with all the pomp and florid ceremonial of Rome, and God's Word has taught me that I am just as much a priest as any member of my audience. St. Peter is my teacher in this matter, when he assures me that Christ possesses in his faithful children "a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (1 Peter ii. 5). The epistle to the Hebrews tells me that we have also a great High Priest, Jesus Christ the righteous. "And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death; but this man, because he continueth, ever hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them. For such an High Priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this He did once when He offered up Himself" (Heb. vii. 23-27). That is God's eternal truth. It cuts the ground from Romanist and Ritualist. It takes the sinner straight to God with Jesus, his sin-bearer, his advocate, and his High Priest, alone, standing between.

*An address at the Women's Protestant Union Conference.

BLANKENBURG, THURINGIA.

Those of your readers who take an interest in our mission in Luther's land will be glad to hear of the progress of the work which the Lord has entrusted to our hands. Our evangelists have been enabled throughout the winter to extend their work not alone over a good many villages of the Thüringian Forest, but also to other parts of Germany.

Now that summer is in full bloom in our beautiful land, we are having regular open-air meetings in different parts of the country; they are largely attended, people coming three or four hours' distance. It is a pleasure to watch the rapt attention with which they follow the speakers, and to hear the hearty way in which they join in the hymns, the clear melodies floating over hill and dale, sometimes accompanied by a band of wind instruments, the newest acquisition of the Allianzhaus.

We feel greatly encouraged also by a number of private houses being opened to our meetings, in consequence of the owners having experienced the power of the Word in their own souls. Good work among believers is also being done by Pastor Jellinghaus holding a course of Bible readings in the Allianzhaus from May 1 to July 15. A number of ladies as well as young men are taking part in these interesting Scripture studies.

Pastor Jellinghaus has conducted similar Bible classes during the past winter in Hamburg. They were very largely attended, and greatly blessed. We should be glad if any German-speaking English Christians would join us at this time, uniting a visit to our beautiful hills and woods with Bible study and Christian fellowship. We are already looking forward to our annual conference for the deepening of spiritual life, September 2-6.

GERMAN AND SWISS WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—The opening of the new premises, 21, Baker-street, Portman-square, in connection with the above Christian Institute, took place on Wednesday afternoon, May 29. The attendance was most encouraging, as it embraced many Germans and Swiss interested in the welfare of their countrywomen who come to England for domestic service. This institute has been established for nearly twelve years in Bloomsbury, and has done most useful work, and the removal was compulsory in consequence of its success. Two thousand one hundred girls have been benefited and assisted to situations since it was opened. Mr. John Shrimpton (hon. director) presided. Pastor Kubler, Mr. J. P. Werner, Pastor Sommers, and Miss Morley also took part.

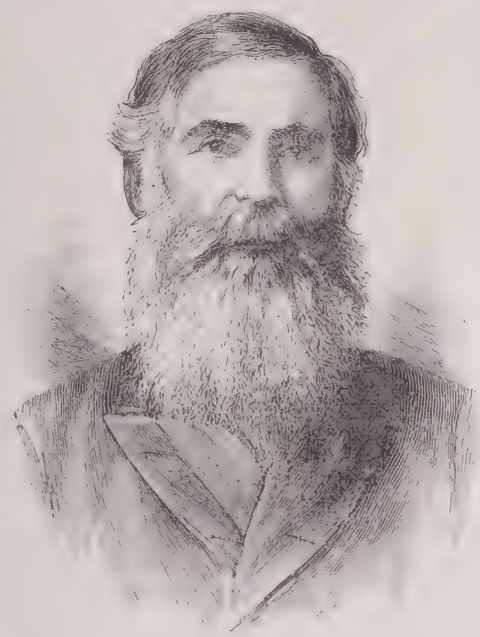
The Late Rev. Simeon Tavitian.

APOSTLE OF THE EVANGELICAL ARMENIANS IN TURKEY.

"HONOUR to whom honour is due" is a good principle, and ought to be heeded more than it is in the world at large; but in these dark corners of Asia it is often very sadly neglected. In the land of the Crescent, most of all, lines of distinction are strongly drawn, and certain of humanity doomed to neglect, if not ignominy. But such can hardly be true of the subject of this sketch, since he has ever been held in high repute by all who knew him, be they Protestants, Gregorians, Moslems, or those of his own kith and kin—the prophet not being without honour even in his own country.

SIMEON TAVITIAN was born at Dalvori village, Province of Sassoun, three days south of Moush city. On what month or year, even, to say nothing of the week or day, we cannot speak with certainty, for in the olden time, with seldom a writer or a reader in the house, family registrations were sadly neglected, though of late years our Protestant people keep such records in the revered family Bible, as in enlightened lands. Still, from contemporaneous reckoning and comparison, he made himself out to be about eighty-five years of age. His life had been so chequered that some might say, "Few and evil have been his days." Though born into poverty and oppression, as is the case of the Armenians of that region, where their condition is worse than serfdom, he early exhibited special religious traits.

At fourteen years of age he began to read and learn all he could about religious recluses, till he betook himself to clefts in the rocks of the mountain for religious meditation. Friends finding him there expostulated with him, saying, "Are we all going to perdition and only you to Paradise?" And they hustled him off to a not distant monastery.



Devout beyond his fellow inmates, he became an object of irony and ridicule. Though never discouraged, he conscientiously studied character and books, so far as the latter could be secured. But the former object-lessons were so unsatisfactory, nothwithstanding the barricade of stone walls that lay between these monks and the wicked world outside, he became disgusted, and fled to Jerusalem in hopes of something better for prelates and surroundings. What was his surprise to find that here, possibly from increase of number of inmates, sin did much more abound, so that he looked back almost regretfully to what he had left behind. In discouragement he thought of becoming a Catholic, but chanced upon such facts respecting them as to astound him most of all.

About this time a new teacher came to the Jerusalem monastery from Nicomedia. In his instruction to the pupils he often made adroit allusion to certain tenets of a new sect called Protestant, hinting that, "strange to say, they had Scripture on their side." Thus unconsciously he had so far indoctrinated young Simeon that he began to score old church doctrines, form of services, conduct of the monks, etc., by actual Scripture rule, and found them so wanting that discussion arose between him and the prelates.

"They were living neither in conformity with the Testament nor the old Church regulations, and so the wrath of God was being poured upon the people," bravely challenged the young reformer. The vartabeds (prelates) were aroused at such a daring accusation, and they cast him out with such taunting rebukes as, "Are you one of the Church fathers, a bishop or catholicos, come here to teach us the way?"

Coming up to Beyrout city, he met with a vartabed from Constantinople, Bedros by name, who had become Protestant, and was now serving as colporteur. This latter, as well as others, advised Simeon to go to Constantinople. Arriving here he was soon entered at Dr. Cyrus Hamlin's old Bebek seminary, from which sprang the present Robert College.

Perceiving how indiscreet conduct of parties at Jerusalem had cast this aspiring young man into the arms of Protestantism, Matteose, the Armenian Patriarch of the time, called him, and expostulated, begging him to return to the bosom of the Church, and offering to pay him well if he would go up to Armenia to be an independent teacher. "You must reconcile old Church methods and conduct of ecclesiastics with my conscience before I can go," said the scrupulous one of new-found ideas. The Metropolitan failing in the persuasion, Simeon took out a three years' course with Dr. Hamlin, who often spoke with interest of his new scholar. During his fourth year he was sent as teacher to the old city of Nicomedia, where some years later he married his wife, who now survives him.

The following year he was ordained deacon of the Protestant church at Nicomedia. Three years later, after being ordained evangelist by Drs. Dwight, Hamlin, and Riggs, he with his wife went up—not on the part of that arch persecutor referred to above, and whose picture appears in Dr. Hamlin's book, "My Life and Times"—but to be an Evangelical apostle to Armenians, going back to his own native hills, as it proves.

His first charge was Chevermeh village, province of Khanous, some sixty miles south of Erzroum. "A wide door and effectual" was opened to him there, and enemies, too, who invented all sorts of false accusations, even to forcing him before Government, were not wanting. It was while here that he entered upon extensive tours of exploration among Armenians in Kars, Erzingan, Geghi, etc., in company with that valiant, indefatigable pioneer missionary, the late Mr. Dunmore.

In 1861 he was transferred to Moush city, fifty-five miles further south, and in the Bitlis station field. He met with greatest success in Havadorik, a mountain village two hours distant, and near to his birthplace, though he was harassed by such bitter persecution as would constitute a thrilling part of this narrative, but be too long for present purposes. With a church established in that place, too, he was prevailed upon to come on to Bitlis city in 1862, to assist Rev. and Mrs. G. C. Knapp in the newly-begun work there. After having served this people in Bitlis for a quarter of a century he resigned his charge in 1887, feeling they should have a younger man. He had ever been a most self-denying, self-sacrificing worker, doing it all for Christ's sake. Having spent so much of his early life in monasteries, he naturally had little in common with a sharp, scheming world. It has been said of him that "he knew nothing save Jesus and Him crucified."

His talks and prayers with individuals in private, as well as public ministrations, furnished food for thought and growth for such as had an ear to hear. The most of the seven years since he left Bitlis he had passed in Nicomedia, where he did good service, much of the time among the churches. Towards the last, approaching apoplexy largely deprived him of the use of his limbs, and the climax came just as the old year was fading away, hastened, it has been hinted, by the crushing news of the terrible deeds that had taken place in his native region.

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE report of last year's operations of the Irish Evangelisation Society tells a tale of devoted effort, accompanied by much encouragement. Through financial straitness the staff had to be reduced, and the number of meetings held, 2375 in all, was somewhat fewer than during the previous year. The receipts were £10 less than the expenditure, and the previous year's deficit of £389 still remains to be made up, and to this end the Society has issued a special appeal.

The meetings were held at 146 places, more work than hitherto being done in the South and West of Ireland, where many Roman Catholics attend, and where the Protestants are comparatively few. The Wooden Hall proved very attractive, and a second such movable building has now been provided. Tents are also used, while churches, school houses, and barns have been employed wherever possible. On one occasion only, in the South of Ireland, did the Roman Catholics occasion any disturbance at the meetings; generally speaking, they have not shown hostility, but listened attentively.

The district accounts tell of families being blessed, and many striking cases of conversion. Writes an evangelist: "The man where we lodged, and his servant man and wife, have all professed conversion." Another says: "The daughters of a neighbouring rector have professed Christ, and last night they had a brother with them. The ladies are now working for Christ." The report says: "We have had reliable information of several Roman Catholics who have, we trust, been led to receive Christ as their Saviour, and are living clearly for his name. We have occasionally the joy of hearing of those led to Christ through our missions going themselves to the mission field. Such a case is Miss Baker, who, led to Christ a year or two since at Clonmel, left for China in October last. Miss Galway, now a missionary in the foreign field, was also led to Christ, in co. Tyrone.

"Another fruit of our work, which is itself a seed of good, is the formation in some places of Associations to work for Christ. Such was the result of a mission some three years ago in Omagh, by Messrs. Crawford and Boyle. The thankofferings from the places where the missions have been held have amounted to £830, being given often in pence from poor people; and we cannot but feel that if the Lord's people who have means knew how much is, by God's grace, being accomplished at a small cost by these missions, they would help poor Ireland in her need." Mr. James Barton, of Dundalk, is the hon. sec. of the Society.

THESE LITTLE ONES.

Some months ago a ragged little girl, nine years of age, might have been seen with a basket of flowers in the streets of London, selling button-holes to passers-by, or disposing of her wares in shops or dining-rooms, wherever she might gain an entrance. The night was bitterly cold and wet, the time after ten; her covering of rags were soaked, and hung round her emaciated little body with chilling effect; she had an intelligent appearance, and manifested a business tact which is not always exhibited by dealers in more substantial goods.

Watching her opportunity at the door of a large restaurant, she at last entered, and quickly tendered her flowers to the gentlemen who were enjoying their repast. She found at least one customer, who purchased a button-hole which had been tastefully wired together by the child; then followed one or two questions as to her antecedents, and she hastily disappeared. However, the gentleman became deeply interested in the little girl, and, leaving his meal unfinished, went in search of her. It was not long before he saw her entering a public-house, and, following her, purchased a biscuit for her, and ascertained more particulars concerning her life.

It transpired that the child had no father; her mother treated her most cruelly, and insisted upon her bringing home a certain sum daily, come by it as she may. The gentleman called a cab and drove to the station. The mother was summoned and brought before the magistrate with a charge of sending her child out to beg. The case was remanded. Meanwhile the facts had been made known to the Watercress and Flower Girl Mission, and Mr. J. A. Groom, the secretary, volunteered to take charge of the child, send her to school, and train her as a domestic servant.

The magistrate made an order for her to be handed over to Mr. Groom, she was sent to the Flower Village at Clacton-on-Sea (the Orphanage and Home of the Mission), is well fed and cared for, attends the Board School regularly, receives spiritual instruction daily at the Home, and on the Lord's Day at Sabbath-school and the House of God. As she grows in years she will take part, as the other girls, in the domestic duties at the Home, and thus a practical knowledge of household work will be acquired, which will qualify her for a situation as a general servant.

Such was the story related to me by the resident superintendent when I dropped in to look over the Flower Village, recently. And I would urge visitors to Clacton to take a pleasant walk along the Pier Avenue towards Great Clacton and visit this noble institution, which is doing a most Christlike work in rescuing little girls from the streets and making them useful members of society.

In the "Babies' Villa" was a tiny infant, ten months old, with a sad history. She was received at the age of four months, and weighed only 6½lb. instead of 15lb. Her mother, a widow with nine children, picked up a miserable existence as a paper-bag maker, leaving the two youngest children, the baby, and a sister eighteen months old, in charge of another child ten years of age, the others attending school while she pursued her daily vocation. A halfpenny-worth of milk was all she could afford to leave for the baby's sustenance during the day; and sometimes even this miserable quantity was beyond her reach, and only a spoonful of condensed milk could be supplied. It was no wonder that the child wasted away; and when she was received into the home a swelling had formed in the palm of her hand, through her continual sucking for the nourishment which she could not obtain. It so happened that the mother called during my visit to the home, and, not having seen her offspring since her admission six months ago, she did not know her, and tears of gratitude trickled down her cheeks when she saw the healthy condition of her beloved baby.

Space forbids giving details of cases of children received from parents sentenced to imprisonment or rescued from drunken and cruel fathers; or admitted at the request of dying mothers. And none know—save God Himself—the iniquity, and degradation, and misery from which these dear lasses are saved through the commendable efforts of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission. The foregoing is only one branch of the work conducted by this noble institution. The secretary, Mr. J. A. Groom, will gladly furnish particulars of the other agencies in operation. His address is 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, London, E.C. F. T. W.

FROM REV. DAVID BARON.

Writing from Budapest on May 22, Rev. David Baron says:—"Accompanied by Mr. Marienburger, who, since February, has been helping us in the Hebrew Christian testimony to Israel, I left London on May 2, and arrived in Magdeburg the following evening. Our mission was already well begun among our fellow-passengers in the train, and with one wealthy merchant, on his way back to St. Petersburg, we had earnest conversation on the claims of Christ, and we have hope that the seed sown in his heart was not in vain. A New Testament, which he at first refused, he afterwards accepted with many expressions of gratitude. At Magdeburg, immediately on stepping out of the train, we noticed a group of five Jews on the platform, two of whom were on their way to America. We embraced the opportunity to speak to them briefly in the name of the Lord. The Jewish community in Magdeburg is not large, and they are chiefly of the "Reformed" (or rationalistic) school, but even among these we found a few hearts longing for something which neither Rabbinic nor rationalistic Judaism can supply. We spent two days in Magdeburg, visiting a number of Jews in their homes and places of business. We preached to them Christ, and distributed New Testaments and a number of Rabbi Lichtenstein's last pamphlet, which most received very gratefully. The last evening we were engaged by two inquiring Galician Jews in a most interesting conversation. In the case of one of these we hope that the word will bear fruit to the praise of Christ. When we first met him the previous day, he had never before heard of Christ except according to the blasphemous and unclean fabrication called 'Toldoth Jeshu,' compiled by some unknown rabbi in the middle ages, and which so many of the Talmudic Jews believe to be the only true story of our Lord Jesus. The New Testament he had never before seen in his life, and on receiving it from us came across the name of 'Paul,' of whom he had never before heard.

"On May 6 we arrived in Dresden and remained till the 9th. Dresden is a city of religious respectability, for here everyone, even avowed infidels, must, according to police regulations, be registered as a member of either the Roman Catholic Church, the Landeskirche (Lutheran), or the Synagogue. Everyone not formally belonging to one or other of these three is liable to prosecution as a law-breaker. But here, as elsewhere, there are "the poor of the flock," who know the Good Shepherd's voice, and follow Him. During the two or three days we spent in Dresden, we experienced much kindness from our friends Pastor and Mrs. Mascher, who, in spite of many obstacles and persecutions, are maintaining a testimony to the simplicity of the Gospel, and a firm stand for Christian liberty to worship God according to conscience. Altogether there are about 5000 Jews in Dresden, mostly of the careless wealthy class, and no one to testify to them of our Saviour. We obtained permission from the authorities to hold a public meeting in Pastor Mascher's Hall, and although we could only give one day's notice we were thankful to have about 150 persons present, of whom between thirty-five and forty were Jews and Jewesses. The subject was, 'Who was Messiah? What has He done for us?' and the Lord was manifestly with us, so that his own believing people were refreshed and as was shown by their earnestly begging us at the close for New Testaments, and also that we might stay and hold more meetings.

"From Dresden we went to Prague, where we remained only two days; the city being under military law, on account of recent political riots, we could do but little without bringing ourselves into immediate conflict with the police, which the Christian brethren begged us to avoid. We had the great pleasure of profitable intercourse with Dr. Clark, of the American Mission, and Mr. Stahlschmidt, of the B. and F. Bible Society. From the latter I was interested to hear that, after my previous visit, strict search was made for me by the police for several days, having become aware, happily too late, that I had been guilty of the great crime of preaching the Gospel and distributing the Word of God. Our hearts are burdened for Prague, which contains one of the most ancient Jewish communities in the world, numbering about 30,000 souls, without even one messenger of Christ to witness to them of their rejected but glorified Messiah. Although we could do nothing publicly, we visited the ancient Ghetto, which is full of historical interest, and quietly conversed about Christ with many Jews, including one of the leading rabbis, and also gave New Testaments and tracts to those who wished to know more.

"On Friday evening, May 10, we had the privilege of being present at a prayer meeting in the native Bohemian Mission Church, of which our old friend Mr. Adlof is pastor. This church, which is now self-supporting, is the outcome of the American mission in Bohemia. Our poor persecuted brethren and sisters, 'rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom,' have, at any rate, learned to pray. Out of the forty-five or fifty present, at least twenty, one after another, poured out their hearts audibly in fervent supplication for themselves and others. On the 11th we arrived in Vienna, where we remained till the 16th. Poor Austria! When will it be freed from the terrible bondage to Rome? Next to Russia, there is no country in Europe where there is so little religious liberty, and as to Christian work, I believe there is more done in St. Petersburg than in Vienna. Among the 125,000 Jews in Vienna, there is one isolated labourer, our young friend Mr. Thomas, of the British Society, and even he is restricted in every possible way. Here, too, our work had to be done in all quietness, but it is wonderful how much might be done in this way, even in Austria, by those whose hearts are set on fire with the love of Christ, and who possess the necessary tact. We conversed earnestly with many individuals and groups, both in the streets and in the cafés, and to those who manifested interest enough to inquire further into the subject.

"On Wednesday night, May 15, we arrived in Oedenburg and were most happy to breathe the freer air of Hungary, and to feel that we need no longer do the work of Christ by stealth, as if we were doing something wrong. Here we visited shops, and also conversed with many in the streets. Some remembered my visit to this town eight years ago, and welcomed me cordially, and I was thankful to find that the seed sown then was not altogether in vain. In the course of the evening we had thirty-five Jewish men and three Gentiles (who also came begging to be allowed to hear) crowded into our bedroom in the hotel, most of them standing for at least an hour and a-half, asking questions and listening eagerly while we preached to them Christ. We felt that the Spirit of the Lord was with us, and some who entered the room as scoffers left it with subdued hearts, begging for New Testaments. Next morning, immediately after breakfast, Jews again commenced to flock to our rooms, and again and again I had my bedroom packed, most of them standing, while from open Bible we pointed them to the Lamb of God, and pleaded with them to put their trust in Him who is the Light of the Gentiles and the Hope and Glory of his people Israel. Our supply of German and Hebrew New Testaments and 100 copies of Rabbi Lichtenstein's last pamphlet, which we brought with us to Oedenburg, was exhausted before noon the following day, and still many came entreating for 'the Book.' I wished some of our English friends could have been present, and have heard these touching appeals for the New Testament, from Jews, some of whom had never in their life seen a copy. I am sure their hearts would have been stirred to help us in the prosecution of this testimony to Israel during these 'latter days.'"

NOTES FROM THE U.S.A.

[FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

YOUNG MEN IN CONFERENCE.

AN event of great spiritual importance to the whole Connecticut valley was the recent meeting of the thirty-first International Young Men's Christian Association in Springfield, Mass. The meetings lasted a number of days, and over 700 delegates from all over the world were present. The people of Springfield (a very beautiful and prosperous city in the heart of Western Massachusetts) opened their houses most generously to receive numerous guests, and the feeling is deep and widespread that a great spiritual blessing has more than repaid the kindness which the citizens of Springfield so freely offered.

It was one of those gatherings of which it is impossible to speak in detail; so much was done, and so many of the services were held simultaneously. The opening day was itself a new feature. It is called a "quiet day," and is spent largely in private prayer and in devotional exercises. It is a wonderful preparation for the other days, filling the minds of the workers with the Spirit in an unwonted degree, and giving the speakers those moments for renewed consecration and for recollection before God, which, in these busy days of crowded assemblies and natural excitement, are needed to give the element of power from God. It seems that an audience hushed before God, and waiting to receive and impart the direct teaching which He so willingly gives to waiting and expectant hearts, must be a beautiful sight to the angels, and it cannot fail to assure us that, when such gatherings disperse again in the world, a Divine force will go with them.

Dr. Cuyler gave the opening address, and brought the congratulations of the World's Conference of the Y.M.C.A.—the Jubilee held in England last year. The most novel feature of the meeting this year was the educational exhibit made in connection with the work. Mr. Fred. B. Pratt, head of the Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N.Y., one of the great manual training-schools in our country, delivered a carefully-considered address, followed by a paper comparing the work done here and in England in manual training. President Merrill E. Gates, of Amherst College, made a most inspiring address also on the value of this new departure as auxiliary to the higher work of the Y.M.C.A.

Perhaps Sunday was fullest of interest, for so many were speaking in all the different churches of the city. Mr. Moody was also present on that day, and at the sunrise prayer-meeting which he held there was a large attendance. Eight hundred men were present at the mass meeting in the large theatre in the afternoon. The singing of the male quartette was most sweet and powerful. Two addresses were given at this meeting. Mr. H. J. McCoy, of San Francisco, spoke on the temptations of young men, and Mr. D. McConaughy, of Madras, India, spoke on the way to overcome these temptations. In the evening the farewell meeting, quite unique in character, was held after the close of the ordinary church services. Nearly 2000 people listened to eleven speakers from as many different lands—telling of the work of the Y.M.C.A. The tremendous scope of the work was brought vividly before the eyes of the audience, as they saw and heard from Italian and Japanese, African and Irishman, Chinaman, and Indian. Each speaker closed his address with the words, in his own tongue, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

The work in England was represented by Mr. W. H. Roberts, who spoke especially of the spirit of brotherly love shown in America, and the perfection of the organisation here. Mr. Boyd spoke for Ireland; Mr. Kesler for Germany, although he now lives in St. Louis. Mr. M. H. Hodder, of London, said a few words after Mr. Tsunashima, of Japan; Mr. Burt Jung, of China, Dr. Charles A. Eastman, a Sioux Indian, now secretary of the international work among the Sioux and other Indians in our North-western territories, and other friends also spoke.

Then Mr. Moody followed with an appeal for the men in jails and prisons. He said they were easily reached, and told the story of one man in a St. Louis jail who was converted by the report of a sermon with the headline "How the Philippian Jailer was caught." He hated all jailers, and thought it referred to a town called Philippi, in Illinois, and read the article to see what happened to the man. But not to delay too long on this memorable occasion, it is certain that with such college secretaries as Mr. Wishard, Mr. Mott, Mr. Spear, Mr. McConaughy, of India, Mr. McCoy, Mr. Moore, in the general work, and hundreds of others as devoted, there is a great force for righteousness at work in the world.

THE LATE PROF. SEELYE.

Amherst, another of our lovely valley towns, has been called to mourn this last week the loss of ex-president Julius H. Seelye, whose fame extended far beyond the limits of this college town, where he had been resident as professor and president for thirty-one years. For the last few years he had lived quite a retired life, owing to ill-health. He added to his acquisitions as a scholar a most devoted Christian spirit. Every thought and emotion seemed to be taken at once and involuntarily up into the atmosphere of truth, and there seen and enjoyed in those clear relations which are visible only to a deep thinker, who stands with God at the centre of things. Dr. Seelye was one of the first American philosophers and theologians to discuss high themes with the Brahmins and pundits of India. He addressed large gatherings of them in 1872 in Calcutta and Bombay in English, and those who knew him can imagine with what power. His philosophy was ideal, and his teaching in the college most marked in its effect on the spiritual elevation of his pupils. He united great fearlessness in political matters to breadth of view and profound discrimination.

A NORTH-WEST PIONEER.

Tributes have lately been gathering for one of the heroes of our great North-west, Rev. Marcus Whitman, former president of Walla Walla College, on the far Pacific coast. In 1836 a band of five missionaries went across the Continent to settle in Oregon and teach the Indians of the white man's God and the white man's Book of Heaven. Marcus Whitman, son of a distinguished New England family, a physician, and a man of dauntless energy, brought with him over the Rocky Mountains the first waggon that ever crossed the continent, the first white woman, his wife, the first wheat. Commerce, Christianity and civilisation came with that mission band. In this wild, far-off, unknown region, Whitman began his labour of love, of teaching, farming, building, preaching, sparing no effort to establish a Christian civilisation, acting as physician and surgeon for the whole country within 150 miles.

A question of the ownership of the immense tracts of the Pacific Slope coming up, he made the tremendous journey to Washington, D.C. The value of those lands was unsuspected at that time. Crossing the Rockies, being turned out of his way at least 1000 miles, he yet traversed amid incredible hardships the unbroken wilderness, and secured to the U.S. the territory of what forms now the great States of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington. His hands, feet, and face were frozen, and months were required for the journey. He led back the first waggon train of 200 waggons, and n early 1000 settlers. He then went on with his work, as though he had done nothing. The area of the country he thus preserved to the Union was equal to all of New England and all the Middle States.

In 1847 measles broke out fatally among the Indians, and they were told that Whitman's medicines had caused this. The Indians surrounded his house, slew him and his wife and twelve other missionaries, and burned all the buildings. The prophet and hero was also martyr. But his work in the ten years of his life at the West has not its equal in missionary annals. Dr. R. S. Storrs has lately paid it a just tribute, and this hero, for many years slumbering in forgetfulness, now seems likely to be remembered with the lustre due to such a character and to such acts. Whitman College at Walla Walla, O., is as yet the only material monument to his name.

BREVITIES.

The American Bible Society has just celebrated its 79th anniversary. The total issue of Bibles, Testaments, and portions since the rise of the Society has been very nearly 60,000,000. The issues in China and Japan are the most noticeable, and the gift of the 1200-dollar New Testament to the Dowager Empress of China is one of the most noteworthy events of the year.

The American Tract Society celebrated its 70th anniversary last week. The Society has departments in seven of our largest cities, and in all it has issued 12,829 publications, exclusive of periodicals, 4825 of these in the foreign field.

Several summer schools have been arranged for, not only in science and language, but in sacred literature, and one is called a "School of the Kingdom." It is rather a conference for the study of the social problems in the light of the Gospel of Christ than a "school" proper. But more of these later.

The Presbyterian General Assembly has been in session at Pittsburgh, Pa., and the Congregational Home Miss. Soc. meets in Saratoga the first week in June. The Christian Endeavour Convention meets in historic Boston on July 10.

SABBATH ALLIANCE OF SCOTLAND.

THE annual breakfast meeting of the Sabbath Alliance of Scotland was held in Edinburgh a few days ago, Sir Mark J. Stewart, M.P., presiding. The report for the past year was submitted by the convener, Rev. T. M. Shrach, and contained much that is not only of local, but of national and world-wide interest. Referring to the Hobhouse Bill, he contrasted the state of the Sabbath law in England as compared with Scotland, which relies less on statutes still in force but largely unworkable than on the sentiment of the community, as it moulds the action of local authorities, and even on the Continent, where, as in the case of Venice, there was a movement as spontaneous as it was decided in favour of a Sabbath law. Objection is taken to the choice of Saturday for a general election, first, as it affects the Jewish community, whose Rest Day it is; second, as it might injuriously affect the Christian Sabbath on the day following; and, thirdly, in its moral effect on the unseemly demonstrations in Ireland and elsewhere on Sundays.

In regard to Sunday postal labour, reference was made in the Parliamentary Report of August 10, 1887, to the disposition of the Department, while doing nothing arbitrarily, to reduce the tax on their servants, and the principle is emphasised that the sender of a communication rather than the receiver should in some way be responsible for the extra charge on Sunday labour. Interesting testimony is given in favour of stricter observance of the Sabbath in connection with the Sabbath Prayer Union from all quarters of the world, of which the first annual report is given in the appendix; and the resolution at a meeting held in Portobello bears as "a deeply-rooted conviction that the Church of God needs a new inspiration of love and reverence for the Sabbath, and that those who love our Lord Jesus Christ should prayerfully and in the light of God's holy commandments consider their duty in such a day."

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that the upper and not the working classes were leading the way in Sabbath desecration. Lord Kinnaird, as a member of the commission on the Hobhouse Bill, appealed for prayer that they might be rightly guided in a difficult duty, and cordially endorsed the proposal to bring into line the forces in favour of an institution which God had so abundantly blessed to mankind. Rev. Dr. Robson, of Perth, rejoiced at the revival of the Sabbath Prayer Union. Prayer is the mightiest weapon, and carries everything else with it. Rev. L. F. Armitage commended the many-sided aspects of the report; and Rev. John Morgan felt encouraged at the outlook for the Sabbath in the hands of the Democracy, who would certainly rise to rescue it from its profaners.

Rev. M. Merle-D'Aubigné vividly pictured the ease with which the Romanist in Belgium by early mass, in person or by proxy, discharged his Sabbath duty; and, alluding to the movement there in favour of a Sunday rest in the adoption of the postage stamp "not to deliver on Sunday," appealed to this country to help their little Protestant Church in the stand they make for the sanctity of that rest. Rev. A. S. Wilson, North Queensferry, recalled the services of Margaret, Queen of Malcolm Canmore, in Sabbath observance, and maintained that the principle of a Sabbath law from the beginning lay in the forethought of its author, the Master Workman, who prescribes a time for every task.

THE BAPTIST YOUNG MEN'S MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION contemplate holding a garden party on the lines of one held last year, in the Stockwell Orphanage grounds, to meet missionaries and their wives now on furlough in this country. The date will be about the middle of July.

The China Inland Mission.

Great interest was manifested in the anniversary meetings of this Mission, held on Tuesday week in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. The attendance was remarkably large, and the tone unmistakably that of intense ardour and devotion. The characteristic note in the addresses seemed this year to be specially a warm appreciation of the services being rendered by the Chinese Christians.

Sir George Williams, who presided at the afternoon meeting, opened with a few happy and thoroughly sympathetic words on missionary work and missions in China. He rejoiced in the cessation of the war, and in the fact that the China Inland Mission had been preserved from all harm.

Mr. Theodore Howard, the Home Director, referred with feeling to the fact that his beloved and honoured friend, Mr. Broomhall, had retired from the secretaryship of the Mission, after twenty years' faithful, loving, earnest, true, devoted service. He then introduced the new secretary, Mr. W. B. Sloan, and announced that the Mission has now entered upon its new office son Newington Green, N.

Mr. Walter B. Sloan made appropriate allusions to the difficulty of his position in following Mr. Broomhall, and then read a letter received from Mr. Hudson Taylor. In this he recalls the anxieties of the past year by reason of the war between China and Japan, and rejoices that there has been peace in all the Mission stations. After referring to his own long inland journeys on necessary business, in the course of which he has seen 300 of the missionaries associated with the C.I.M., he proceeds to deal with statistics. The baptisms during the year have been 746, i.e., seventy-five less than the preceding year, when, however, there was an unprecedented ingathering at one station, swelling the returns in an exceptional way. Sixty-five new missionaries have been sent out, so that the present staff numbers 621. There are now 122 stations, with 126 out-stations.

As to financial matters, the secretary stated that the income for the year had been £26,755 14s. 3d. in Great Britain, and £6402 6s. 9d. in America, Australia, and China—or a decrease for the year of £7022 0s. 5d. In the previous year, however, there was a special donation to building fund of £4000. Every need had been met, for since the close of the financial year, and during the present month, in answer to prayer, a large donation had come in, greater than the whole contributions of the preceding month. God is faithful now exactly as He was thirty years ago.

Mr. C. H. Judd, who went out in 1868, next related something of his experience since he was home seven years ago. Most of that time has been spent at Ning-hai (Shan-tung), where he and his wife were at first treated badly, and turned out again and again. This went on for three years, at length patience won the day. The two first converts were a blind beggar woman and a military officer; the latter, now now one of the brightest and best Christians Mr. Judd had ever met. These, and others who have followed them, have been greatly used of God among the heathen around. The beggar woman, for example, is a grand evangelist, carrying the Gospel news as she tramps from village to village, so that even in far-off farmhouses the name of Jesus has become known. This veteran missionary concluded with a fervent appeal for more workers—full of faith in God and love to Christ.

FORMERLY A VERY BITTER OPPONENT,

Miss Kentfield told, with much simplicity and power, the story of fresh work in Yang-chau and Kao-yiu, where the initial difficulties arose from the fear the people had of them, and from false ideas of their designs. Now all is changed; the people are willing to hear, some are inquiring, some have been baptized; but the workers are all too few.

Rev. A. H. Huntley spoke of work in Shen-si, and of constant itinerations and opening of new stations in various parts, as at Tung-chau. Like other speakers, he bore strong testimony to the devotion and endurance of the native converts, many of whom have been greatly used of God. One of whom he spoke turned part of his house into a "Jesus Hall," then gave a piece of land for a chapel, because it is his living, the ground on which he grows his rice. In one place, where there was at first much opposition, twenty-five were lately baptized in one day, many of them being spiritual children of Elder John, who gave the land just mentioned.

A GREAT GIFT FOR A CHINAMAN,

Miss Gibson had to tell of patient seed sowing, followed by glad ingathering, in Kiang-si. Of the first seven converts five are still in fellowship, one has died, and one has moved away, but is reported as standing firm. All these have had to bear much, but God gave them the grace of endurance and power to witness for Him. After an earnest testmony from Mr. James Simpson.

Rev. C. A. Fox, in a spiritual and fervent address, sought to bring the testimonies borne to a practical issue in the minds of the hearers, recalling them to the point of personal surrender to the will of God. Mr. Fox said that many were praying that from these meetings at least a hundred might be led to yield themselves to God for China.

THE EVENING MEETING.

By seven o'clock the great hall was crowded—the audience being apparently more numerous than in any past year. Mr. Theodore Howard presided. The opening words by the chairman and secretary, being practically those spoken by them in the afternoon, need not be repeated here.

Rev. J. Williamson, one of the original "Lammermuir party" in 1866, was first called upon. In opening he mentioned that Mrs. Baller, another of that party, was also present that evening. For many years past he had been working in Cheh-kiang, with the oversight of three cities—Ning-po, Fung-hwa, and Ning-hai, where God had lately given much blessing—forty-eight being baptized in 1893. Mrs. Williamson's health had compelled him to come home, but his heart is still in China, for which he appealed, with all the intensity of one who has given his life for that great land.

Mr. A. Orr-Ewing began by referring in tender terms to his bereavement, through the death of his beloved wife. During the past few years he had been superintending the work in Kiang-si, where he has been privileged to see wonderful things. The special burden on his own mind was, however, the grace of God manifested in many of the native Christians, and of some of these he wished to speak. One, whose like he had rarely met, although a Chinese gentleman, would morning by morning, taking the opportunity of speaking of Jesus to the men who lounged round to watch him. He is not an eloquent preacher, but a devoted man, and God has used him to many.

Another man, a farmer, seems on fire for souls. He will lay hold of all he meets on the road to tell them the news of salvation. He has been marvellously used in winning souls to Christ. Being on the margin of a river, he has a boat, and on Sundays he may be seen, when the floods are out, going here and there in his boat picking up people and bringing them to chapel. He spares neither pains, nor toil, nor cost to win his neighbours.

After recalling several such instances of devotion, the speaker closed with a stirring plea for the women of China. Almost the last words of his own dear wife ere she passed away, were, "I should like to stay for the sake of the Chinese women." Would not many arise to take her place, and give themselves to the millions of women dying in heathen darkness, with no one to tell them of the light of life?

Miss Oakeshott told how two weak women were used on the Grand Canal to open fresh stations and win many to God. First on a farm, and then in a large city, the testimony, patience, and kindness had been the means of beginning a blessed work.

Mr. T. E. S. Botham followed with a brief account of itineration and pioneer work on the great Si-gan plain (Shen-si), dotted with great cities and crowded by vast populations. For three years he and his wife gaining a terrible insight into their lives at home—their cruelty, superstitions, ignorance, and sinfulness. Then came the first rays of hope, inquirers began to appear, and the work of God was manifest. Now on that plain there are nine stations—they prayed for six, and God has given nine—200 inquirers, and many true believers. He asked prayer for these that they may not be turned back by the persecutions they have to bear.

Dr. H. Parry appealed specially to medical students—of whom some were present—to consider, in looking out to their life's work, the claims of the heathen, and the peculiar joy of being able to render sorely-needed medical aid to beloved brethren and sisters, who for Christ's sake have gone forth, and who are at times without skilled aid in the hour of sickness. He also added his testimony to what had been said that day as to the devotion, endurance, and usefulness of many of the native helpers. Outlining the service rendered by one little band of five Chinamen and one woman, he showed how each were being used in special ways among their people. Two of these are old opium smokers—truly saved, and yet oft in fear of the old snare getting hold of them. Then followed who said: We have had voices from China speaking to us in Christian England. Have we anything to say to those who have come from China to greet us? What shall be our answer to those who have come to us, and are going out again in our name, to do our work, in a land we never saw? I was reading the other day in Deuteronomy where Moses entreated God to let him enter the land. He is told he may not enter, but he is bidden encourage the heart of Joshua. Is there not here a lesson for us? We who cannot go can do much to strengthen by prayer those who do go.

There is another thing I want to say to them, and it is this: You do not know how your letters from China have been blessed in England and in South Africa. You think the China Inland Mission is intended to help the Chinese: I tell you it is being used by God to teach English Christians what they know too little about. We imagine, I fear, that the missionary must sacrifice himself, but the Christian at home need not. I tell you every believer in Christ is equally called to a life of self-sacrifice, of prayer and faith. I thank God for the way He has taught this lesson by means of the C.I.M. and other true missions. These have been a stimulus to many in faith, love, joy, prayer, and holy devotion. The missionaries tell us of the unspeakable joy of making sacrifices for God. There is unspeakable joy, and we may share it. We need to know our God, and these missions are teaching us. Thus they are reacting on English Christianity. The missionary spirit brings blessing at home—just as it did a hundred years ago, when it was proved that the men most in earnest about missions were the men who were most blessed among the perishing at home. I believe God wants entire sacrifice of all we have and are. Is that true only of the missionary? Nay, it is true of all. Our Lord Jesus Christ gave Himself for us, and do we not expect to give ourselves for Him?

Now, I want you to listen again to the closing words of Mr. Hudson Taylor's letter. You will remember that we are now between Ascension Day and Whit Sunday; that is, in the ten days when the first disciples waited with one accord for the promise of the Father. Jesus said on the footstool of the throne, "Ye shall receive power from on high"; the hundred-and-twenty waited at the footstool of the throne until they were baptized with the Holy Ghost, just as afterwards the Christians at Antioch waited till the Spirit was sent forth. So we need to wait on God for larger movings of his Spirit. I fear the Christian Church imagines we at home can get on with less prayer and faith than the missionary among the heathen. I do not believe the mighty power of God is only needed for the salvation of the Chinese—that mighty power is equally needed to convert ten or a thousand people at home. We cry for the power of God in China. Quite right, but remember we need it here as well. Listen then to Mr. Hudson Taylor's words: "The one great want for our native brethren, for ourselves, and may we not add for you also, kind helpers in the homeland, is a fresh filling with the Spirit which shall make us all and always on fire for souls."

That is our great need: not men, not money, but that God's Holy Spirit should come into us and reveal Himself in China and in England.

Mr. Murray concluded the meeting by earnest prayer that this power might come upon all present.

Mr. Hudson Taylor has just issued After Thirty Years: Three Decades of the China Inland Mission (Morgan & Scott. 6d. net.), in which he tells afresh the story of God's leadings—a record which may well stir the hearts of many, and set them all aglow with missionary ardour. Four new booklets (twenty-five for 1s.) are also issued from the same firm. Wholehearted Sacrifice, by Mr. C. H. Judd; A Wayside Testimony, by Mr. J. A. Heal; Wang, a Chinese Christian, by Rev. W. W. Cassels; and The Lost Condition of the Heathen, by Mr. W. B. Sloan. These telling little books ought to be largely circulated in the interest of missions generally.

CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE.

The Christian Colportage Association for England celebrated its majority last week by two days' meetings and conferences, the whole 120 colporteurs being present, as well as many of their wives and friends. Special reference was made to the drawing-room meeting held in Mr. Quintin Hogg's house just twenty-one years ago, when, inview of serious facts furnished as to the evil being wrought by vile literature, this Association was started to endeavour to counteract the mischief by introducing Christian books, as well as circulating the Holy Scriptures. It was cheering to hear that in these years no less than twelve million Bibles, Testaments, and evangelical books and magazines have been sold, besides the distribution of over nine million tracts.

At the afternoon conference, held on Thursday, Mr. H. D. Brown presented a summary of the report, recalling the origin and thanking God for the doors He has opened. The work is of a most aggressive evangelistic character. The colporteurs are not simply book-hawkers, but missionaries, who by this system of house-to-house visitation with books for sale, obtain special opportunities for dealing personally with the people on whom they call; and thus, both by printed books and the living voice, seek to make known the Gospel and win souls.

The secretary called special attention to the state of the villages. The spiritual darkness that reigns in many of our English villages is very saddening; removed as they are from centres of Christian activity, the light that is in them is often darkness indeed. Ignorance, drunkenness, and immorality widely prevail, and the greatest indifference to the things of God.

ABOUT FIFTEEN HUNDRED VILLAGES

are visited regularly by the colporteurs every month, besides thousands of roadside cottages and lonely farm-houses, and much blessing has resulted from their labours. The people, as a rule, gladly welcome the colporteurs. It is a cause of much regret that the work in some of the rural districts is in great danger of being discontinued, owing to lack of funds. The committee earnestly plead for contributions to a village fund in aid of poor struggling country branches. Colportage has also been a channel of much blessing to a class whom it is perhaps impossible to reach effectively in any other way. Many of them get quite out of the habit of attending any place of worship. Not a few, especially in the wealthier houses, are prevented from doing so by the Sunday engagements of their employers, and it is sad to see to what an extent indifference to Divine things is to be found amongst them. To these the colporteur—the humble pedlar with his pack of books—usually finds access, and the work has been greatly blessed to multitudes of both male and female servants. Special mention was also made of the work at markets and seaside resorts; also of the Bible van, for which a strong appeal was urged; £50 would support it, actively at work, for six months. Who would undertake this?

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, insisted on the importance of an increase in the Central Fund—unsentimental, perhaps, but absolutely essential to the maintenance of the work. He knew few Christian agencies which had a stronger claim for support than this Christian Colportage Association.

Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke with much feeling on the corrupt literature—chiefly penny papers—being circulated on the railway bookstalls, and gave some illustrations of the corruption (in a veiled form) presented in these periodicals. We demand, he said, that literature shall at least be decent; and if this were rightly represented to booksellers, much good might be done. Many do not know the harm contained in some of the papers they sell.

Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson bore testimony to the valuable service rendered in his locality by two colporteurs. A speaker from Persia told of colportage in that land, while another said that similar work is being done in China, and yet another that in Scotland colporteurs are doing good service.

Mr. W. R. Moore had the burden of the villages on his heart; and, dealing specially with Devonshire, deplored the dense darkness prevailing in many outlying villages. The staff of colporteurs ought to be largely increased, in order that might be evangelized.

Rev. George Everard wished to emphasise what had been said as to the sad state of many of our villages. He knew of solitary Christians living in villages where not a single other person seemed to know anything about God's way of salvation.

Col. Birney spoke chiefly on work among servants; while Mr. T. A. Denny added some stirring words as to the state of things in the villages. Mr. Gostelow, formerly a colporteur, testified to genuine results in some villages near Windsor, and stated that a number of the present colporteurs were themselves saved through books and Bibles sold them by agents of the Association.

THE EVENING MEETING.

At the evening gathering Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and after a recapitulation by Mr. Brown of the points in the report, the Chairman said that he regarded this colportage work as one of the most valuable of all the agencies of the present day. These colporteurs have a double-barrelled weapon—they speak faithful words and then leave a book or tract, which carries on the impressions made. Nothing better could be done for our beloved country than to get a colporteur sent into every town, village, and hamlet of the land.

Rev. W. Abbot, the vicar of Paddington, addressed the colporteurs as "fellow-labourers in the same Gospel." He believed in this kind of work, for the Press has become a great power. People will read, and what they read moulds thought and feeling. For his own part, he valued this Association both for the work's sake and for the workers' sake. It is at once a Bible society, a tract society, a diffusion of knowledge society, with opportunities untold of spreading the Gospel among the lapsed classes.

THE COLPORTEURS TESTIFY.

An opportunity was afforded for a number of the colporteurs to bear testimony, and these proved singularly bright and telling. The first told how God had blessed him in the kitchen. The next, from Derbyshire, showed how God's Word had found its way into blinded hearts in far away and dark hamlets. The circulation of the Scripture also formed the theme of a colporteur from Southport. He and his wife had resolved to make this their grand aim, and God had allowed them to sell thousands of copies of the Bible. In one case he was thankful to say that the Word was the means of two young women bringing their novels to his house to be burned, and

A GRAND BONFIRE THEY MADE.

A racy Yorkshireman followed on the evils of novelettes, and the way he had been able to replace these with more wholesome books. By this means God had saved one who is now the best Christian worker in his district.

"The Blood of Jesus" and "Salvation Made Plain" were specially mentioned by the next colporteur, who unexpectedly introduced one of his converts who had come up from Kingston with him to this meeting. This young man said that when he first heard the Gospel he knew no more of what it meant than the wood on the floor. But God's Spirit opened his eyes, and now he is rejoicing in Christ and working for the salvation of souls.

"Do you do any good going about like?" a Roman Catholic asked one colporteur. "I don't; but my books do." "Ah! I see now how these books get about. Some of our people have them, and I wondered where they came from. When they read them

THEY DON'T COME TO CONFESSION."

Lord Kinnaird trusted that the result of this delightful meeting would be that at least two additional colporteurs would be sent out this summer into the dark villages.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch addressed the colporteurs, speaking as to brother workers. Lady Hope concluded the proceedings with a helpful address to the men on Lessons from the life of David in his encounter with Goliath.

On Friday three special meetings were held; a morning conference for the workers; an afternoon meeting, with Sir George Williams in the chair, and an address by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and in the evening a thanksgiving meeting with further testimonies, and an address by Rev. J. G. Train.

I trust the outcome of these gatherings may be a renewed and deepened interest in this great work, and fresh liberality in supporting it. An additional £300 per annum is needed to sustain the present operations. The secretary is Mr. H. D. Brown, 37, Farringdon-street, E.C. Pearl Fisher.

AMONG BERLIN CABMEN.

Mrs. Davies, the originator and the leader of this deeply interesting and encouraging work among the Berlin cabmen, is a German by birth and education. She is the daughter of Baron von Düngern. When quite young she was advised to pass on to others the blessing she received from God's Word. Her first Bible-class consisted of four little girls (cabmen's children). Then she was asked to undertake a large class in the slums of Frankfort on-the-Maine, which Mr. Woodruff, of Brooklyn, afterwards reorganised to illustrate the American idea of a Sunday-school, this being the beginning of Sunday-schools in the State Church of Germany.

Marie von Düngern married Mr. Davies, an English clergyman, who represented the British and Foreign Bible Society in Germany. On Sunday evenings as many as eight nationalities, consisting of strangers and students, gathered together for the English Bible-reading and social evening, conducted in their own home in Berlin. It was Miss Marsh's "English Hands and English Hearts" which made Mrs. Davies long for similar work; she also derived many suggestions from Mrs. Ranyard's book, "The Missing Link," regarding the duties of Bible-women.

During the Franco-German War in 1870 Mrs. Davies began a Bible-class for cabmen's wives. Later on she thought it would be a good thing to get their men interested, as they had so much time on the coach-box. She said: "He can take his New Testament in his hand and mark the passages, and if his fingers are too cold and stiff to write the verses, you or your children can copy it for him." She added: "The Bible-woman will collect the slips of paper from the different families, and send them to me during my absence in summer." This plan was adopted, and now hundreds of families are engaged in Bible-searching. The main object of this work has ever been to promote Bible study. Quarterly festivals are held, attended by cabmen and their wives, in such numbers that the large hall is crowded. After tea the subject for the quarter is taken up by Court-preacher Frommel, who has kindly conducted these meetings since the death of Mr. Davies. Sometimes he allows the people to find the words of a well-known text, and in this way he draws out their hearty response, catechising and encouraging them by turns. To many these are hours of precious experience.

Many agencies are at work: skilful nursing is greatly needed and much appreciated. The deaconess spends most of her time in attending to contagious diseases. Then at the hospital a free bed has been set aside for the benefit of cabmen's families. In winter, two coffee-carts are busy carrying hot coffee to the different cabstands. Mothers' meetings are held fortnightly, and the babies are cared for in a separate room by the Bible-women and lady friends. In order to be present many sacrifices have to be made by these toil-worn women. Remarkable conversions have taken place among them, and very often they have been instrumental in bringing others to Christ. Cottage meetings are also held; and the sick and dying are visited by the clergyman, who is sometimes asked to administer the Lord's Supper.

On Sundays leaflets containing the Scripture for the day, a hymn, and a sermon, are widely distributed among the cabmen. These papers are gladly accepted and read. One driver has learnt whole epistles by heart while sitting upon his coach-box. This work has been carried on for more than twenty-five years with unceasing devotion. "It has been a very quiet work, studiously hidden from public gaze, like all women's Christian work in Germany; but it is the work of Christ done by a remarkable woman." It has always been Mrs. Davies' way to say little about her own special work. A friend wrote, saying, "Let it be made known, so that, if the Lord permit, others may have the privilege of helping in the work." And now, in response to many friends, Mrs. Davies has published some "Leaves" from her diary, in German, the title of the booklet being "Light and Shadow."

Last year Mrs. Davies suffered from over-strain and nervous exhaustion, but, after a complete rest, she has been enabled to return to Berlin, where she has been busy all winter. In England she has many kind friends, who have helped on the work. But there must be others who have visited the German Fatherland who would deem it a privilege to do something to increase the staff of workers, whose hands are already too full. A. D. D

Liss,

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

The London Yearly Meeting—the great annual gathering in Britain—has this year come and gone, and among its predecessors few, on the whole, have equalled it. The absence of friction, the prevalence of love, the meeting of the spirit in the bond of peace, have characterised it thoroughly. The composition of the meeting is interesting and indeed unique. The clerk and two assistants, who would largely take the place in other churches of chairman and vice-chairmen, were Caleb Rickman Kemp (of Lewes), Charles Brady (of Barnsley), and John Morland (of Glastonbury). They have each passed the mayoral chair in his own town, and they conducted the business of the yearly meeting most suavely and ably. Representatives were present from India, China, Japan, Lebanon, Madagascar, and France, all doing good work at mission stations in those countries for Christ, and all enjoying the hearty welcome accorded them by the church at home. Representatives were also present from sister American churches, among them Philadelphia, Baltimore, Indiana, North Carolina, and Canada. Ireland, too, was well represented. Mixing up with the crowds were baronets, Members of Parliament, ex-mayors, magistrates, men and women filling the most honourable places in the commonwealth. Yet here worldly distinctions seemed lost in the conscious sense and reign of brotherhood, and the knowledge that "One is our Master, even Christ, and all we are brethren."

The meetings on ministry and oversight were well attended and interesting. Nothing of a very special nature occupied them, but love was remarkably in the ascendant, and the needs of the church were earnestly considered. The morning devotional meetings were large, and were felt to be times of blessing.

For many years past foreign mission work has been heartily accepted by Friends as a duty, but there has not been the same unanimity about the conduct of home missions. This has doubtless arisen in part from the fear of any unhealthy separation of a class or order among us that would in any way infringe the great principle of equality and the priesthood of all believers. Experience is proving that our home missions in their practical operation are not violating this principle, but spreading and promoting it, hence the growth of harmony and oneness of aim and effort in the spread of Gospel truth. In this connection it is most interesting to note that an open conference in the coming autumn has been decided on, with the object of considering how Friends can reach the more thoughtful and educated classes around. It is believed that there are many men, weary of the empty ceremonialism so prevalent, who are yearning for the power to lead a truly noble and victorious life, and who form "the greater body of friends outside Friends." While not abating one jot or tittle of effort on behalf of the common people—the poor whom we have always with us—these classes are claiming the sympathy and the earnest thought of Friends to-day. Not a few of such weary and separated souls formed an important element in the congregations and workers in the early Friends' church. Manchester Friends have invited the conference to be held there.

There was no falling off this year either in the attendance or enthusiasm of the Foreign Mission, Home Mission, or Temperance Union annual meetings. Each evening the house was packed, and the interest overflowing. The meetings for worship held in the two large rooms at Devonshire House both on the Friday and the Wednesday of the yearly meetings were times of unusual solemnity and power, our American brethren taking a large share in the vocal service therein. Annual meetings of a variety of sorts cluster around the yearly meetings, including the missionary Helpers' Union." "The Friends' Prayer League," "Friends' Tract Association," "Friends' Provident Institution," "Young Men's and Young Women's Fellowship Unions," and a number of others, and all seem the better and stronger to be thus associated, and for the membership to unite once a year to take counsel together.

Women's and men's yearly meetings are held concurrently, and each has its own place and service, but this year the women have come to the conclusion that there is not that perfect equality in fact that there is in theory, and have requested the men to reconsider their respective positions. A joint committee has been set apart to look at the matter all round, and next year have a plan elaborated, if possible, by which the theory and the fact may be harmonised, and the united Church may more vigorously still "push the battle to the gate."

The Yearly Meeting has issued a manifesto on the opium traffic, emphasising its unchanged conviction, notwithstanding the report of the Royal Commission, that it is iniquitous and only evil, and urging its members to persistent agitation for its suppression till India and China are saved from the curse.

Memorials were read and sorrow expressed for those who have been taken from us during the year. Others are needed to fill the thinning ranks and take up the flag laid down by those taken home, so that the Master's work may be continued and enlarged.

The Yearly Meeting will be remembered as one of unusual sweetness and power, and the seed plentifully sown on the minds of children and adults will doubtless result in praise to Him who is the Church's Holy Head.

FRIENDS' FOREIGN MISSIONS.

In connection with these gatherings the annual meeting of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association was held.

Mr. Ellwood Brockbank, who presided, welcomed the missionaries present that evening—John and Emily Sims, Dr. and Mrs. Fenn, and Rachel M. Clarke, from Madagascar; Mr. and Mrs. John H. Williams, Joseph Taylor, Kate Taylor, Eliza Frankland, and A. M. Terrell, from India; Mr. and Mrs. Davidson, from China; Mr. and Mrs. Manasseh, Caroline Cadbury, and Emily Wright, from Syria. The Chairman then spoke of the work in Syria, dealing with the various missions. After dwelling on the difficulties from Jesuitic intrigue and Moslem hatred, he closed with a stirring appeal for workers who will go and live among the people, and show them how Christians ought to live.

Robert J. Davidson reviewed the work of the F.F.M.A. in China, specially in Si-Chuen, the great western province, with a population of about 35,000,000. His own work had chiefly been in Chung-King, a large city in which four missions—the Friends, the C.I.M., the L.M.S., and the Methodist Episcopal Church of America—are working on the most cordial terms. So far the work has been largely pioneering, although precious fruit has not been lacking. After dealing faithfully with the evils of the opium traffic, the speaker closed by saying that his commission from Friends in China was to ask "the best men that the Society at home has to go and preach the Gospel to the Chinese."

Joseph Taylor spoke of India and its peculiar claims. His own experiences at Hoshangabad and Seoni showed that the faithful labours of these witnesses for Christ are not in vain. But more workers are needed, especially, at present, earnest young men to work among the hill tribes.

Dr. S. B. Fenn, speaking of Madagascar, deplored the present terrible war and its probable results. He remarked that "The Queen of Madagascar and Christians in Madagascar ask your prayers that God would give them deliverance." He added some details of medical mission service in Antananarivo.

John Sims gave further accounts of work among the Malagasy, closing thus:—"If you pray about foreign missions and won't give your money, your time, yourself, then it is prayer without effort, and is hypocrisy."

THANKSGIVING AND PRAYER.—A few Christian workers assembled on Saturday, May 11, at the Gospel Mission, Grove-road, Holloway, to pray for the revival of the work of God, especially in the North of London. It was felt to be a time of power and blessing. A second meeting of a similar kind is proposed for Saturday, June 8, at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., 66, Stroud Green-road, to commence at seven o'clock.

A MISSIONARY SUBSTITUTE.—An American contemporary tells of a school teacher in America who received as stipend about £200 a year, lived on half, and devoted the other half to the support of a missionary in China. Thus she lived, in a sense, two lives. Her substitute in China wrote to her every week, and these two Christian women became thoroughly one. Such devotion and liberality are rare. And yet this American school teacher got a larger return of satisfaction and happiness from the £100 consecrated to mission work than she could have got from it if she had spent it on comforts and luxuries and pleasures.

THE NATIONAL REFUGES.

A little while ago we gave an account of the valuable work of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, showing how, commencing in a hayloft in St. Giles', it has grown to its present extent, having now five boys' homes and schools, two girls' homes and schools, and two training ships, with some 900 boys and girls under its sheltering wing. Several cases were given in the article referred to, illustrating the misery and woe from which many of the children now in the refuges have been rescued.

On Tuesday, last week, the fifty-second annual meeting of these institutions was held at Exeter Hall, which was crowded, the Earl of Jersey presiding.

Mr. Bristow Wallen, the secretary, stated that the total number of children admitted into the refuges and ships up to the end of 1894 was 13,538—viz., 11,285 boys and 2253 girls. The operations comprised Shaftesbury House for 100 boys; Working Boys' Home, London; Fortescue House, Twickenham, for 120 boys; Farm School, Bisley, near Woking, for 150 boys; Shaftesbury School for 150 boys, Bisley; Sudbury Hall School for 106 girls, Sudbury, near Harrow; Ealing House School, Ealing, W., for 106 girls; Arethusa, off Greenhithe, Kent, for 200 boys; Chichester sailing brig for boys; Training Ships Depôt, 100, East India Dock-road, E. The boys in the homes on shore were trained in tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering, gardening, farming, baking, housework; and each home had its instrumental band. The girls had to do all the household work in connection with their homes, such as scrubbing and cleaning, washing clothes, making and mending their own garments, and knitting and darning. The total receipts for 1894 amounted to £27,993, and the total payments £27,815. There was a mortgage debt still remaining on the London home in Shaftesbury Avenue, and for aid in clearing this off an urgent appeal was made by the secretary.

A few sympathetic words followed by the Chairman, who speedily made way for his wife,

The Countess of Jersey, who gave an excellent address, which was frequently interrupted by cheers. She said that both Lord Jersey and herself would most fully endorse everything stated in the report, as they both knew the homes, the masters, mistresses, and children personally; and she urged on all present that they should help the Society to the utmost of their powers, as there was no grander work being done than this for the destitute, forsaken, and homeless children of London and the other great cities of England. The children were trained to be respectable men and women, earning their livelihood in an honest manner. What better use could be found for one's money than helping these little waifs to help themselves?

Warm and hearty addresses followed by the Bishop of Stepney, Rev. Alex. Connell, Mr. W. E. Hubbard, Major McKenzie, and Mr. Henry Copeland. The children, a large number of whom were present, lent brightness to the proceedings by singing from time to time pretty songs and choruses, and executing various evolutions in musical drill.

THE CENTRAL SOUDAN MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Will you permit me to make a correction in a slightly misleading statement in your issue of the 23rd ult., page 25? In speaking of the Soudan Interior Mission, it is mentioned that Messrs. Gowans, Kent, and Bingham, of that Mission, were "reinforced by Messrs. T. Holt, J. Lomax, and T. Greenwood." This is a mistake, as the latter three men are members of the Central Soudan Mission; and Mr. Holt, since the death of his companion, Mr. Edward White, at the Niger a year or two ago, has returned with two fresh comrades—Messrs. Lomax and Greenwood—to carry out their original purpose of penetrating the interior.

Mr. Holt will shortly be joined by another of our missionaries, Mr. Herbert Webb, who has been for two and a-half years at our Training Home at Tripoli, and acquired fluency both in Arabic and Hausa, the principal negro language of that district. Mr. Webb, who has just returned to England, will be sailing for the Niger in the autumn, and we should be so glad of any openings for him to tell the story of the Lord's work in connection with this Mission among the Arabs and the Hausas o[f] a large Hausa settlement at Tripoli.—Yours in one Lord and service,

Robert H. Fallon,
Co-Director C.S.M.

AN OLD SCOTTISH WORTHY.

In The Thinker for June Rev. J. P. Lilley has given an account of Alexander Comrie which will be read with great interest by lovers of Evangelical truth, especially if they are Scotchmen. Mr. Lilley is indebted to a new Life of Comrie, written by Dr. A. G. Honig, of Oudshorn, near Leyden, which contains facts never before brought to light. Comrie, who was born in Perth, December 16, 1706, was the son of Patrick Comrie, a writer to the signet and a man of means. On his father's and on his mother's side he had connection with those who had been faithful to the Gospel, and from his earliest days he was under the power of the Word. His father was a friend of Ralph and Ebenezer Erskine and also of Thomas Boston, and was so impressed with his attachment to the truth that he had no hesitation in giving him an education that should prepare him for the ministry. To the lad's great disappointment, however, he was apprenticed to a mercantile office in Amsterdam.

The young man, attracted to a place where a great religious work was proceeding, was shipwrecked in crossing a lake, and lost all his luggage. In the evening he called at a farmhouse in the village of Woubrugge, near Leyden, to ask for shelter for the night. The farmer, at first doubtful of him and afraid, received him into a small bedroom next his own. "As he was retiring to rest, the stranger prayed in Dutch so fervently for his host, that the listening farmer was fairly melted by his petitions, and next morning acknowledged that his prayer for him had been the turning point of his spiritual life." A way was now opened for the young Scotchman to study at Groningen, where he took the double degree of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy. The church at Wonbrugge giving him a call to become its minister, he settled there and spent the whole of his ministerial life, forty years, in it. Comrie's Gospel teaching affected the village, and drew persons from surrounding districts. A faithful, humble, tireless preacher of the Gospel was he.

Possibly the quietness of his village life enabled him to be very busy with his pen, for he became a voluminous writer, some of his works being translations of Scotch books, but the greater portion being original works in Dutch. His work was done when there was a strong rationalistic current in Holland, and though he did not stem it in the universities, he carried "the sympathies of by far the larger portion of the people. It is the descendants of these adherents of Comrie's teaching that, according to Dr. Honig, are the readers of his works, and the most devoted servants in the Christian churches of Holland to-day." It is remarkable also that "while the names of his opponents, Van der Os, Van den Honert, and Schultens have long since faded into utter obscurity, the name of Comrie is with very many Dutch Christians still regarded as synonymous with all that is best in personal sanctity, theological truth, and evangelical zeal." To estimate the influence of this godly Scotchman, we must also remember that the Dutch Reformed Church is a great power in the United States. His work abides because it was founded on the Rock.

TRAINING COLLEGE, DUNOON.

This College has entered on its fourth year, and reports steady progress. An additional building has now been secured, and thus ample accommodation is provided. The College is in session all the year. Students get holidays by arrangement with the principal, and as the curriculum in general is not expected to last more than three years, a very large amount of work requires to be done by each student so as to cover the ground. Officials of various foreign missions have given their sanction to the course of training and expressed their readiness to consider any applications from students from Dunoon College. Arrangements will be made for securing a medical training, in case of such being deemed needful.

It has been thus far carried on resting on God's word and promise, and greater things are yet expected. All who are interested in such Gospel training on thoroughly Evangelical and spiritual lines can easily find out the motive of the work and satisfy themselves as to the thoroughness of the education. The College teachers are entering on a new year of service with much hope. The Principal is Rev. D. Macgregor, Dunoon, N.B.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH COASTING MISSION.

Mrs Henry Cook writes from 47, Stoke-road, Gosport: "The mission steamer Good News is again almost ready to start on its work of carrying the message of salvation to the various ports on the English and French coasts. This work has been abundantly blessed in past years, and we feel more than ever the need of going from place to place telling out the simple Gospel. We seek to scatter the Word of God broadcast, and tell the priest-ridden French people of our Great High Priest, who has made one sacrifice for sins for ever.

"The cost of keeping the steamer going is great, but we feel the Lord would have us 'go forward.' looking to Him to provide for his own work. He keeps us very dependent on Himself, and often severely tests our faith, but 'He abideth faithful.' We ask for the prayers of the Lord's children continuously, for increased blessing, that many souls may be won for the Master.

"It may be the Lord will lay it upon the hearts of others of his stewards to help the work in a practical way, thus having the privilege of being sharers in the joy of bearing his message to the lost, amongst the sailors, fishermen, and inhabitants generally of the coasts of England and France."

BROMLEY HOME OF REST.

A quiet but useful work is carried on in the "Home of Rest" at Bromley, Kent. Servants can come here when needing rest, or out of a place; poor women and girls are also received from London to recruit after illness, or to get the rest and change which they often need so sorely.

As those who most require the change are usually least able to pay for it, the committee are glad to receive these friends free, if funds permit. Those who have visited the Home often give pleasing testimony as to the benefits, both physical and spiritual, they have derived from their stay. The committee is anxious that as many as possible should come during the summer months. Any friend sending 7s. has the joy of giving a week's holiday to some poor toiler; while special terms are arranged for young women paying for themselves.

Information concerning the Home may be obtained from the hon. secretary, Miss C. Benham, Nutfield, Bromley, Kent.

SAFE IN HIS HAND.

What'er the future
God hath for me,
Shadow or sunshine
As pleaseth Thee;
If dark my pathway,
Thorny and rough,
God is my Father,
That is enough.

Oh, how He careth,
All through the way
Leading me onward
Gently each day;
He will not give me
Aught that is ill,
Though it be sorrow,
Working his will.

Bright shines the promise,
Said not in vain,
Jesus is coming,
Coming again;
That hour I know not,
His time is best,
So I am waiting,
Calmly at rest.

I am unworthy,
Yes, this He knows,
Jesus is worthy,
Here I repose;
So I go trusting
Thro' this lone land,
Leaving my future
Safe in his hand.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

Although the month of May was exceptionally close and hot for the season of the year, Mr. Geo. Nokes had some exceedingly good gatherings throughout his mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road. Our brother has now fully established himself in the Tower Hamlets, and his month's mission in the Great Assembly Hall is looked forward to with as much pleasure as some of the older preachers who have regularly visited for many years this great centre of Gospel work. It is nothing short of marvellous to see how this great hall fills every Sunday night, proving that the Gospel has lost none of its efficacy.

The inquiry-room after a service is a wonderful indication of this power. Although a large room, capable of accommodating over 100 persons, it has on occasions been found too small for those seeking the Lord. Add to this the fact that the hall has been opened for nearly 7000 consecutive nights, and some idea may be gleaned of the amount of work accomplished for the Master. Many interesting cases of conversion were dealt with during his mission, and not a few thank God for the faithful preaching of Mr. Nokes.

"I know that I am born again, for I am baptized."

THE PROTESTANT MINISTER.

"I know that I am born again, for God's Word tells me, 'Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God' (1 John v. 1); 'If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature' (2 Cor. v. 17); 'As many as received Him, to them gave He the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God' (John i. 12, 13, R.V.); 'Beloved, now are we the sons of God' (1 John iii. 2)."

"I know that past sins are forgiven, because God's priest has said, 'I absolve thee.'"

THE PROTESTANT MINISTER.

"I know that all my sins are forgiven, because God's Word declares 'The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin' (1 John i. 7); 'The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all' (Isa. liii. 6); 'I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his Name's sake' (1 John ii. 12)."

"I know that I have a right to stand here, and the far clearer right to stand at yonder font and altar, because God's bishop laid his hands on my head, and said, 'Receive the Holy Ghost.'"

THE PROTESTANT MINISTER.

"I know that I am truly called to the public ministry, because, firstly, 'We also believe, and therefore speak' (2 Cor. iv. 13), Christ, my Master, commands, 'Preach the Gospel to every creature' (Mark xvi. 15), and with the apostle Paul, 'Necessity is laid upon me, yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel' (1 Cor. ix. 16). 'He that hath my Word, let him speak my Word faithfully' (Jer. xxiii. 28). Because, secondly, I have also an outward call to the ministry 'by men who have public authority given unto them in the congregation to call and send ministers into the Lord's vineyard' (Article XXIII.)."

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH.—In celebration of the ninth anniversary of the opening of this mission, a conference of friends and workers was recently held, presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who spoke some stirring and helpful words on the "Comes" of the Bible. He commended the work carried on in that large building to the sympathy and support of all who appreciated evangelistic work in the surrounding neighbourhood. Short addresses were given by Revs. R. Allsworth Elvy, T. A. Carver, Mr. Monro Collins, and Pastor D. M. Cameron. In the evening addresses were delivered by Rev. P. A. Milne, Mr. J. E. Jack, and others. The financial statement showed that £355 had been collected during the past year for all purposes, and £407 had been expended. £1000 is urgently needed to meet pressing liabilities, and provide new class-rooms for senior lads and girls, etc.

MR. F. S. ARNOT'S RETURN.

Mr. Arnot passed through Bristol on Saturday, May 25, on his way home from South Africa. I asked him to send you a brief account of his journey, but have received a card from my sister (Mrs. Arnot), saying that he has been suffering from fever, and consequently has been unable to write.

Last year he journeyed to Garenganze by the East African Lakes route, taking supplies to Messrs, Thompson and Crawford and their fellow-labourers, now on the Western shores of Lake Moero. He found them enjoying good health, and hoped to be able to settle again in Africa. After, however, having written to Mrs. Arnot telling her to make arrangements to join him, he became so seriously ill that those with him quickly realised the fact that he could not live many months in Africa. They consequently persuaded him to leave for England, which he did as soon as he had recovered sufficiently to travel. Another severe attack of fever prostrated him near the south of Lake Tanganyika, but after reaching Lake Nyassa, the steamer of the East African Lakes Company quickly carried him to the mouth of the Zambesi.

Although frailty of health was the cause of his return, yet he so far accomplished the object of his going out, which was practically to test the value of the facilities offered of reaching the Garenganze country vid the stations of the African Lake Corporation. Within three months of leaving Chinde at the mouth of the Zambesi, Messrs. Arnot and Cobbe arrived in the Eastern Garenganze country vid Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika.

He was especially impressed with the rapid advance of so-called civilisation. Central Africa is now undergoing a rapid change, and unless the Church of Christ takes advantage of these inlets, and carries the simple Gospel to the hitherto unaffected tribes of the interior, in a very few years trade, commerce, drink, and the vicious example of many Europeans will have done their work.

The renewed attacks of fever have seriously weakened him, but it is hoped that residence in England will restore him to some degree of health.

JOHANNESBURG.

Dear Sir,—Johannesburg is now a city of first importance in South Africa, situated among the gold-fields, and with a rapidly-growing population of, at present, say, from 60,000 to 80,000. Two friends of mine, formerly missionaries at Cape Town—one, Mr. Dudley Kidd, a son of the well-known physician, and the other, Mr. Frank Huskisson, who sacrificed excellent business prospects for the Master's sake—went to labour there about a year and a-half ago. They commenced under many severe trials, and are prominent in faithfully preaching the Word and in setting an example of purity and unworldliness in that rich and wicked city. God has owned their labours, and the hall they have occupied is now much too small. About £2500 is required to build a larger one, about £1200 being in hand. The well-known and much-beloved Rev. Andrew Murray is president of the South African General Mission, with which Mr. Kidd and Mr. Huskisson are working. I heartily commend this effort to fellow Christians.

THE GOSPEL IN CAMP.—About 1000 men of the South Wales Borderers are now encamped in Brecon for their annual training of one month. For nine years past a band of Christian friends have visited the encampment each Sunday and Wednesday during the training, distributing tracts, Christian periodicals, etc., and obtaining pledges. Excellent results of the friendly visits have appeared, and about one-third of the men are now abstainers. In previous years readers of The Christian have rendered valued aid in this direction, and parcels of Christian periodicals (illustrated preferred), tracts, etc., may be sent to D. Devoir Thomas, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

THE SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION is steadily enlarging its beneficent operations; and now a quarterly paper entitled "The Word of Life," has been issued in furtherance of the work. The June part tells the story of the Mission in its rise and progress; and unfolds ways and means whereby the Scriptures may be circulated among people speaking various languages. We have on several occasions described the beautifully illustrated Scripture portions published by the Mission; doubtless the new periodical will help forward the work of disseminating them at home and abroad. Copies of the paper (1d. each) may be had from Mr. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

MR. LANE AT ASHFORD, KENT.

Mr. W. R. Lane has conducted an eight days' mission among us with the best results. The meetings began on Saturday evening, 18th ult., when a most telling address was given to Christian workers on the diversity, and unity, and spirit, and motive of labour for God. A more appropriate address could not have been given, for it fitted in exactly with the circumstances. For the first time in the history of the Evangelical Churches of Ashford they had combined together, and by a representative committee carried out the various details connected with the mission. United prayer meetings have been held in the Baptist, Congregational, and Wesleyan chapels, and so good and pleasant were these meetings felt to be by the large numbers drawn to them that a movement is now on foot for making them permanent either once a month or quarter. Mr. Lane's first address, therefore, chimed in with the feelings that had already been evoked, and strengthened the wishes that were forming in the hearts of many.

Evangelistic services on the two Sundays (May 19 and 26) were held in our largest hall, the Corn Exchange, both afternoon and evening, so as not to interfere with the ordinary services in the chapels. This hall, which holds a thousand people, was full in the afternoons and crowded to excess in the evenings. The assembly rooms had been hired for the meetings on week days, but before the mission was half over it was found needful to adjourn to the Corn Exchange, the smaller hall proving too strait for the crowd. The hearers were captivated by Mr. Lane's frank and easy and genial manner of speech, while hearts were deeply touched by his fresh, forceful, and fervent presentation of Gospel truths. No one could have denounced sin more powerfully, or lifted higher and made conspicuous as the cure for sin the cross of Jesus Christ and the help of the Holy Spirit. There is no taint of "modern thought" in Mr. Lane. His preaching of the Cross among us was another proof that all human schemes of remedy for the evils of to-day are "but a plaster on the little finger for the cure of an internal cancer," and that it is the old-fashioned Gospel alone that goes down olean to the root of the evil and completely eradicates it. Needless to say that God's people were edified, and souls were converted. Many remained at the after-meetings, and several have already decided for Christ. Many more are certain to come forward and avow the Saviour.

The afternoon Bible-readings were given on four days of the week. An enormous crowd gathered late on the Saturday night for the lecture on "Bunyan's Pilgrims." This was full of telling points. The lime-light views were beyond praise.

RED, WHITE, AND BLUE INSTITUTE.

Our little holiday home, quite near London and yet in the country, has already been a blessing to many poor and sick people, and many more are longing to go down there. We can tell of wonderful cases—sorrow turned to joy and sickness to health. One poor woman was dangerously ill with bronchitis; the doctor gave no hope. However, she rallied somewhat, and we determined to try the effects of comfort and care in our holiday home; so she was safely brought there with tenderest care, a complete invalid, and when she left to return to work and often suffering, she was a changed creature, and her thankfulness is beyond all words.

A little lad had been ill for a long time, and could not get over the weakness, so he came to us with such white pinched cheeks and fragile looks, but when he went back to his mother her joy was indescribable at seeing her boy's rosy face and the health that had returned to him.

We could tell you of many others equally benefited. A week or two of rest and change in the country, with plenty of good food and a large share of loving care, means such great results to the poor of our crowded London streets. It is getting big returns for our money. We want to go on sending many away during all the summer and autumn months, and we shall be so very grateful to those who will help us do this.

THE BISHOP OF MOOSONEE has not been able to obtain a clergyman to return with him as a missionary to his vast diocese, He has, however, succeeded in finding a helper who will accompany him to Churchill. The needs of Moosonee are as great as those of any of the neighbouring dioceses, and men have volunteered for the extreme north-west.

Letters to the Editor.

A MONTHLY DAY OF PRAYER.

Dear Sir,—Do you think it possible to issue an invitation through The Christian to "all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord" to unite in observing the first day of every month as one of special supplication and intercession? In Israel's history every first day of the lunar month was holy to the Lord, a special consecration of a natural division of time to God's service and glory. Although, in this late hour of the Church's history, a resumption of such a special day is impracticable, yet I would point out that men have, on the whole, lost rather than gained by its abolition as a day sacred to God.

To me it appears probable that the reason was the introduction of the first day of the week as the holy day of the Christian Church. The Jewish Sabbath would for a long time hold authority in the Church over Jewish converts. Thus there would be two sacred days in one week. As, by the gradual progress of wider Christianity, the Jewish Sabbath fell out of Christian observance, "the Lord's Day" became the only hallowed day, and thus thirteen days have been lost altogether so far as any outward recognition of God's service in the Church of Christ or any section of it is concerned.

Considering the admitted need that exists of "power from on high" on a far wider scale than is visible, could not gatherings in the Lord's name be held at 7 a.m. (nearly 1000 were gathered at this hour in the convention held here this month), at noon, and in the evening, to unite in prayer and fasting before God? The chief difficulty is to arrange a place of meeting, and to find an organiser who would give time and thought for the arrangements. As a former member and president of a Y.M.C.A., might I suggest the possibility of each local Association giving the use of a room, and providing a worker? It would entail additional labour, but richer blessing would follow. The spread of sacerdotalism, of worldliness, of indifference, and of vice should bring the children of God to their knees.

To hear of a Royal college in which "the great bulk of the members—young men—are either atheistical or agnostics," and of large factories where men who name Christ's name can be counted on the fingers, should fill our hearts with grief lest England's candlestick be removed, and constrain us to cry to our God that in his love and pity He will visit us again. That something may be done to secure united, fervent, believing prayer is the earnest hope of yours faithfully in Christ,

John O. West.

FROM CAMPOS, BRAZIL.

Pastor Salomon L. Ginsburg writes from Campos:—"Campos is the most flourishing city of the State of Rio. Its inhabitants number over 30,000. Four trains leave the city daily to different parts of Brazil. We are in constant contact with over 2,500,000 souls. The people, as a rule, are intelligent, and when, years ago, the Gospel began to be published, many received the news gladly. A little community was formed, and daily the Lord added to its numbers faithful followers.

At first they worshipped in a small upper chamber, but soon the members outnumbered the seating capacity. They looked for another house, and after much searching found another upstairs room that can hardly accommodate 100, and our actual membership is nearly 150. Every night that the doors are opened many come to listen, but soon leave, for the heat is unbearable, so many crowding together. We are doing our best to save; but times are bad, and we are so poor that we do not know when we shall be able to get a proper house for worship. Meanwhile the work suffers. The building which we desire to erect will cost £1000."

BIRDS' NEST, KINGSTOWN.—The annual thanksgiving meeting was held on the afternoon of May 31. There was a large and happy gathering of friends and supporters. The special causes for thanksgiving named by Rev. P. B. Johnson, who presided, were:—(1) The supply of funds sufficient. (2) The health of the children. (3) Kind friends and helpers. All who looked at the children must have felt their hearts tuned to praise when they realised what they are, and what they would have been. An address was delivered by Rev. L. Darling, who told the children that he had prayed for the Birds' Nest every Wednesday for twenty years.

THE Y.W.C.A.

THE thirteenth annual report of the Brixton branch at Tunstall-road is very cheering. There are 222 members on the books. Several who have lately decided for Christ have joined the "Ready Band," and are now showing by lip and life whom they are serving.

During this month the Lewisham, Ladywell, and Catford Branch of the Y.W.C.A. held some special services in the Home, High-street, Lewisham. Miss L. Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, who was taking a drawing-room meeting in the neighbourhood, spoke three times. It was a time of much blessing.

There was a large attendance at the annual meeting of the Clapham Branch held in the lecture hall of the Carter Home. Captain Treeby presided. The number of boarders received was forty-one. The membership is 142, and a junior branch has twenty-eight members. Short addresses were given by Rev. Dr. MacEwan, Mr. Sclanders, Dr. Dunbar, and other friends.

The Upper Norwood and West Dulwich branch held their annual social gathering at St. Aubyn's Hall on May 30. After tea was partaken of by 200, music and singing, with a recitation, "In the Children's Hospital," followed. The chair was taken at 9 p.m. by Rev. J. R. Edwards, and an earnest address was given by Rev. W. E. Peters, of Guildford, who spoke with power and to the point to 300 members and friends.

The Thrift Department carries on a lodge of the "Church of England Sick Benefit Society" to enable Y.W.C.A. members to provide against sickness. As it was started at Old Cavendish-street it is still called the "Cavendish Lodge." Miss Keep, 5, Philbeach-gardens, S.W., hon. secretary, will give information and enrol applicants. It is open to Y.W.C.A. members in any part of the kingdom to join. For a few pence weekly from 6s. to 12s. a week can be secured during sickness, and £3 in the event of death. Benefit money amounting to £40 was paid to members of the lodge between January and April.

Will anyone living within easy reach of London invite a party of from 20 to 100 girls to spend a Saturday afternoon or a Bank Holiday in their garden, providing tea? During the next three months we are anxious to arrange such parties for the hundreds, even thousands, of girls employed in houses of business, work-rooms, factories, and laundries, to whom such a day is a pleasant break in the monotonous toil of the week. Will any one responding to this call communicate with Miss Butler, 13, Onslow-square, hon. sec. Saturday Afternoons in the Country.

EMILY KINNAIRD.
MARY MORLEY.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A NEW Association has been formed at Sevenoaks, and has already been joined by thirty-four young men.

A strong representation has been made regarding the necessity of help from English friends in the formation of an Association at Sierra Leone.

Mr. Frank J. Clark, who has done splendid service to the Y.M.C.A. as hon. sec. of the Bombay Association during the past nine years, is at home on furlough, and has been married this week to Miss Lloyd, of Bromley.

The Women's Christian Association of Philadelphia, U.S.A., is located in a magnificent building of eight stories and basement. During the year 556 women were received as boarders. All the usual work of an Institute is conducted on similar proportions.

The Folkestone Association held their annual meeting on Wednesday week. The report shows 190 members, with vigorous work—Christian and social. A new mission hall was opened last year at Etching Hill, and classes have been formed for telegraph messengers.

At the annual members' meeting of the Trowbridge Association a presentation was made of his portrait to Mr. Poynton Haden, president, in recognition of the valuable services he has rendered to the Association, and in testimony of the esteem and affection in which he is held by the young men.

The work of the Cairo Association is practically in abeyance for the want of an officer to superintend it. But the members are being kept in touch in the hope of a resuscitation, as the need of such safeguards as are afforded by the Y.M.C.A. is extremely great in this city, where young men are exposed to much temptation.

A new feature of the work in Hawaii the past year has been the organising of an Association for Young Men on the Island of Molokai among the lepers. A building has been erected, and a paid secretary, himself a leper, is in charge of this work. The membership is made up of lepers entirely, nearly 100 in number. It is probably the only such Association in the world.

The General Secretaries' Conference was held at Remswick Bay, near Whitby. The opening paper, by Mr. S. R. Mabin, "How to encourage Bible study among our members," was full of thought, and gave rise to an interesting discussion. At a subsequent session, Mr. H. Johnson, in a paper on "The next forward move of the Y.M.C.A.," advocated the training of general secretaries; while Mr. Oatts explained the new Y.M.C.A. Club and Institute in Glasgow.

Representations have been made to the National Council upon the great importance of effort being made to establish Y.M.C.A. agencies at open ports in the East, where numbers of young Englishmen go to fill business engagements, and where they are exposed to great temptations without the support of social or Christian surroundings to help them. The ports of Hong Kong, Shanghai, Hankow, Yokohama, and Singapore are mentioned as places where Associations are much needed.

The American Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations which has just been held at Springfield, Massachusetts, was attended by about 800 delegates. It opened with a "quiet day," lasting from ten o'clock in the morning till three in the afternoon, in which there were no speeches or addresses, the time being occupied with prayer, meditation, and personal conference in regard to spiritual life. Mr. Henry M. Moore, of Boston, was president of the convention. Much time was given to the subject of Bible study and the religious work of the Associations; and the fact was emphasised during the whole convention that, while the other departments are important, this is the main object of the Association—developing Christian young men, and leading young men to acknowledge Christ as their personal Saviour. The newest feature of the work was the educational department, of which a large exhibit was made by eighty Associations, occupying two entire rooms in the new Springfield Building. The college and railroad work also figured largely, and the work of the new American Indian secretary excited considerable interest, as did that likewise of Mr. Hunton, a coloured secretary. Special effort had been made to induce the attendance of business men rather than secretaries, and the endeavour was very successful. Much interest was manifested in the missionary movement as represented in the alliance of which Mr. Mott is president.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

AT Tunbridge Wells three active members of Emmanuel Society were baptized by the pastor, Rev. J. Mountain.

A successful convention was reported from the North-West Territories, Canada. The attendance was good, and the interest in the Christian Endeavour "advances" most marked.

Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, addressed lately an enthusiastic meeting in the East Hill Congregational Church, Wandsworth, held under the auspices of the C.E. Society.

In addition to supporting a native preacher at Dacca, the Upper Holloway C.E. Society has recently undertaken the support of an orphan in the Shantung Boarding School. It is also helping the work at the Wathen and Lukolela Stations on the Congo.

The annual meeting of the Young Christian's Association and of the I.B.R.A. Branch, in connection with the West Croydon Baptist Sunday School, was held on Wednesday evening, May 8. The chair was taken by Dr. Spurgeon, who spoke some encouraging words to the members, and the Rev. J. Wilkinson, of Putney, gave an excellent address on "Christian Progress."

Several especially good C.E. conventions have been held by the State Unions recently. The Michigan gathering was marked not only by a large attendance and great enthusiasm, but also by especial interest in junior Christian Endeavour. The Junior rally was one of the most affecting sights that has been witnessed in the West. More than one thousand children, carrying flags and banners, marched into the convention hall singing "Wave, wave the banner."

The fifth united annual convention of the Christian Endeavour Societies of Great Britain and Ireland was opened in Birmingham on Saturday evening last, with a reception to the 200 delegates by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Cadbury. The hall was well filled, and an exceedingly hearty welcome was given to the visitors by the Birmingham friends. A fine spirit of enthusiasm pervaded the meeting, which augured well for the success of the convention. On Sunday special sermons in connection with the C.E. movement were delivered in many of the Birmingham churches, the special Convention sermon being preached in the afternoon by Rev. J. B. Morgan, of Chester, in the Curzon Hall, a building seating about four thousand people. In the evening, at 8.15, a prayer-meeting was held in the Curzon Hall.

IRISH NOTES.

SEVEN new elders have been appointed in the Megain Memorial Church, Belfast, of which Rev. J. McConnell is the pastor.

Under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A., Mr. Ross F. Wicks, of America, has been preaching and lecturing to large audiences in Belfast.

Rev. S. R. McNeilly has been chosen Moderator for the ensuing year of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod, which has been holding its annual session in Ballymoney, and which has met under the shadow of the great loss caused by Professor Chancellor's death.

During the past week Mr. A. J. Arnold, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, has been in Belfast making arrangements for the forty-ninth annual meeting of the Alliance, which is to be held in Belfast on September 24. It is twenty years since the last conference of the Alliance was held in the capital of Ulster.

The death is announced at Blackrock, Dublin, of Miss Eliza Gore, at the advanced age of 103 years. Deceased, who was granddaughter of the late Bishop Gore, of Limerick, retained her mental faculties to the last, and quite recently wrote down her recollections of the dreadful scenes she witnessed during the Irish rebellion of 1798. She took a deep interest in Church Mission Orphanages in the West of Ireland.

The Irish Congregational Union has been in session in Kingstown under the presidency of Rev. Jno. Pyper, and the Irish Baptist Association has been meeting in Mountpottinger, Rev. J. Taylor in the chair. In each case encouraging reports were presented. The membership in the Irish Baptist Churches now is 2494, increase 160 for the year, while there has been an increase of ten in the number of local preachers and of six in the number of sub-stations.

Several benevolent organisations have held their annual meetings in Belfast. Amongst these are the Prison Gate Mission for Women, who received 121 women into the Home during the year; the House of Rest for Working Girls at Seacourt, Bangor, which has proved a great boon to many working girls in affording them rest and change they could not otherwise have obtained; the Society for Providing Nurses for the Sick Poor, which employs eight nurses, who paid last year over 21,000 visits to 711 patients; the Grampian training ship and Fron Lodge Industrial Schools, which have over 100 boys; and the Belfast Women's Temperance Association, of which Mrs. Byers is secretary.

CAMBRIDGE.

THE Gospel work at the old theatre, Barnwell, continues its steady progress. Special interest is shown by the undergraduates of Corpus Christi College, many of whom come to support the preaching of Mr. Arthur Hart, of their college, and to take part themselves in the services.

Mr. Hart is certainly the most popular preacher listened to in the theatre, since the undergraduate days of the Rev. W. R. Mowll. His preaching is clear, searching, and well illustrated from mission experiences in London.

The building, adapted to mission work sixteen years ago, sadly needs renovation inside and out (at an estimated cost of £220), before the Weaver Brothers commence a mission in July. The interest of friends will be gladly welcomed by Mr. Vawser, The Cury, Cambridge.

AN APPEAL FROM ROME.

I AM to-day leaving Rome after a four months' happy stay as chaplain of Trinity Church, and I shall be thankful if you will allow me to appeal to your readers for more prayer and more efforts for Rome. There is perfect freedom for Gospel work, and if only some of the many rich or independent Christians who congregate and are congested, one may say, in the fashionable centres of England, would come here, I believe they would find plenty of work. "The harvest is great, the labourers are few."

The people are singularly gentle and affectionate if kindly treated, and from October to July Rome is one of the healthiest of cities. Living is not expensive, and the place is always interesting. Another reason for longing for true and decided Christians to settle here is that they would be a counterpoise to a large number of our people (even ministers of the Gospel among them) who troop off on Sunday to St. Peter's or some other Church if there be some special function on.

"They know not what they do," one may charitably hope, but I know they perplex and stumble hundreds of Romans who are inquiring after the truth.

WILLIAM HORNE.

Rome, May 15.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Council of the Church of England Temperance Society has resolved in favour of the second reading of the Government Local Veto Bill, subject to some revision in its later stages.

The Canadian Temperance League has just completed its sixth year of existence. The year just passed has been in every respect the most successful in the history of the organisation.

Miss Charlotte A. Gray, the international missionary, has just planted Good Templary in France, by instituting "Gallia" Lodge, No. 1, at Paris. It includes French, English, Servian, and Russian subjects.

Dr. Walmsley, of Darenth Asylum, says that one-fourth of all cases of insanity are due to drink, and one-half are hereditary. A large proportion of the hereditary cases are doubtless due to the drinking habits of ancestors.

The scientific temperance instruction given in American schools on the effects of alcohol and narcotics is now being supplemented by pledging the boys against the smoking of cigarettes and the use of tobacco. In New York alone 40,000 school boys are pledged.

It is stated that it has hitherto been the custom on the occasion of State concerts to give the coachmen and footmen in charge of carriages conveying guests, vouchers to the value of sixpence each, negotiable at certain public-houses in the vicinity of Buckingham Palace. This custom has been discontinued.

During Mr. E. Tennyson Smith's mission at Stockton-on-Tees, some excitement was caused at the women's meeting by a retired publican's daughter denouncing "the trade." Only recently she had been offered a public-house, where she could have taken £40 a week, but she had firmly declined to have anything to do with the business, or to live on the foolishly-spent pence of the drinkers.

The Blackburn Teetotal Mission, commenced about a dozen years ago by Mrs. Lewis, is still carried on with undiminished energy and most encouraging success, open-air meetings being held in the market-place, in addition to four weekly gatherings in the Lees Hall, erected four years ago by Mr. Thomas Lewis, carriage builder, who takes a deep practical interest in the work of his excellent wife.

The Ruri-Decanal Conference of Southwell, at its recent meeting, had the Bishop of Chester's licensing scheme advocated by Rev. Dr. Cogswell, of Chester, who read a paper on the subject. Rev. Canon Cator proposed a resolution favouring the Bishop of Chester's scheme, but an amendment declining to express an opinion that it was "suitable for introduction into England" was carried by more than two to one.

Adolph Fick, professor of physiology in the University of Wurtzburg, has written an article on the "Alcohol Question," which has been translated for The School Physiology Journal. The subject is treated from the standpoint of a trained specialist and scientist. Like other European scientists, as a result of his special study of the effects of alcohol Professor Fick has become a total abstainer.—Christian Statesman.

The monthly meeting of the Total Abstinence Society in connection with the Irish Church Missions was held in the mission buildings, 5, Townsend-street, Dublin, on Monday, May 27. Mr. Glasgow, of the Irish Temperance League, delivered an address on the evils of drink and the danger of moderate drinking. Thirty-four medals were presented during the evening for the keeping of pledges for lengthened periods.

The British Medical Temperance Association held its annual meeting at the Holborn Restaurant last week under the presidency of Sir Benjamin Richardson. Dr. J. J. Ridge reported that during the year 1893-94 twenty-nine new members have been enrolled, of whom twenty-eight joined the English branch and one the Scottish branch. Three new student associates have been enrolled, and one associate. There are now in Wales 269 members, in Scotland 53, in Ireland (central) 30 (north) 40, and abroad 19, making a total of 411.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—The fifteenth annual meeting of the Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, took place on Thursday, when Dr. R. N. Thornton preached in the afternoon, and Dr. James Gall presided at the assembly in the evening. The report gave an account of the rise and progress of the institution. It was stated that the severity of the winter and the prevalence of sickness had greatly tried the resources of the institution. There are now eighty-two inmates in the Homes. Addresses, showing the great need of the work, were given by several ministers and gentlemen. The fact came out that there are at least 11,000 old blind persons in the British Isles who are in need of such a haven of rest as the Homes, founded by Mr. and Mrs. Bright, supply. The Homes are now happily free of debt.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. James Baillie, of Bloomsbury, has gone on a three months' leave of absence, necessitated by the state of his health. Dr. Landels, late of Edinburgh, will preach in Bloomsbury Chapel during June.

Mrs. A. L. Prindle, matron of the famous Florence Crittenton Mission, New York, is expected in London about the 12th inst. She is coming over at Lady Henry Somerset's invitation to aid in starting a night mission in London on lines similar to those worked so successfully in New York. Letters may be addressed to Mrs. Prindle to our care.

Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, who was to have occupied the late Dr. Dale's pulpit at Carr's Lane, on Sunday last, and to have taken a prominent part in the meetings of the Christian Endeavour Convention at Birmingham on Monday and Tuesday, was, we regret to say, taken suddenly ill on Sunday morning, and has been compelled to cancel all his engagements for at least several days.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Charles Minor has been evangelising in the Florence Crittenton Mission, New York, and his speech and song have been blessed in the salvation of many souls.

Ireland.—Successful Gospel services have just been held by Rev. Dr. Williamson and others in Carryduff Presbyterian Church, and similar services have been held in Manorhamilton Methodist Church by Rev. Jno. Good, conference evangelist.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Evangelisation Society, has just completed a most successful mission at the Congregational Church, Hampton Hill. He will be preaching in a large tent during the whole of June in the county of Suffolk, chiefly at Elmswell and Stowmarket.

Mr. H. C. Wallace, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a six days' Gospel mission with a tent at Pluckley, Kent. Considering the size of the village, good numbers were present every evening, and we believe good has been done. Mr. Wallace has left here to conduct a mission at Collingbourne, Wilts. R. D.

Clifton, Biggleswade.—Mr. King Lambert, of the Evangelisation Society, has just closed a successful tent mission in this large village. Large numbers of people have gathered night after night to listen to the Gospel, which is "the power of God unto salvation." On Sundays the tent has been packed; many of the people were not able to get in.

Geo. Harwood, jun.

Gipsy Smith has concluded a ten days' evangelistic mission in connection with the Nonconformist churches of Barry. The first meetings were held in the Congregational Church, but that place soon proved too small for the large congregations he attracted, and the market hall was secured for the remaining meetings of the mission, that large building being filled each evening to overflowing.

Mr. Josiah Spiers has been holding, in the Wesleyan Chapel, Blyth, Newcastle, a fortnight's series of services for children and young people, with many tokens of blessing. The preceding fortnight he was at Ashington, where also he was blessed. Many have, doubtless, been converted, and a large number of fine, intelligent young people have stayed to the after-meetings and come out on the Lord's side. The hush over the meetings was remarkable, hundreds listening to the word with breathless and fixed attention. Mr. Spiers is now evangelising at Wallsend.

Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago.—We devoutly praise God for the visit of Mr. Clement Palser to our city. His services have been mightily owned of God. His preaching is marked with power in the Holy Ghost. At his first meeting here a number of souls decided for Christ, one of whom had determined upon suicide that night. On Sunday, May 19, the place was crowded to excess. At the close of the deeply interesting and solemn address, a large number of persons rose in all parts of the building and boldly expressed their desire to be saved. It was a sight not readily forgotten: strong men, deeply convicted of sin, on their knees, sobbing aloud as though their hearts would break. Mr. Palser has also preached in Chicago Avenue Church (Mr. Moody's), and in other churches in the neighbourhood. Before leaving the city for the West, Mr. Palser has been asked to hold a special mission for city men in the large auditorium of the central Y.M.C.A.

Harry Monroe.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for the months of June, July, and August. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by many readers: Rev. W. Hay Aitken, June 2 to 9, St. John's, Malone, Belfast; Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne, August 11 to 16, Whitby Church; Rev. Joseph Morris, July 3 to 8, Leake, near Boston.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. WHITFIELD.

We have to announce the passing away at Southwold, on Saturday, May 18, of Mr. W. Whitfield, after five years of disablement through paralysis. His funeral took place in the graveyard of the parish church of St. Edmunds, Southwold. Mr. Whitfield, during his business days in Glasgow, was very active in evangelistic work, and took a considerable part in the Revival of thirty years ago. He had a wide circle of Christian friends; his brother is a vicar in Hastings, Rev. F. Whitfield, the author of several well-known hymns, "I need Thee, precious Jesus," being one. While mourning his departure and sympathising with his widow, friends will rejoice in his escape from suffering, and in his call into the Master's presence.

THE BOOK WORLD.

"A BURNING AND A SHINING LIGHT."

Life and Labours of Rev. William Johnston, D.D., Belfast. By Rev. Samuel Prenter. Dublin: Eason & Son; London: Nisbet & Co. As Dr. Killen says in a brief preface: "This work describes the career of one of the most earnest and useful ministers ever connected with the Presbyterian Church of Ireland...He has left behind him a fragrant reputation...It is to be hoped it will find its way into the hands of young ministers all over the land. They have here an encouraging and stimulating example of pastoral zeal, fidelity, and success." For half a century Dr. Johnston laboured in Belfast, holding fast by the verities of the Gospel, setting forth Christ crucified, and present salvation through faith in his name, and attaining by weight of personal character and pastoral faithfulness a position of commanding influence in the councils of the Church and in the town of Belfast. How he reached this position is admirably and sympathetically told by his biographer.

Revival scenes form the theme of one stirring chapter—for it need scarce be stated that Dr. Johnston threw himself heart and soul into the revivals of 1859 and later years. One remarkable incident, among many such, is recorded in which, after a Sunday evening address at the entrance of a low lane, "a considerable number of the fallen women turned out of their houses and marched in a body (voluntarily) to the Ulster Penitentiary."

The volume, which gives two portraits of Dr. Johnston, is well written, and deeply interesting from first to last. "Never," says one, "have I known any minister of Christ to whom the words were more literally applicable, 'He was a burning and a shining light.'"

Three very useful monthlies are: Home Words, The Day of Days, and Hand and Heart, all of them admirably illustrated. The parts for the first six months for the present year have been stitched together, and furnished with attractive covers, in which they form "Midsummer Volumes." (6d. each.) "Home Words" Office.

The Shepherd King (Religious Tract Society. 1s.). A simple retelling, for children, of the life of David. Being printed in large type, with plenty of illustrations and bright paper boards, it will be eagerly read by the little folk.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—A clergyman requests earnest prayer that his way may be opened up as to whether he is to enter upon a new sphere of Christian work. He also asks for blessing upon his present sphere of work.—For a fourteen days' mission in the Tolbooth Hall, Glasgow, commencing June 9, conducted by Mr. W. Harry Dawe.

MISSIONARIES ATTACKED IN CHINA.—According to trustworthy information received here from the province of Szechuan, bordering on Thibet, desperate outrages have been committed there by the fanatic populace on the American, British, and French Missions, whose establishments have been totally destroyed. Missionaries residing here are in possession of a public notice provided with the official seal of the Viceroy of Szechuan, inciting the people to rise and expel every missionary. The French (R.C.) bishop was wounded in the assault on his mission-house, and he and his fellow-sufferers are at this moment prisoners at Yamens Chentu, the capital of the province.—Dalziel's Telegram, Shanghai. June 3.

IRISH EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY

Appeal for £500.

For over twenty years this Society has been at work holding Missions in all parts of Ireland, in moveable wooden halls, in tents, in public buildings, in Town Halls, in Churches, in School-rooms, and even in Barns.

Well-tried and true Evangelists have thus been employed in preaching the Gospel of the grace of God to all sorts and conditions of men, working in sympathy, and, where possible, in co-operation with the ministers of the different Evangelical Churches in each locality.

The results which God has granted have oftentimes appeared marvellous even to ourselves, so largely has He honoured the simple proclamation of a clear Gospel in these Mission Services, carried on sometimes for several weeks in the same place.

For eighteen years the donations and subscriptions of our friends, together with the collections at the places where Missions were held, have sufficed to meet the expenditure, but at the end of 1893 we found ourselves in the new and painful position of having a deficit of nearly £400. We were consequently, about a year ago, compelled to reduce the number of our Evangelists in order to bring our expenditure within our reduced income.

But even with this reduced expenditure, the income of the year 1894 has fallen short of it by a small sum, so that we find our deficit increased to over £400 at the present moment, and no working balance in hand.

We ask our friends what is to be done? Are we largely to reduce the number of the Evangelists, which means a greatly diminished power for usefulness? Are we to stop the extension of this blessed work, which (by God's grace) is bringing the joyous sound of a simple Gospel to over 200,000 persons every year, and personal salvation to many hundreds of perishing souls? Are we to refuse to enter into open doors, ready to receive the Evangelists, both in the North and South of Ireland?

We make this effort to bring our need before those who know the value of immortal souls, and long that the Gospel should be extended to our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen as well as to our nominal Protestants.

Donations and Subscriptions will be thankfully received by

THOS. P. LAW, Esq., Q.C., Hon. Treasurer, 48, Stephen's Green, Dublin;
JAMES BARTON, Esq., Hon. Secretary, Dundalk;
DAVID DRUMMOND, Esq., 58, Dawson Street, Dublin;
JOHN R. FOWLER, Esq., 6, Duncairn Terrace, Bray; or any Member of the Committee.

Of the needed sum of £500, £230 has been already subscribed. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN give us the balance, and enable us to go happily forward in our work?

NEW COLLEGE SETTLEMENT, EDINBURGH.

On the invitation of the residents and committee an interesting reception was held in the Settlement buildings, immediately after the opening meeting of the Free Church Assembly. The chairman, Principal W. G. Blaikie, having intimated the satisfactory state of finance, the warden, Rev. E. Miller, gave some account of the year's work, and spoke of the influence of Settlement life on students and people alike. The students get to know the people, and the people to know the students. Only by living among the people and with the people can our students really know them and influence them. Lord Overtoun said he regarded the work of the Settlement as the clinical part of a student's training for the ministry. Dr. Wilson, Lord Kinnaird, and Rev. J. McNeill dwelt on various aspects of home mission work. Professor Laidlaw spoke of the influence of the Settlement on college life and work. At the close of the meeting donations were intimated towards the Settlement funds of over £200.

With the young believer, as with the mature Christian, the devout reading of a Christian Biography cannot but tend to deepen the Spiritual life, and awaken a longing for a closer walk with God. Each of the Memoirs comprised in "THE LIBRARY OF CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHY," while skilfully portraying the various traits of character of the individual, also treat of the numerous methods adopted in the soul-saving work in which the zealous labourer was engaged. The Minister, the Evangelist, the Sabbath-school Teacher, the Open-Air Worker, the Visitor in the slums of town or city—each will be stimulated and aided by the perusal of these Biographies.

Poor Jewish Children in Whitechapel, Stepney, and Mile End.

The Jewish Missionaries of the London City Mission wish to give 1000 poor Jewish Children a Day in the Country. The cost will be about £50. In addition, if funds permit, it is desired to send away, for one or two weeks, many of the sick and ailing Jewish children. But for the efforts of the Missionaries these little ones will get no change from the dreary courts and alleys of East London.

For 10s. a child can be sent to the country for two weeks.

Will Readers of THE CHRISTIAN give these little ones a sight of the beautiful country?

Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, or by the Secretary, Mr. G. R. COLE, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C.

MRS. SETON ADAMSON, The Vicarage, Wright's Road, Old Ford, London, E., earnestly solicits sums, however small, to give a Fortnight, among Fields and Flowers, to Sick and Sunday-school little ones in our East London Parish. Population over 11,000 poor; no middle class. Help will also be gratefully acknowledged towards a Day at the Seaside in connection with the three sets of Sunday Schools, two Mothers' Meetings, and Factory Girls' Institute belonging to the parish. c5230

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec.
14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W. c4967a

DESPAIRING AND DESTITUTE.—Hundreds of thoroughly reclaimable young men might be permanently benefited by the numerous Labour Homes and Emigration Training Farms of the Church Army if funds permitted. Nearly one million meals served yearly, irrespective of creed, with labour test and Christian sympathy. Donors of 5s. and upwards supplied with tickets for giving to beggars. £4000 pressingly required for food, clothing, and maintenance.—Remit, Rev. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec., Headquarters, 130, Edgware-road, London, W. c5515

FRESH AIR FOR POOR CHILDREN.—For 10s. subscribed, a pale-faced child can enjoy a country holiday for a fortnight. Help very greatly needed this season for 500, in this, the third Poorest District in London.—A. STYLEMAN HERRING (for Local Committee), Vicar, St. Paul's, Clerkenwell, 45, Colebrooke-row, N.—Bankers: London and County. c5181

Kilburn, Mr. W. Luff, and Rev. F. B. Meyer.) The committee, desiring to extend their operations to include those towns and villages where no regular tract distribution is carried on, and to increase such effort in London, and wherever the existing agency is inadequate, cordially invite Christian people who are drawn to such work to become members and partake in a sustained, prayerful, and associated effort to spread the light of testimony to a crucified and risen Saviour. Members are supplied monthly with assorted parcels of carefully chosen Gospel tracts in quantity as required, for personal distribution only, and contribute to the funds by monthly freewill offerings, according to ability.—Secretary, S. E. ROBERTS, 26, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. c5214

Notes and Comments.

WHEREVER open-air meetings are held good singing always proves an attraction. Could not more "open-air choirs" be formed at seaside resorts during the summer months? Many visitors would gladly help, and even when preachers are scarce the Gospel can be clearly taught in song.

In deference to an apparently widely-expressed desire, the management of the London Sunday-school Choir have wisely and courteously withdrawn an "Ave Maria" from their programme at the coming Crystal Palace Festival. The secretary writes us :—

I am exceedingly sorry that some of our friends have rashly concluded that we are promoting the worship of the Virgin Mary by the insertion of this piece in our Crystal Palace book. Let me assure them we are sturdy Protestants—our conductor has lectured in all parts of London on "Martin Luther and his Times"—but we sincerely believe that the singing or perusal of this piece would no more lead Protestants to worship the Virgin Mary than looking at the beautiful picture of the "Angelus" would make us Roman Catholics.

The official intimation of its withdrawal says :—

An entirely mistaken interpretation has been made in regard to this piece: it has been considered as a devotional hymn, whereas it is really a descriptive poem included in the second or, as it is termed, secular part of the book. We are sorry to have to omit so beautiful a part song, but having regard to the feeling that has been excited, the piece will be withdrawn.

It is greatly to be regretted that the teaching of truth is too often sacrificed to the pleasant sound in musical productions. A correspondent writes to us also taking exception to the well-known sacred melody by Handel, "Angels ever bright and fair," sung at the Y.M.C.A. anniversary in Exeter Hall by Mrs. Mary Davies. We do not for a moment suppose that the gifted singer, or any of those who heard and enjoyed her exquisite rendering, had a thought of angel-worship; but where there is so much to choose from, Christian singers might easily take that which is not open to objection.

A correspondent sends cuttings from the Weekly Times and the Standard, which respectively read as follows :—

The Prince of Wales paid a lengthened private visit to the Loan Exhibition of Pictures at the Guildhall on Sunday morning. His Royal Highness afterwards honoured the High Sheriff of London and Mrs. Faudel Phillips with his presence at luncheon at the Irish Chamber.

While steaming through the Docks, the Shahzada, accompanied by his little page and one attendant, retired for prayer to the ladies' cabin, and only reappeared on deck when the Cardinal Wolsey was some distance on the way back.

Our correspondent adds :—"Let the world judge between the Prince of Wales and the Shahzada, and will any man tell me that this young Prince will not earn the respect of the people of our land by his obedience to the light he has? Surely it is time for a national remonstrance to the Prince of Wales on Lord's Day observance. I think you might call attention to this very sad state of things."

The Nonconformist conscience is uneasy under the rule of a horse-racing Premier, and a very notable sign of it was the appearance last week of an article in a religious contemporary on "The Ethics of Gambling," and one in another weekly organ of Nonconformity on "Epsom and Downing Street." The former insisted chiefly upon the demoralising influence of the annual saturnalia, of which Epsom is the centre. The other writer is more outspoken in style; his words are decidedly ominous, and well worth taking into account :—

History shows that rulers have always made a fatal mistake when they have appealed for support to the worse rather than the better elements in popular character. Gibbon tells us, as a counterfoil to the virtues of his hero, that "the predecessors of Julian, his uncle, his brother, and his cousin, indulged their puerile taste for the games of the circus under the specious pretence of complying with the inclinations of the people." But they did not do themselves much good by it.

How hardly men are driven who refuse to accept the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ! Professor Carpenter, when speaking the other day of "The Relation of Jesus to His Age and Our Own," had to express himself in these contradictory terms :—

The Gospels, while bearing an ineffaceable stamp of reality, are yet pervaded by an atmosphere of belief and feeling so utterly unlike our own that we have the greatest difficulty in reaching that reality through them. The world they offer us is one where the skies open, and the dead rise; where demons swarm from the abyss; where, in short, science is not, and imagination reigns supreme. Yet through this medley of ignorance and fancy there rises with tones of power that incomparable voice proclaiming the ideas and kindling the emotions which are changing the old order into new.

The Gospels are real, and yet how difficult to know that, though the reality is ineffaceable! Our Lord has a power over all ages and conditions of men, and yet what a superstitious being He was! Or was it only his disciples who were so? Then had He failed to save them. Contradiction meets us either way.

The praise of Jesus by Professor Carpenter ought, one would think, to go on to worship; there is a great difference between the two. One wonders how he and those who believe with him can stay where they are. He says :—

In telling us to seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, He set before us an everlasting quest; in bidding men be perfect as the Father in heaven is perfect, He laid the basis of a practical idealism which only eternity can complete. It is the sublimest testimony to the greatness of Jesus that so many generations have not felt it incongruous to worship Him as God.

We are glad for the attention which modern Unitarianism feels compelled to give to Him, since it must, in the long run, help to win them to his side.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Established Church of Scotland to retrench its expenditure on foreign missions was not accepted by the Assembly, but referred back to the Committee. Professor Paterson, who seconded the motion to that effect, observed :—

Our foreign mission enterprise is far too commonly criticised and judged in the light of the commercial principles of the nineteenth century, and not on the apostolic principles of the first century. What is prudence in matters of business, may, when looked upon from a religious point of view, be nothing less than imprudence and want of faith in God.

Another speaker said that instead of retreat he would call for advance. These are healthy signs; as were also the words of Dr. J. Hood Wilson, who said in his closing words as Moderator of the Free Church Assembly :—

It would not be a great stretch of imagination, or rather of faith, to expect the world to be evangelised during this and the succeeding generation. The progress of events, the fulfilment of prophecy and promise which we have already seen, the whole condition of the Church and the world lead us to expect extraordinary changes.

When we hope and expect, we begin to work accordingly. A tide of missionary enthusiasm ought to mark the end of this century and the beginning of the next.

More men are ready to serve in the mission field than the societies can send forth. The L.M.S. has several whom it has accepted, and would send forth at once if it had the necessary means. At the Free Church Assembly Professor Lindsay had to say :—

Up to this year it has so happened that by creating new mission stations or places for missionaries at mission stations, or by supplying their own deficiencies from deaths or resignations, or by helping other Presbyterian Churches, this Church has been able to find positions in the foreign field for every one of their volunteer students. But we can no longer say this. We have four or five men who are able and ready to go to work as missionaries abroad for whom the committee have not any place.

Some new departure will almost certainly come out of this state of things; at least if it be continued and extended. With the great heathen world waiting, in some places calling, for missionaries, and men at home ready to go and fitted for the work, it is evident that a move will have to be made.

We agree with The Arbitrator when it says :—

It is pitiable to find that the Bishop of Bayonne has issued an official notice commending a bloodthirsty article in his diocesan paper, and permitting it to be read from the pulpits of the churches. In this article the Madagascar campaign is described as a religious war, a war in the cause of God, and a struggle between Catholicism and Protestantism.

This statement agrees precisely with other statements made in France some time ago, that the Jesuits are an inspiring force in this disgraceful attack upon a feeble nation.

The reforms in Turkish rule in Armenia which the Powers have agreed upon are, of course, anything but agreeable to the Porte, which, so far, holds out against them. Whether the attempt to divide the Powers will succeed remains to be seen; we hope not. A united and resolute attitude on their part will easily carry the reforms, but irresolution or division will be fatal. In that case none can foretell the course of events. We are reaping, in our uncertainty, the results of past sins, and the harvest may be worse still.

The League of the Christian Shoe, or Natural Feet Society, or Society of the Heavenly Foot, is the name of a Society recently formed at Shanghai for the purpose of emancipating women's feet from the cruel binding to which they have been subjected, that is, women of the well-to-do order.

us it seems strange that parents should put their children to such torture as the process entails, but then the women with small feet have the chance of husbands, whereas those who do not bandage might be mistaken for slaves or boatwomen. To please the men is the root of the custom; and, as the Chinese say, foot-binding is not so bad as tight-lacing, which is done for the same purpose. This social movement is one of the signs of China's coming change; once the country gets on to its feet there is no telling how it may advance.

In the Life of General Sir Edward Hamley there is an account by him of how the instructions were given by Lord Wolseley to attack Arabi's forces. The final sentence is anything but pleasant reading:—

Addressing all generally, he said, "Go straight in on them—and then," he added, stamping his foot on the ground, "kill them all." He then briefly wished us success, and dismissed us, and we rode back to camp.

"Kill them all"—sounds more like an order to butcher than anything else. The truth about these campaigns comes out too late for public opinion to do anything, except express the hope that they will not be done again.

The return of the discontented and defeated Chinese soldiers to their respective provinces has been greatly dreaded by natives as well as foreigners. These fears have unhappily proved well founded; and in Chen tu, the capital of Sz chuen, serious outbreaks against missionaries seem to have occurred. Alarming reports have been published, but as yet the truth is unknown. Much mission property appears to have been destroyed, but it is hoped that the lives are safe. Meanwhile earnest prayer will be made for these missionaries, and that this spirit of hatred may be prevented from spreading.

A young woman writes to The Independent an earnest and dignified protest against modern fiction. Her words are worth studying by those who aspire to teach by means of fiction. The core of it all is here:—

I believe no good, earnest woman, however warm-hearted or passionate, naturally considers it a mark of inferiority that her love must be asked for, but takes that asking when it comes as a holy and beautiful gift from God, knowing that it is from God by the need which that one has for her. No "trick," no "tragedy of Nature," but a grand and beautiful law of God. I long for the old stories of beautiful manly love and beautiful womanly love, showing how God made us men and women, and saw that it was good.

An evening paper speaks in strong terms of the cruelty inflicted on horses on Bank Holidays. Waggons are heavily freighted with men, women, and babies, and drawn by one horse long distances, much to the delight of the passengers, but much to the pain of the horses. We congratulate ourselves on the thousands who, on Bank Holiday, poured out from city to country, and came back sober too, but we are apt to forget the cost to the animals employed. We must go on educating opinion on this point. Lord Shaftesbury's good example may have been somewhat lost sight of lately, but we must return to it. The dumb creatures are dependent for their joy on human care and kindness, and, just before holidays come round, City missionaries and others might suggest that too long journeys had better be avoided, and that the ponies and horses should have some of the good things that are going.

Medical treatment on total abstinence principles is abundantly justifying itself in all public institutions where it has been tried. Of Banstead Asylum we are told by the superintendent:—

It is worth noticing that the high rate of recovery in this asylum has been coincident with the abolition of beer as an article of ordinary diet. It is very certain that the patients have taken their food better since the beer was stopped; but the great lesson taught by the withdrawal of this mild intoxicant has been that people who have gone away are able to do without it.

The Free Church of Scotland has done well to enlarge the sphere of action of its committee for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice, so as to embrace this evil wherever it exists. As the excellent report of this committee says:—"The Free Church has now an agency, the term of whose existence will not properly be reached until State Regulation of Vice has disappeared from under the sun." One sleepless sentinel at least is on guard. The report contains a clear account of all that has been done during the year in Parliament and elsewhere on both sides of the question.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

One of the most interesting and hopeful developments of the modern movement in missions that combines healing with preaching is the work of the International Medical Missionary Society, New York, under the direction of Dr. G. D. Dowkontt. We should like to emphasise the international character of the work. The students are by no means confined to American subjects. At present there are in the institution two members of the China Inland Mission, who are qualifying for medical work in that great land. There are other European missionaries under training, and some now in the field have acquired their medical there also.

The conductors of the Society are now arranging for a large extension of the facilities for training in connection with it. A splendid building, surrounded by twenty acres of land, and situated on Long Island Sound, in New Rochelle, a New York suburb, has been secured with the view of utilising it for a Medical Missionary College for both sexes. The owners have parted with it on very low terms because of the purpose to which it is to be devoted, and the whole cost, with the necessary alterations and equipment, will be a hundred thousand dollars. It is expected that the place, from its delightful situation, will become a favourite summer resort for the holding of Christian conferences when the classes are not in session; in fact, a second Northfield. Eventually it is hoped that the institution, with these enlarged facilities, will grow into a Missionary University, embracing all kinds of missionary training. Any friends who are interested in such a noble endeavour and are disposed to help it on should communicate with Dr. Dowkontt, 118, East 45th-street, New York City.

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA AND THE EAST.—The twentieth annual report gives as frontispiece a portrait of Miss Mary Reed, who is in charge of the leper asylum at Chandag, Pithoragarh, N.W.P. The pages give a very readable account of the work, with communications from friends in various parts of India and China. Copies of the report may be had from J. F. Shaw & Co., 48, Paternoster-row, or the office of the Mission, 17, Greenhill-place, Edinburgh, Mr. Wellesley T. Bailey, secretary.

SICILY.—The sixteenth annual report of the evangelistic work of Signors Varnier and Scuderi states that the priests and Jesuits did all in their power to cast on the evangelists the blame for the disastrous earthquakes in November! Since then, Signor Scuderi has died. It seems that sons of both the missionaries have resolved to devote their lives to Christian work. Both have been well educated: young Varnier knows five modern languages, and has already done good work among the sailors in the harbour of Messina, mostly foreigners. Young Scuderi has also persevered in this holy purpose, for which they have qualified themselves. The committee have advised the young men to attach themselves to a church, Wesleyan or Waldensian, so as to work under superintendence. Signor Varnier makes an earnest appeal for financial help. The hon. sec. of the work, truly marvellous in some of its developments around Nizza and Messina, is Mr. Donald Matheson, 46, Harcourt-terrace, S.W.

Mission Halls.

In his recent speech before the Free Church Assembly, Rev. John Watson, while pleading for the spirituality of the Church, went out of his way to attack Mission Halls. Describing the ministerial weekly round, he said of the minister:—

He recollects an engagement to meet the workers at Bethesda—a mission hall on unsectarian principles, which a member of his own church supports at the cost of £200 a year, and where he preaches to a select audience of seventy children and thirty adult pensioners. The minister wishes for the moment that he had refused to have anything to do with this obsolete form of Christian enterprise, and persuaded the good man to have aided a poor church with his liberality; but the minister has not more moral courage than other people, and he was afraid of being called unevangelical instead of sensible.

The deplored lack of "moral courage" on the part of the minister is no reflection upon the devoted supporter of "Bethesda." What Mr. Watson regards as "an obsolete form of Christian enterprise," is in other minds a timely expression of endeavour in the name of Christ, needed when the Church is asleep, and certain of being manifested as the spirituality of the Church becomes intense. The Mission Hall and its service answers very much to the ideal of Dr. Dale in his sermon on the history of Congregationalism, published in The British Weekly of May 23. Speaking of the great change that has come over the denomination and its life, no less applicable to other sections of the Church, Dr. Dale said:—

THE CHANGE IN ARCHITECTURE.

A change, a very great change as we all know, has passed on our style of building chapels; we had not quite left off calling them by the better name of "Meeting Houses" fifty years ago; now for the most part we have come to call them churches. Our service is not a spectacle, and we need no long aisles for processions. What we want is a hall in which every person can see the speaker, and in which the speaker can make every person hear him without difficulty. Congregational chapels have been built during the last fifty years more or less beautiful, but they are almost worthless, many of them, for the purpose for which they were intended or erected.

CHANGE IN THE SERVICE.

If our buildings have changed, as I think they have, rather for the worse, I mean in their style of arrangement, what are we to say of our service? For some of the changes have neither been intelligent nor successful....Of later years it has become general to attempt to preach what are called thoughtful sermons, and thoughtful sermons may just as well be read as spoken. The sermon is too much like an essay, the appeal to emotion is less frequent, or if there is any appeal at all it is to softer and quieter kinds of emotion. People do not crowd into a chapel an hour or two before the service begins to listen to the preaching of that kind.

On all hands far-seeing men, although leaders in church work, have imitated the Mission Hall method, even where they have shunned the name. Mr. Watson's reflections are uncalled-for and ill-timed, and will remain so while multitudes of men and women remain outside the churches, and untouched by ecclesiastical machinery. Mr. Watson himself speaks of the virtual breakdown of all genuine Church plans, thus:—

One is afraid that many of our people in this material age are coming to regard the Church as a huge business concern, with its elaborate statistics, its annual balance-sheet, its endless inventions, its spirit of bustling prosperity. The world sees one congregation revive its dwindling attendance with an organ, another selling its site in a poor district and migrating to the suburbs, the amazing advertisements of sermons in the newspapers, the schemes for raising money from bazaars to anniversaries. They do not despise the Church for these expedients; far worse, they sympathise with her.

Mr. Watson's representation of the attendants at Mission Halls is far from accurate, as all who have any acquaintance with their working well know.

THE UNVEILING.—23.

"MY TWO WITNESSES."—III.

Before considering the persecution and death of the Witnesses, the following passage from Professor Milligan will be read with interest as confirmatory of the view already taken:

"In a manner conformable to the whole structure of the Apocalypse, the Seer starts from the thought of two historical persons. Examples of this kind in sufficient number, and of sufficient importance to justify his resting upon them as the material basis of his prophecy, were not wanting in the Old Testament, or in the history of our Lord. In the former we have Moses and Aaron, Caleb and Joshua, Elijah and Elisha, Zerubbabel and Joshua, and even the two pillars in the temple, Jachin and Boaz. In the latter we have our Lord sending forth both his Apostles and the Seventy two by two, together with such a promise as that contained in the words, 'If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven' (Matt. xviii. 19). Although however the starting point may be found in such allusions, the Seer certainly passes from the thought of any two individuals whatever to that of all who in any age or land fulfil the idea of witnessing present to his mind. The Two Witnesses are those believers who, amidst all the defection of others, remain faithful to their Lord. They are the true Divine seed within the outward Church, the little flock that listens only to the voice of the Good Shepherd, and is led astray neither by the world nor hireling shepherds. All the particulars of the description correspond to this view.

"The climax of the Apocalypse is peculiarly observable in the relation of the vision of the Two Witnesses to that of the Palm-bearing Company (viii.). The latter speaks only of deliverance from tribulation; the former introduces us to the thought of the action which tribulation brings with it. The faithful in Christ Jesus have advanced from being merely sufferers to being zealous agents in their Master's cause. Commission, work, reward, judgment, everything is higher than before."

In 1 Thess. iv. 15 the Church is regarded as one body of persons having one continuous life, so that the Apostle says, by inspiration of the Spirit, "We who are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord," though the Spirit knew that Paul and many succeeding generations would die before the Lord's coming. In like manner it is said of the Witnesses, "Whensoever (or, if at any time) they shall have finished their testimony, the wild beast that goes up out of the abyss shall make war with them, and conquer and kill them."

There has been a long line of witnesses all down the ages, whose testimony has been rejected and slain, and often they themselves have been literally slain. Just as the generations of the Church die, until her last generation is alive and remains unto the coming of the Lord; so the witnesses bear their testimony, suffer, and pass away, until the consummation, when at the first resurrection (as in ch. xx.) the souls of these blessed and holy ones (many of whom had waited under the altar till their brethren were slain as they had been) sit on thrones and reign with Christ a thousand years.

Tennyson has expressed a similar thought more than once. In "Locksley Hall" we read:

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers, and I linger on the shore,
And the individual withers, and the world is more and more.

And, again, in "The Song of the Brook":

For men may come and men may go,
But I go on for ever.

The wild beast out of the abyss (the bottomless pit) who makes war with them, is primarily self, and (as we saw in ch. ix.) the abyss is primarily the human heart, "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked: who can know it?" In proof of this we again revert to the apostle James, "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts, which war in your members?"

This has been the unquestionable source of all the persecution of the witnesses of God and of Christ in all ages. Seeing this, Charles Wesley prayed—

Awake, the woman's conquering Seed;
Awake, and bruise the serpent's head;
Tread down thy foes, with power control
The beast and devil in my soul.

And Jacob Behmen, and William Law, and John Newton, and many nameless saints, who understood the inward life, have laid their finger on Self, and identified that as the accursed thing, the essential Beast, the Achan, Balaam, Ahab, Jezebel, Judas, the Wilful King, the Pope, the many antichrists, the last and consummate Antichrist, who sits in the temple of God showing himself that he is God; the Lawless One, the son of perdition, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming.

There is here no questioning of the outward fulfilment of the prophecy in the past, the present, and the future; just as James does not question the wars and fightings, which he traces to their source—the lusts which war in the members.

The following is quoted from Dean Vaughan:

"The wild beast from the abyss is an anticipation here of chapter xvii. The spirit of persecution is the evil spirit in its aspect of brute violence. This 'wild beast from the abyss' makes war, in one form or another, upon the Witnesses, and gains a short-lived triumph. But not until they have finished their testimony: God suffers them not to be silenced till their work for Him is done. 'Because his hour was not yet come' (John vii. 30) is as much a reason for the failure of an aggression upon Christ's servant, as upon Christ Himself.

"The place of their fall, when it is permitted, is the street of that world which is called Sodom for its wickedness; Egypt, as the scene of Israel's bondage; and Jerusalem, for its murder of the Lord. Yes, the world is the same in all ages; the mode and form of its persecutions may vary; but the root of all its persecutions, hatred of the condemning holiness of Christ, is invariable and constant.

"And there is a triumph over the fall of Christ's witnesses. The world rejoices over them, as one after another they pass away from the scene of their testimony: for deeply had the sting of their words and the sting of their deeds, the reproof of their Gospel and the reproof of their example, entered into the souls of their despisers and their adversaries. It had been a torture to them, though they carried it well before one another. There was a voice in them which echoed its voice, the voice of a convicting conscience, and the voice of an anticipated judgment. For three days and a-half, the half of the seven, for a period short and incomplete, the triumph of the world...is suffered to continue: men send gifts one to another, as in a day of feasting and of joy over glad tidings. Herod and Pilate, before at enmity, are made friends together, in their time of triumph: then the scene changes."

Some from among the peoples and kindreds and tongues and nations—"they that dwell upon the earth, the godless world" (Alford)—see their dead body three days and a half, and suffer not their dead body (observe the singular number) to be laid in a tomb. As long as there was life in the testimony, they persecuted it; but when it died they would not allow it to be buried out of sight. The tribes and nations did not kill it. No testimony was ever killed by persecution. It was Self, the wild beast from the abyss within, that overcame and conquered and killed it. Christianity in the catacombs was living and vigorous. When Christians were wrapped in inflammable garments, and hung in trees, and burned, they illuminated those who received their witness, but lit lurid fires of hatred and malice in those who rejected it. They tormented those whose dwelling was on earth and not in heaven. But when Constantine smiled upon Christianity the wild beast Self rose up in the hearts of its professors, and made war, and conquered and killed the testimony, and it became not a dead body buried out of sight, but the religion of the empire. It has been always so. "When Ephraim was a child then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt...but when he offended in Baal he died."

The testimony of Christ's Two Witnesses clothed in sackcloth is never popular. Lutheranism is a State religion, but Luther would not know Lutheranism. And the same may be said of the carcase of many another form of testimony which was once vital with the life of God.

Protestantism and Puritanism, and other forms of evangelical testimony, were each the result of a time when the Lord answered the cry of his people: "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?" As far as God is exalted above all else, as far as they are "My Witnesses," content to be nothing, to be outside the camp, the offscouring of all things for Jesus' sake, so far they are a living power, delivering souls out of the power of darkness into the Kingdom of God's dear Son. But just so far as they offend in Baal they die. When other lords have dominion over them, and man is exalted, the heavenly life dies out, and the world, whom they once tormented, will not bury them out of sight, but invite them to their feasts, recognise them in "society," and use the dead form of religious testimony to sanction their festivities.

It was conveyed to John in his vision that after $3\frac{1}{2}$ days the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet and great fear fell upon those who saw them and they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, "Come up hither." And they ascended up to heaven in the cloud, and their enemies beheld them.

The whole period of this dispensation is symbolised as 42 months with relation to Satan and the Wild-beast, as 1260 days with reference to the witnesses and the sun-clothed Woman. Therefore the time during which the witnesses lie dead is here also in days. The whole period of testimony is the 1260 days; but as in the older dispensation, Moses and Aaron, Caleb and Joshua, Jonathan and his armour-bearer, David and Jonathan, Elijah and Elisha, succeeded their predecessors, so also in the New, the chain of testimony symbolised as "My Two Witnesses" has grown link by link, one chain but many links, each link removed to heaven when its work is done, until the end shall come. Then, as in 1 Thess. iv. the last generation, alive and remaining, completes the Church, so the last witnesses will complete the chain of testimony; for the Church of Christ, and "My Two Witnesses," are one.

The 3½ is, as has been previously said, a broken number. God in his grace did not by Elijah withhold the rain for the complete cycle of seven years but only for 3½; so here, the Witnesses are vindicated after the abbreviated period; their humiliation is not permitted to extend to the full term of seven. "For the elect's sake the days are shortened." M.

The Prayer for the Times.

(A PENTECOSTAL MEDITATION.)

By Rev. WILLIAM CROSBIE, M.A., LL.B.

There are sermons for the times, and books for the times, and men for the times—"men having understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do"—and there are prayers for the times; and here is certainly one of those prayers: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years" (Habakkuk iii. 2). It is emphatically the prayer for the times. And everywhere, and in all the churches, there are those who are offering it; there are those the burden of whose cry is: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years." The number of these praying ones is great, and is rapidly multiplying. The present writer knows of thousands and tens of thousands; and they are joined together in holy bonds, with means of inter-communication, and registration of membership, and stated seasons for prayer, and a common petition which they all breathe—the petition of the words, "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years." The whole earth is being girdled with this prayer; so marvellously have these prayer-unions spread in these recent years. One prayer-union has a membership of more than a hundred thousand; and the members are scattered all over England, and the Continent, and America, and the mission-fields. Another prayer-union, called "The Saturday Night Round-the-World Pentecostal Prayer Union," has a membership of many thousands. Other prayer-unions there are, having the same object. These unions are surely significant spiritual phenomena. Are they not the most significant spiritual phenomena of these times? the best and most hopeful signs of the times? prophecies and auguries of coming blessing? Are they not providing the condition for a new and mightier manifestation of the Holy Ghost in the churches and in the world? God is in these unions, and in the longings and aspirations of their members, and will fulfil the hopes He has raised, and answer the prayers He has inspired.

Every individual church should be a prayer-union. That is the ideal. But how far individual churches are from realising the ideal! And yet, until they are prayer-unions they will not be much of anything, but will drag on a poor feeble existence, encompassed with difficulties.

The little Church of Pentecost in "the upper room" was a prayer-union. First, a prayer-union—just a prayer-union—a company of ordinary men and women, waiting upon God, praying a very simple but a very great prayer: "Lord, fill us with the Holy Ghost." And what did that little church become? What did those ordinary men and women become? Very extra-ordinary, and wanting nothing for their stupendous task—the most stupendous task mortals ever had to undertake. They became the teachers of the ages in all the highest and deepest knowledge, at whose feet the most eminent thinkers and scholars sit; and they became the greatest saints, and the greatest evangelists and missionaries; and for their evangelistic and missionary work they lacked nothing, either of spiritual qualification or of temporal means.

Each individual church a prayer-union first, and then everything—no church will accomplish much until there is realisation of that. Nor will missionary societies accomplish much until there is realisation of that. God's order is there. Pentecost teaches the lesson, and enforces it. And how the lesson is enforced by our many failures in church-work and mission-work, and by the increase of difficulties, and the slow pace at which Christianity is spreading in the world!

Each individual church a prayer-union like the prayer-union in the "upper room"! What things would happen! What centres of blessing churches would become! What mighty, saving, regenerating forces in the communities in the midst of which they are placed! How the old promise would be fulfilled: "I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing" (Ezek. xxxiv. 26).

For prayer-unions, whether they be churches in their times of special prayer; or prayer-unions of another sort, with wider ranges—denominational, or inter-denominational—this is the prayer: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years."

Romanists are praying for the conversion of England, for the return of England to the bosom of the Romish Church. But that is not the prayer for the times. We refuse to believe in the answer, regarding it as impossible. The clergy of the Church of England, at the instance of the Archbishop of Canterbury, have been praying, during the recent season commemorative of Pentecost, for the reunion of Christendom. How desirable the reunion of Christendom is! But neither is that the prayer for the times. The only way to bring about true re-union is to pray the inspired prayer: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years." The true re-union of Christendom will not be ecclesiastical, but spiritual, a re-union of life in Christ, and the outcome of genuine spiritual revival—the creation of the Holy Ghost. And here is the method of it and the example: "When they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost . . . and the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul" (Acts iv. 31, 32).

Missionary societies, also, are suggesting prayers and specifying subjects of prayer—things to be prayed for—means to carry on God's work. But, somehow, these means do not come in the measure required. There is straitness still, and embarrassment still. Appeals are multiplied, but deficiencies are not made up; difficulties do not disappear. It would be otherwise if the main prayer were changed; if there were return to God's plan, and to apostolic example; if there were concentration of thought and dependence upon the Holy Ghost; if there were substitution of the petition: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years." The answer to that petition involves and includes everything; and here is the authority and the proof: "When they had prayed...they were all filled with the Holy Ghost...Neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common...Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of lands, or houses, sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the Apostles' feet." (Acts iv. 31, 32, 34, 35.)

The case, then, for this prayer is made out, argued on Scriptural principles and precedents. It has been conclusively shown that it is the prayer for the times; that the one effectual remedy is genuine spiritual revival—God's revival, not man's—God's life filling the churches, and all their missionary and aggressive agencies. There are some revivalisms that do far more harm than good. It is God's revivalism that is wanted; "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." "O Lord, revive thy work."

Oh, the necessity for the prayer! Look at the state of the churches, and at the state of the world; and consider the vast opportunities; and let each one examine his own heart and life, and say, if there is any prayer so appropriate to the times as the prayer of the Hebrew prophet:—say, if the supreme want is not a larger measure of the life of God?

The answer to the prayer waits for the perfecting of the human condition. All the tithes are not yet in the store-house; but they are being brought in. The prayer is rising from thousands of hearts: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years." And multitudes more will join the covenant of prayer, swelling the volume that is perpetually ascending to heaven; and the fulness of time will come—the proper and appointed hour. God will not disappoint his people, nor turn away the prayer He Himself has taught, nor "deny Himself." And this wonderful nineteenth century may be closed and crowned with a revival that shall be the greatest wonder of the century, and that shall be the beginning and the inauguration of a new era of missions and of Gospel testimony, and the preparation for the Lord's return. "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. xxiv. 14).

Nottingham.

Mr. Moody and London.

Dear Sir,—I have just received from Mr. Moody an answer to the invitation which I was requested to send him from a meeting in my house, that he would pay London his promised visit, which was postponed in 1893.

He writes that he has not yet had time to think; that he is engaged up to January next, but he will pray over it, and "if the cloud leads that way I will follow."

As to particulars, he says the questions submitted to him "will take care of themselves, and if God is in the movement all we need do is to go forward."

I think many of your readers will like to have this information.—Yours very truly,

T. A. Denny.

GIRLS' LETTER GUILD.—Miss Isabel M. M. Kenward, general secretary, 280, Hagley-road, Birmingham, writes:—"We greatly need the help of lady correspondents for this guild. We have now been at work nearly six years, and the number of working girls who are members—in our two centres of work, Birmingham and Leeds—is about five thousand. But we have at present over a hundred girls who have waited months to join and cannot do so for lack of ladies to write to them. Surely there must be many ladies unable to undertake active work who could yet write a monthly letter to a factory girl."

THE WAY OF PREPARATION.

By Rev. ANDREW MURRAY.*

In his circular calling this convention, Mr. Paynter said that the great object of the gathering is that we may receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, which God delights to give, and which Jesus has promised to them that believe in Him. Hence we are here to speak of that great gift which God has bestowed upon us, and to ask if we have received it as God desires to bestow it? And if not, to ask, what is it that hinders?

The words from which I wish to speak are the well-known words of Acts ii. 4, "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost"; and those equally familiar words in Eph. v. 18, "Be filled with the Spirit." The one text is a narrative of what actually happened; the other is a command; it tells us that we are to be "filled with the Spirit." Lest any doubt be in our mind about this being an actual command, let me point out how it is linked with another command, "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit." Now, there is not one here who, if I ask, "Do you try to obey the first command?" will not reply, "Of course, as a Christian I obey that." Very well; the other is, "Be filled with the Spirit." Are you equally obeying that? Is that the life you are living? If not, why not? Then comes the question, Are you willing to take up that command, and say, "By God's help I am going to obey; God helping me, I will give myself no rest till I obey that command, and am filled with the Holy Spirit"? I begin with this personal question: here is the command, are you going to obey? God's message to every believer in this tent is, "My child, I want you to be filled with my Spirit." Can you reply, "My Father, I am ready; I yield myself to obey; fill me"? This does not mean high excitement; it does not mean absolute perfection, or a state in which there is no growth. It is simply having my whole nature yielded to his power. When the whole soul is yielded to the Holy Spirit, God Himself will fill it.

The question is, What is keeping us from being filled with the Spirit? This is a matter of the first importance; and if we try to find an answer it may be God will use it to search us and enable us to look into our heart, and find if we are in a position in which God can fill us. Now even as we go, step by step, some may say, "Thank God, I am ready for that"; and yet these very souls may be kept back by ignorance, prejudice, unbelief, or WRONG THOUGHTS AS TO WHAT THE BLESSING IS.

I do not think we can get a better answer to this question than by looking at the way Christ prepared his disciples for Pentecost. You know that in a heathen country a missionary will form a Baptism class, and keep some of the native converts a year or more in it in order to train, teach, and test them. So Jesus had his disciples three years in his Baptismal class; for they all had to go through the time of training and preparation. Pentecost was not a trick of magic, or an arbitrary act, the disciples were carefully prepared for it.

I. Wherein did the preparation of these disciples consist? First, they were men who had forsaken all to follow Jesus. You know how the Lord Jesus said to one, "Forsake your nets," and to another, "Leave that place for the receipt of custom, and come and follow Me." And they obeyed. They could say, "Lord, we have forsaken all and followed Thee." They gave up home, friends, and even their good name, for men laughed at and despised them. They forsook all; they identified themselves with Him; they gave themselves up to do his bidding; and there is the first step on the way to the baptism of the Holy Spirit. If we would have the fulness of the Spirit we must forsake all and follow Christ. I am not speaking now of forsaking sin—that, of course, is forsaken at conversion; but this is something deeper still. Many seem to receive Jesus as someone who can save and help them, while they virtually continue their own master, speaking what they like, doing what they like with time, property, and possessions. They have never dreamt of saying, "Jesus, we have forsaken all and followed Thee." And yet this command comes from one who has such infinite riches and glory that He deserves to be obeyed; and the Holy Spirit is of such an infinite Divine gift that unless we give up everything we cannot be filled with Him.

I was at Johannesburg last year at a convention something of this kind, and we had an afternoon gathering when believers were asked to testify. One poor woman rose, and told how six months before she received such a wonderful blessing of God's Spirit. A certain minister had been holding meetings in her neighbourhood, and at one of these he asked all who were ready to give themselves up entirely to Jesus to give some token, reminding them that God might want some to go to China, others to give up wife and children. As he asked, "Are you willing for this?" the woman said, "I did want to say 'Yes, Lord,' but I could not. At last I rose, and said, 'Yes, Lord, I give up everything.' But even then I felt I could not give up husband and children. I went home, but that night I could not sleep for sighing and struggling and crying to God to make me yield. Past midnight I said, 'Yes, Lord, for Thee I give up everything.'" Then the power of the Holy Spirit flooded into her heart; and she testified, and her minister testified for her, that she walked in the power of the Spirit, and in the joy of Christ. Are you willing to yield, to forsake all, to give up all? "Oh, Christ, to be filled with the Holy Spirit I will give up anything and everything." Can we say this? Many have never seen the necessity for this giving up. But Jesus said, "If anyone come to Me, and hate not father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Is not this the reason of your feeble and flickering life, that the Holy Spirit does not fill your being? You have never forsaken all to follow Jesus.

II. A second thought. Not only had the disciples forsaken all, but personally they were intensely attached to Him. Jesus said, "If ye love Me keep my commandments, and I will pray the Father and He will give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth." They did love Him intensely; do we? They had been with Him; they had seen Him crucified; they knew what it was to be separated from Him—no hope, no joy, no comfort. In these dark days after the cross,

THE ONE THING THEY SOUGHT WAS JESUS.

So we trust Christ, and his work on Calvary, and what He is doing for us, but many have not reached the thought that religion consists of intense love, and personal affection, clinging to Jesus, who should be to us Friend, Counsellor, Guide, Leader, Master, our All in All. If you ask what "Keswick teaching" is, that is one strong element in it. Some two or three years ago, a young lady came to South Africa, and spoke so much of the blessing she had received at Keswick, that we asked what difference it had made. She told us she had been brought up in a godly home, and had much to be thankful for, but now all was so marvellously changed. We asked, What is there in the teaching that has done this? "I think," she said, "it is just having personal friendship with Jesus." Let me say, then, it is not enough to forsake all. Even for a false religion multitudes have given up all—some for the sake of their church or of their fellow-men; but have we forsaken all for Jesus, letting Him come into the life and take possession of our heart? Ask God to search your life and being. Is your life one of tender personal attachment to Jesus? Your attainment is not perfect; but is this your object? Is this what you long for above everything, that Jesus Christ may have you for ever and always?

III. But, moreover, the disciples were men who were led to despair of themselves. At the beginning of his instruction they had given up all, but only at the end, after all his teaching, did they give up themselves, for that is a much harder thing to do. They had given up for Him home, friends, and reputation; but

AT LAST THEY GAVE UP THEMSELVES.

They had not done that before. See their controversies as to who should be prime minister; or, again, asking if they may sit at his right hand. Yes, they had forsaken all; they did love Him, but they had not given up self wholly. Christ had taught them much, had trained them, and revealed what the sin of pride is, and what the glory of humility. Thus He led them on until, when He died on the cross, they died too. Think of Peter, the representative disciple, denying his Lord, and going out and weeping bitterly. Do you think that in all the sorrow of these days between the cross and the resurrection the bitterest thought of all to Peter was not how he had treated, how he had denied his Lord? He learned to be ashamed of himself. How self-confident he had been! "I will die with Thee"; but Christ Jesus took him with Him into death and the grave; and dying with Christ he learned he was no good at all. So some possibly say, "I have given up my position, and friends, and reputation for Christ, but I have not yet received the blessing." Have you learned how much self-will, self-trust there is in you? Have you learned to correct your judgment of other people by the humility and gentleness of Jesus? Have you abandoned all self-confidence? How often you work for Him, you praise Him, you try to do good; but it is your own work, not his. You work and pray for his help. You do the work and He is to bless it. No, no, He must bring you down to the place of death, and teach you what you are. Do you know what the death of Jesus means? It is this, "Father, here is my life, so precious to me. I have yielded all to Thee in life, now I yield it in death." Remember how He went into the grave, saying, "Father, into thy hand I commend my spirit." He went into the thick darkness trusting in his Father, and you know what happened. Because He thus went into the grave God raised Him in new life, new glory, new power, such as never before. As the Son of Man, God raised him from the grave to glory.

DEATH WAS THE SECRET OF RESURRECTION.

So, believer, if you want to be filled with the risen life in glory, to be filled with the Spirit, you must begin by dying to self. The disciples were made utterly to despair of self. They had lost all and were ready to receive all from God.

IV. Then the disciples were men who had accepted the promise of God in faith. On his last night Jesus spake again and again about the promise of the Father and the gift of the Holy Ghost; and at the last He said, "Ye shall receive power from on high," "Ye shall be baptised with the Holy Ghost and with fire, not many days hence." They heard; and they believed. If you ask if they understand what it all meant, they can tell you very little. They knew even less than we do. They had no conception of its full meaning, but they knew that Jesus when on earth did wonderful things for them, and now that He had gone up to glory would He not do things infinitely more glorious? So we want to accept the promise in faith, and say, If the promise of the fulness of the Holy Ghost is for me, I accept it from the hand of Jesus. I may not understand it fully; but I do see that the promise is for me, and I claim it. Are you ready in faith to prove the promise; to wait the loving word of Jesus, saying, "Lord, I trust Thee"? There are believers who are struggling to reach the blessing. They have given up all so far as they know; they do love Jesus; they despair of self; but somehow they do not learn to say, "He who hath promised will do it." Let me say, when you get a promise from God, it is worth just as much as the fulfilment. If there is anything in the way, bring it to Him, that He may cast it down and break it up, and He will do it. He will cleanse the vessel and purge out the evil. Trust the promise, and say,

"THY PROMISES ARE ALL FULFILLED FOR ME."

V. Then the last step is this: The disciples, on the strength of the promise, waited in united prayer. Is not that what we are here for? They waited and prayed. They expected God to do something, whatever it might be. Oh, that God would bring us all to such a point! I find myself and others ready to give up, ready to receive; wanting to claim God's promise, but it eludes our grasp. Why? Because we do not wait for God to bestow. Dear soul, look to God; plead his promises; expect Him to do it, and He will. It is not enough to believe. Sometimes we mistake the faith for the thing expected; the grasp for the thing grasped. Yes, believe, but learn also to wait, to look to Him till He gives the blessed promise. The command is, "Be filled with the Spirit," and, as has been well said, "All God's commands are enablings." Oh, Lord Jesus, speak thy word of command to everyone of us!

* Notes of an address delivered at Guildford Convention.

THE GUILDFORD CONVENTION.

The June gatherings in the old county town of Surrey have now become an established fact, and are eagerly anticipated by many in the south of England, who find it a far cry to Keswick. Looking back on the few years since a summer convention for the deepening of spiritual life was first called at Guildford, one cannot fail to observe the manifest growth in the gatherings, and in the spirit of earnest expectancy in which many of the friends come up to the feast. The rector of Stoke-on-Guildford, Rev. F. Paynter, Convener and Chairman of the Conference, made special reference last week to the favourable weather granted, the large gatherings, the numbers of country friends and somewhat lonely labourers, who had come up from remote parts to enjoy Christian fellowship and gain refreshment and stimulus for their own spiritual life, returning to their spheres to become a blessing to many. A glance over the visitors' book—in the publication tent—revealed that friends were present from many parts of the south; from villages and corners of Sussex, Hants, Surrey, Wilts, and Dorset, of which the very names are scarcely known. Thus the blessing enjoyed at Guildford spreads and has its reflex influence in

MANY A NEEDY PARISH AND HAMLET,

The Convention lasted practically the whole week. On Sunday special sermons were given in Christ Church and St. Saviour's, while Rev. Andrew Murray preached in the Congregational Chapel. Evangelistic services were also held in the tent by Mr. George Clarke, who unhappily had to go home afterwards ill. On Monday, various meetings were held; but on Tuesday commenced the full Convention round—an early prayer-meeting (7 to 8 a.m.), a missionary prayer-meeting, (9 to 9.20), a Bible reading (9.45 to 11), and two general Conference meetings, 11.30 a.m. to 1 p.m., and 7 to 8.45 p.m. In the afternoons, meetings were held by Mrs. Bannister and Miss Nugent for ladies only—addressed with great power and fervour once or twice by Mrs. Amanda Smith, whose exposition of the power of the words "By faith," recurring so constantly in Heb. xi., will not readily be forgotten by some who heard it. At the same time, meetings for men only were held in Christ Church by Rev. J. J. Luce, A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, W. S. Standen, and other friends.

The Conference speakers included Revs. S. A. Selwyn, E. H. Hopkins, E. W. Moore, A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, J. J. Luce, F. B. Meyer, and Andrew Murray, who spoke with great intensity and singular simplicity each evening from Tuesday to Friday. Few who listened to his exposition of the Way of Preparation for the filling of the Holy Spirit (given on another page), will readily lose the impression produced by his quaint but telling evolution of ideas. On this occasion he dealt with the conditions, the "Baptismal Class," as he termed it, but on a subsequent evening, recurring to the subject, he dealt in a very striking way with the change produced by Pentecost in the disciples of Jesus. His terse definition of Keswick teaching as simply the cultivation of "personal attachment to Jesus," was one of those happy expressions which lay hold of the mind and cling to the memory.

We do not feel it necessary to give the various addresses; it may be more useful to indicate a few of the salient points. Each evening, for example, Mr. Murray's address was followed by a brief after-meeting talk, intended to lead hearers to definite and purposeful surrender and acceptance. Thus, on Tuesday evening, Rev. S. A. Selwyn addressed himself to those with whom, possibly, God had a controversy by reason of some failure in life and walk, and these he sought to bring to the point of saying, definitely, "Lord, I yield," "Lord, I claim," "Lord, I thank Thee for it."

On Wednesday evening this after-meeting address was given by Rev. E. W. Moore, who spoke of Caleb, who "followed the Lord fully," showing that this meant unreserved and unremitting obedience.

On Thursday evening Rev. Evan H. Hopkins began the proceedings with a thoughtful expository address on the Holy Spirit and his work; and concluded the evening (after Mr. Murray's address on "The Changed Life"), with a clear exposition of what waiting on the Lord is—drawing near, lying low, and willingness to yield and bid Him enter not merely as a passing guest, but as Proprietor and Lord, to fill, possess, sanctify, and transform the heart and life. The closing meeting was of a popular and evangelistic character, being, as usual at Guildford, held an hour later than on the preceding evenings, in order to afford the young men and women of the town an opportunity of being present. Thanks to the co-operation of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., large numbers assembled, and the tent was crowded out. Earnest addresses were given by Revs. W. Darlow Sarjeant and C. G. Moore.

On Wednesday morning Rev. J. J. Luce gave a thoughtful exposition of the teaching of the feasts of Israel. Rev. W. S. Standen followed on somewhat similar lines.

The Thursday morning addresses were given by Rev. E. W. Moore and E. H. Hopkins; while on Friday morning the speakers were Revs. E. H. Hopkins and F. B. Meyer. The former spoke on John xvi. 13, "Howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself. . . . He will show you things to come; He shall glorify Me." The speaker grouped his thoughts round the ideas—the Guide (personal, Divine, and indwelling), the Guidance (by the Word and by Providence), and the Guided (rational, intelligent, and responsible beings).

Rev. F. B. Meyer, who followed, began with 2 Tim. i. 12 and 14, as presenting a remarkable contrast, a parallelism, in the use of the word "guard." In the first verse and in the second we are on guard for God. We commit ourselves to God, and He commits his holy Gospel to our keeping. From this point Mr. Meyer passed to deal with the history of the sacred vessels of the temple and tabernacle of old; pausing to maintain that in a spiritual sense each vessel seems to be committed to some one or other section of the outward Church of Christ—to one the laver, to another the incense table, to another the golden candlestick. Thus the Methodists, Baptists, Church of England, Presbyterians, and all the rest have their own special charge and deposit. Then, if this be so, the injunction is, "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord," and there is peculiar applicability and urgency in the call going forth from these conventions to deeper and fuller consecration, unreserved surrender to God, and holiness of life through the power of the Holy Spirit.

GOD IS ON GUARD FOR US,

THE CONSECRATION MEETING

on Friday afternoon was held by Mr. Eugene Stock, who indicated clearly and emphatically that the question before each on that day was, "Who then is willing to give himself to the Lord?" After prayer by Rev. A. R. Blacket, an address on consecration as impelled by the constraining love of Christ was given by Rev. Andrew Murray. A season of open prayer followed, in which many took ready part, sometimes in a sentence or so, but all with fervour and directness, as when one simply prayed, "Lord, I thank Thee for a broken will."

Mr. Millard, who followed, spoke of consecration as in one respect exactly the opposite of salvation. In salvation, God gives and I accept; but in consecration, I give and God accepts. The main idea, which he sought to enforce, was that too many are consecrated to the work, whereas they ought to be consecrated to God. But will God accept? Most certainly He will, as Eph. i. 6 assures us.

The proceedings closed with a solemn consecration hymn, during the singing of which all were asked to make a fresh and solemn dedication of themselves to God for whatever service He willed.

During the week large open-air meetings were held by Mr. J. McAuliffe in the Market Place; while children's services were held by Mr. H. Hutchinson. A special meeting for young men was held on Thursday evening in the Congregational Hall, addressed by Revs. A. R. Blacket and W. W. Cassels. A missionary meeting was conducted on Saturday by Mr. Eugene Stock, when many missionaries spoke. The Conference closed with a prayer-meeting for the speedy coming of the Lord; and on Monday a praise meeting was held for blesings granted during the Convention.

THE MIDLAND BIBLE CARRIAGE, which has been working in and around Nottingham for the last nine months, is now at Newark. The object of the workers is to reach the masses with sound Gospel books, and to preach the Gospel. Not a few cases of professed conversion have been met with. The sympathy and prayers of Christians are asked. The evangelist is Mr. Chas. Taylor, 121, Welford-road, Nottingham.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER.—2.

By AN OLD SOLDIER.

He feedeth the ravens; shall He not much more fee you?

We had accustomed our children always to expec a good Sunday dinner, and a special suit of Sunda clothes, from a conviction of that Scripture truth "Train up a child in the way he should go, an when he is old he will not depart from it" (Prov xxii. 6.), and that good habits implanted in childhoo become a second nature in after years, and that th man or woman who observes these early lessons wi not go far astray in the more important matters o life.

So it happened that our little family troop, whos lucubrations in deciphering accidental forms in th glowing embers in the grate had been abruptly in terrupted by their dismissal to bed by their mothe that my wife on re-entering to the room, observed in a despondent tone, "Poor dears! they littl dream that, for the first time in their lives, they wi have no Sunday dinner to-morrow." "Why not? I inquired. "Just because we have not a penny i the world to get it for them," replied she, with wha I thought a touch of sarcasm in her tone. Wha wonder!

There is in the Christian's life at times a spiritua apathy that needs arousing—a sense of depressio within causing such unfaithful views of God's un changing character of love and truth as caused on of his most eminent servants of old to cry out i agonising distress, "Has God forgotten to b gracious? Is his mercy clean gone for ever?"

Just so. In my own experience I have found thi state dependent on the neglect of the means o grace—daily prayer, or the study of God's Word, o both. Go to your knees, open your Bible, and it i gone. Just so, too, I had been too solicitous o worldly things, seeking help from the arm of flesh rather than of God. A moment's reflection con vinced me of my error, and it was almost with start my wife's observation aroused me from m spiritual indolence, and I replied, with a bright hop in God's goodness and mercy, "It is not Sunda yet, late as it is. The Lord will surely provide ou little ones' dinner to-morrow. Only believe."

It was 10 o'clock, and my wife replied to my las encouraging observation by an incredulous look Half an hour later there was a knock at the door "Does Mr. C—— live here?" inquired a butcher boy, bearing a tray of meat. "Yes, my lad." "I have brought you this neck of mutton, and am t tell you it is paid for." "Who sent it?" "Don' know, sir. I was only to say it was paid for. "Bless the Lord," I ejaculated, "whoever sent it. An now, wife, be assured the Lord will send us some thing else to eat with the mutton, as he sent Israel mea of old to eat with their bread." It might have bee about a half hour later that there came another knoc at the door. A lad this time was the bearer of large horse-pail quite full of vegetables of the season sent by Mr. D——, the town clerk, with his com pliments, and that if I did not want them to mak any use I pleased of them. Who told these kin people to send me these good things just at thi moment? for no one ever suspected my necessitou condition. The sender of the meat I never dis covered. Meeting my friend the town clerk som time afterwards, I asked him why he sent me thos vegetables on that particular occasion. "I don' know, indeed; but I had been all that afternoo 'like a fish out of water.'" Among other futil things he did he had dug up all those vegetables, t the great dismay of his household, not having th least want of any of them. As he was about t leave the garden in disgust my name came vividl to his mind. "Yes," said he, "Mr. C—— has family, and he will know what to do with them. I wi send them to him." So after dark he sent them t me not to attract notice.

I then related to him the circumstances whic had involuntarily called forth his energy, and how felt sure the good Spirit of the Lord had influence him to provide us with the Sunday dinner. "And, said Mr. D——, "I feel now of the same opinion a yourself, and that I was under supernatura influence on that occasion to do as I have related But we do know, Mr. C ——, the truth of the Scrip ture, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but m words shall not fail—only believe.'"

A TEMPERANCE HALL has been erected in Bed ford by Mrs. Hawkins as a memorial of her hus band, who was five times mayor of that town.

A BRAVE LADY.

In one of the most beautiful of the English cathedral cities there lived, nine years ago, a Christian lady named Wortley. She had been a widow for some years, and although childless, still kept up an establishment of considerable size, for the sake, as she often said, of a larger influence among her neighbours, and also to give training and employment to many who might otherwise be untaught and unemployed. Mrs. Wortley was a sincere and earnest Christian; like her Master, she spent her time in doing good, and was known far beyond her own circle for her consistent piety and wide benevolence.

One day she awoke to the fact that certain symptoms of ill-health were increasing, and that such pain as she had begun to suffer must result from a serious cause. She sought medical aid, and this was the verdict:—"You are suffering from a malignant disease. It is necessary that a severe and dangerous operation be performed, as this is your only hope of relief." The doctor paused. "You have more to tell me, doctor," said his patient. "Yes," said he, "there is more. It is probable that you may not survive the operation—it may be unsuccessful, or you may sink under it. To no one but you, my dear madam, would I speak so plainly. But you do not fear, and you have asked for all the truth."

It was deemed advisable that the patient should be conveyed to one of the large London hospitals, and there—in a private apartment, and with a highly-skilled nurse at her service—she was to be prepared for the operation. She bore everything so calmly and patiently—her fits of agonising pain, and the thought of the surgeon's knife—and was so undisturbed by her strange surroundings and the near thought of death, that during the week before the final act of pain, she was called by doctors and nurses alike "The brave lady." After she had been an hour in her new quarters she called her nurse to a seat beside herself, and entering into conversation with her, found she was not a Christian, but one who despised all belief. "In our profession there is not much room for faith," said the nurse, "and very few doctors are Christians, here."

I do not know what the brave lady replied to this; but I know that from that moment she stedfastly refused to think of herself, and was filled with one holy desire—that of winning the soul of this stranger to the Saviour. A friend one day called at the hospital, to see her. "You must trouble about no one but yourself now," she said; "in a day or two you have to meet a severe trial. You will have to prepare, perhaps, for a call home." "Oh," said the invalid; "do you think I have left preparation for that blessed call till now? Ah, no; that was settled years ago. I am at leisure to think of another who is all unprepared for death, now."

Many times in the course of the twenty-four hours, this brave lady fainted with weakness and pain; many times when her nurse, Miss Field, or Sister Frances as she was called, thought she was wrapped in dreams of the future, or that she was very bravely and silently enduring her sufferings, she was beseeching God to spare her just long enough to win her nurse for Him. "Not," she would tell herself, "that my Father cannot do this without me, but simply because I yearn over this girl as if she were my own, and I never had one of my own to give Him." "Dear nurse," she said on that first day, "please read me the third chapter of St. John's Gospel; I never let a day pass, if I can help it, without reading that portion of God's Word." "I wonder why," said the nurse. "Is it so interesting?" "Yes," said Mrs. Wortley, "it is the Christian's Magna Charta." Nurse Frances read it, and this led to questions and explanations, and then the suffering patient prayed briefly for her nurse, and with such wise words that, instead of being offended as she had sometimes been with any who dropped a word on religion to her, she pressed her new friend's hand in silence, and brushed away her tears lest they should be seen. "Others have talked at me of religion," she said; "you have gently and simply pointed me to Christ. I shall not forget."

On the eve of the eventful day that was to decide her earthly fate the brave lady spoke once again to her nurse. "To-morrow eve may find me gone hence," she said, "and before I go, I want you to tell me just how it is with you, dear." "Ah, you know how it is!" cried Nurse Frances; "you know that my hard heart is broken; that my foolish reason is mastered; and that my rebellious soul is conquered! You know—who should know but my truest friend?—that, sinful as I have been, Christ will not turn from his repentant child!"

Her prayers were answered, her faith rewarded! Now, indeed, the ordeal of to-morrow was but trifling, since she had been permitted to do this work for God before He called her home! Truly, a "brave lady"! "Did you not think of the sufferings you were to endure, and the terrible death you might die?" asked a friend. "No," said the brave lady—this was some time afterwards. "I thought only of Christ and this girl's immortal soul; in this light, suffering and death have no power to alarm."

I need tell nothing of the time spent under the surgeon's knife by this resigned patient; but when the operation was over, the principal surgeon said to the nurse, "She will recover! I believe she has so detached her thoughts from herself, that her nerves have suffered no strain; her zeal for others has sustained her vitality." The next day the patient awoke to consciousness. "Nurse, dear," she said, "I have had a beautiful dream; I dreamed I had passed through the operation, and that I was not to die after all! But you look amused."

"I am not amused," said Nurse Frances. "I am angry with you." She smiled. "Don't you know you must keep very quiet, dear noble lady? For it is all over, and you will not die!" The lips of the brave lady moved in prayer—she closed her eyes, and thanked God for this added mercy—she was spared to work a little longer for Him. What a privilege!

For two months she stayed in her beautiful room at the hospital, and when she left, Nurse Frances left with her—she still needed care, and these two had grown to love one another with the love of a mother and daughter. Finally, Nurse Frances became "my dear daughter by adoption," as her new mother called her. She was much alone in the world, and the beautiful home, with its many Christian activities, and its atmosphere of holy love, was "like heaven," as she said, to the overworked nurse. "Frances, dear," said Mrs. Wortley one morning, as they sat in the room which had been devoted to sewing for charitable purposes, "here is an account of missionary work in the N.W. Provinces of India—I know you are greatly interested, so while you finish that little frock for our missionary-box, I will read it to you."

The result of this reading was that Frances, having for some time now desired to work among the heathen, and feeling that she was called to the work by God, prepared to leave her adoptive mother, with the latter's consent, for the foreign mission field.

"I feel," said she, "that I can do nothing less. Since Christ gave Himself for me, I willingly give myself to Him; I am too happy and comfortable here; I might grow careless. My only sorrow is in leaving you, mother!" The brave lady said nothing to this. She was quite willing her child should go, glad that she wished it. "Every quarter," she said, "you will receive a draft from me for your use, and a balance to spend in cases of need. Our Lord will be the gainer by my loss of you. Could I, then, withhold this last sacrifice?"

Frances went to her work afar off, and the brave lady, speaking to a friend of this a year afterwards, said:—"That parting was worse than the thought of the surgeon's knife, for it seemed to tear out my heart. I remembered in time that my heart is my Lord's, and so I gave her freely, being enabled to say, 'Yea, let Him take all.'"

"A brave lady?" Yes; one of God's heroines; not afraid of death; not afraid to meet her old age alone, and why? Because she realised "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." Have you made that truth yours?

REV. AARON MATTHEWS, of the Jewish Evangelical Mission, recently addressed meetings in the Westoe Salvation Hall, an undenominational mission building in South Shields. The attention was very marked, and many will long remember the instruction imparted. A correspondent writes: "Mr. Matthews, as many are doubtless aware, is the founder and principal missionary of the Jewish Evangelical Mission, the objects of which are not only to evangelise the Jews in this neighbourhood and in the south side of Glasgow, but to assist, and if necessary educate, them. The mission must be of great service to any homeless, friendless Jew who comes to the Tyne or the Clyde, and who is ignorant of the English tongue. Mr. Matthews's address is 63, Fern-avenue, Newcastle-on-Tyne."

THE NEW GUINEA COLLEGE.

In response to my letter in your issue of Aug. 16, "Readers of The Christian" have sent me £31. I have now to say, thank you, and report progress.

When I wrote last we had only just begun to clear the bush on the selected site of our new College. Now we have been nearly six months in residence here. Both the College and our dwelling-house are finished. In all the work that has been done we have had the ready help of a number of natives from the surrounding villages. Every piece of timber used in our buildings has been carried up from the coast (two miles) on men's shoulders. We cannot always get help when we want it; but the people have been very good and willing. Of course we have had to pay them for their services, but the rate of wages is not high, and as waist-cloths and shirts are most in demand, we thus help the people in their efforts to get the externals of civilisation.

We had a dedication service in the College at the new year, and public worship has been held there every Sunday since. For a New Guinean to go two miles to a church is an unheard-of thing, but some have come that distance every Sunday to our College service. As soon as we have some students, we shall send them into the surrounding villages which are anxious for teachers, but at present we have none available.

To complete our settlement here, we need a church. The every-day school with all its educational appliances is not the best place for worship on the Lord's Day; £250 to £300 would build a substantial church that would be an object lesson to the whole district, as well as a House of Prayer for all who are living here. I have left vacant a site for the church, in faith and hope that the Master will provide the building for his service and glory.

I ought, perhaps, to explain more fully our purpose in establishing the College. The name may appear misleading, and yet it is the best for the object we have in view, viz., to train and fit young men to be teachers of Christ to their countrymen. Before we receive a candidate, we must have evidence that he is a sincere Christian, and then he must be able to read in his own language. That is all. The minds of the most advanced are only just opening, and the time has not yet come when any, except a very select few, will acquire knowledge from books. But the language spoken here is the only one in New Guinea in which the New Testament is translated, and that will be opened up to a number speaking many different dialects, to whom it would otherwise be a sealed book.

Classes cannot be numerous, nor yet on many subjects, but the personal influence of the missionary and his assistants, the daily order and discipline of a Christian community will be of great value to the young converts, who will be here from heathen villages. We hope to ground them well in the facts of our Lord's life, death, and resurrection, and get them conversant with as much Old Testament history as they can retain. Some will be able to learn the simple rules of arithmetic and a little geography and English. That is our "College" course. Out of doors they will acquire habits of regular work, and learn the use of carpenters' tools. All the students will be adults and married. For the children who may be here, we can have a more advanced school, and teach them more English, etc.

In about three months time I hope to receive our first students. The numbers will for some time be limited by the accommodation we can give them. We are beginning now to build houses for the South Sea Island teacher, for the work overseer, and for the students. Building material is scarce in the country around us. Houses take time to build, and cost money. Such as we are now building will not cost more than about £3 each. By-and-by I hope we may get a better class of houses, for a good house and decent surroundings is an important item in the training of our students, and will be the means of improving the style of living in all the villages to which they may go.

I am looking for the continued interest and sympathy of your readers. Our Missionary Society can no longer spend money on buildings, and yet we cannot possibly do without them. But we specially want a baptism of power from on high. At my old station at Port Moresby, there has been a great revival of interest, and many have been added to the church. We want the young men who come here to be filled with the Holy Spirit, and in all things to be taught by Him.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 16.—1 PETER II.

A People for God (1-10).—We cannot desire or enjoy the Word of God till we have put away the evil things which the Apostle names. It is only as we are nourished by the Word that we can grow or experience the fulness of God's salvation. To taste the grace of God on earth makes us long for the full banquet of eternity. (5) Note the rapid change of thought: The rejected stone, that lives, and gives life, becoming at last a temple, in which we who were once stones become priests, rendering to God sacrifices of spiritual love and prayer. (8) Christ must be something to each of us. Is He a stumbling or a stepping stone? (9) Note how much we may be to God, "his own"; and do for Him, by setting forth his excellences (R.V.). (10) Hosea ii.

Pilgrims and yet Subject to Human Ordinance (11-12).—Gratify the strong appetites of the flesh, and the soul is ravaged as by a hostile force. (12) We disarm adverse criticism by holy living. (13) We must be subject to human society and government, so far as these represent, though in an imperfect form, the Divine government, but we are bound to refuse obedience whenever their demands clash with our allegiance to God. It was by yielding to the authorities of their time, so far as they could, that the early Christians disarmed prejudice, and laid the foundations of the juster and more humane order under which we live.

Patient Submission (18-25).—Servants in those days were slaves. Our behaviour is not determined by the treatment meted out to us, whether kind or rough, but by the demands of our Saviour, Christ. We must always act so that He may say "Thank you." (21) How wonderful that the last hours of our Saviour's life afford an example for household servants in the narrow round of daily duty! They were to follow his steps. (23) Let the mouth be closed to man, but opened to God. (24) In Christ we have died to sin. Let us reckon this to be so, and be very sensitive to the voice of the Shepherd of souls.

MONDAY, JUNE 17.—1 PETER III.

A Word to Wives and Husbands (1-7).—Again this word subjection (ii. 13, 18). Woman's condition is one of hardship and bondage wherever Christ has not come. They were to accept their lot from the Divine hand, bearing what God permitted. Such a life, the apostle says, might win a husband who had never heard the Word preached. (3) This does not mean that women should eschew all that is tasteful and becoming, but that they should subordinate the outward to the inward, and be as thoughtful of the jewels of character as women of the world are of articles of attire. (7) In the world strength rules, in the kingdom of Christ weakness. Our relationships should help not hinder our prayers. Our religious life is the gauge by which to measure our behaviour towards those nearest us.

The Guileless Life (8-13).—Love, humility, the rendering of blessing in return for evil, are the condition for good days. (11) To seek peace for others is to have peace oneself, and to live in close fellowship with the Lord, whose eyes, ears, and face yield benediction.

Suffering for Righteousness' Sake (14-22).—When Christ is in his right place as Lord, we are delivered from fear of man. Let us make Him King, and so live as to shame those who blaspheme his name. (18) Christ's patience under undeserved contumely and hate, must be our ideal, and even though we should suffer physically and materially for his sake, we, like Him, shall minister spiritual help and consolation to those who are in darkness and the shadow of death. (21) This verse carries us back to 15. The act of baptism was a confession of faith as well as a satisfaction to the conscience and heart of the obedient servant. It reminds us of the deluge through which Noah passed into the world of resurrection. Let us resemble Christ in his death, resurrection, and eternal reign over the dark powers.

TUESDAY, JUNE 18.—1 PETER IV.

Living to the Will of God (1-6).—Christ suffered, we must expect to suffer. Through oneness with Him in his death, let us cease from obeying sin's mandates, and live all the rest of our time to the will of God. (3) Men think it strange that we find no pleasure in these things. They do not know how infinitely satisfied we are with the bread and wine of the Kingdom. (6) "The dead" must mean those who have died, as in the previous verse. For us the lesson of this verse is to live according to God in the spirit, as those who in Christ have passed through death, leaving the flesh or self-life behind us, because whatever savours of flesh and self must come under the condemnation of God.

The End of all Things at Hand (7-11).—Peter wrote when the fall of the Jewish economy was imminent. Let us always live as on the verge of eternity. Sobriety in demeanour, earnestness in prayer, fervour in love, studious to use our gifts for the general good, intent on the glory of God—such behaviour becomes those who know that the present may soon drop away revealing the unseen.

Life's Fiery Trials (12-19).—The stern opposition of the world must break on all who follow Christ. That is from God, this towards Him. When we come on the blood-marks left by our Saviour's feet on life's pathway, we know that we are on the right track, and as we share the suffering we shall certainly attain to the glory. We have a faithful Creator and Saviour; He cannot fail or desert. Let us commit our interests to his tender care.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19.—1 PETER V.

To the Elders (1-4).—Peter must have stood at a distance, and seen his Master die. We must share the suffering if we would partake of the glory. The Church is God's flock. The leaders of the Church were exposed to the brunt of persecution, but the Apostle trusted that love for Christ would lead men who take the foremost place, that they should use their power with all humility and gentleness, and be examples to the rest. We are but under-shepherds at our best, the responsibility of the flock is on the Chief Shepherd.

Exhortations to the Younger and to All (5-11).—Again this word "subjection," which with "suffering," is the keynote of this epistle. How the Gospel magnifies the passive virtues! Herein is the strength of Christ manifest—strong to submit and suffer for his sake, and because, as v. 6 indicates, in the pressure of trial may be traced the mighty hand of God. (7) Since we suffer for his sake we can confidently count upon his care. (8) Since we are his flock, we know the Shepherd will keep us safely, only we must abide near Him. (9) Let our suffering make us thoughtful of fellow-sufferers throughout the world. (10) How great the honour, to have been called by God to share Christ's glory! He will perfect that which concerneth us. We shall stand before Him, established and strengthened.

Salutations (12-14).—Probably this epistle was written whilst Peter was in Babylon presiding over the church to which he here refers. Silvanus and Mark were with him. In these words he endeavours to fulfil his Master's injunction to strengthen the brethren. What a softened tone! What a rich experience in Cephas, the strong rock-man!

THURSDAY, JUNE 20.—2 PETER I.

The Golden Ladder (1-11).—He delights in the word precious, using it of faith, and promise, and Christ. Multiply grace by peace to get the sum of the believer's heritage. (3) Everything that is needed for a godly life is already granted. The inventory of our possessions is gained through knowing Jesus. Let us claim the promises, that through them we may become partakers of the heavenly inheritance. (4) Do we live as those who have escaped the world's corruption? (5) Note the successive rounds of this ladder which climbs from faith to love. These graces stand like a complete choir. No voice should be mute from the heavenly octave. (8) Guard against unfruitfulness. (9) Do not be short-sighted. (10) Let your life prove your election. (11) Live so as not simply to scrape into heaven, but to receive a choral welcome from the saints in light.

The Vision of the Transfiguration Mount (12-21).—These things, is one of the keywords of the chapter. We need to be reminded, the fire burns in the coal, but it requires stirring. (15) He speaks of his death as the putting off of a tabernacle, and as an exodus. The latter word was that used by Moses and Elijah of the decease of Christ. In death the saints follow the greater than Moses from the land of bondage to that of liberty. (18) There are three infallible proofs of the truth of Christianity: first, the witness of the apostles; second, the light of prophecy, i.e., of the inspired Word; third the testimony of the Holy Ghost. These three burn in the dark night of the present, and we may count on them till we see the first glimmer of the dawn. Then we shall not need candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God will give us light.

FRIDAY, JUNE 21.—2 PETER II.

Warnings from the Old Testament (1-22).—In the outburst of the freedom of the Gospel, licence was taken by men who desired power and influence, to promulgate heresy. All the apostles give warning against such, and all point to the sure test of life and conduct as indicating the true nature of what beguiled the unwary. The real drift of all these early heresies was to deny the Master who, by his precious blood, purchased his Church. The Apostle quotes many instances from the past to show the fearful judgment which must overtake such. (4) The angels who fell, putting their proud self-will in antagonism to their Maker, were cast down to hell with its outer darkness. (5) The men who lived before the Flood, and who disregarded the Creator's laws written on their natures and on conscience, were overwhelmed with the deluge; and Balaam was rebuked for his transgression, and finally involved in the overthrow of the enemies of Israel. But amid the inevitable destruction which awaits those who, by their doctrine and life, contradict the words of God, and mislead the souls of men, God knows his own, and follows them with his eye of discriminating love, preserving them as Noah, delivering them as Lot, reckoning them as his jewels. (19) We become slaves of the sins we practise. (20) We escape the defilements of the world through the purifying knowledge of our Saviour Jesus. As we do God's holy commandment, we become conformed to his holiness. Better never to have known than to know and not to do. It will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah.

SATURDAY, JUNE 22.—2 PETER III.

The Last Days (1-7).—Let us deeply ponder the words of the holy prophets and apostles, and above all, the commandment of our Lord and Saviour through them, that we be not led astray. (3) Unholy lusts warp and defile the true words that men should speak. Being blinded by sin, they cannot discern the signs of the times. (4) It is not true that all things continue as they were from the beginning. Once at least the course of the world was interrupted by the deluge of water. Why should it not be again interrupted by a baptism of fire?

The Reason for God's Long Delay (8-13).—What seems long to us is less than a day is to Him. Calvary happened the day before yesterday according to the measurement of this text. It may be that the postponement of the second Advent is constantly prolonged that souls may have further opportunities of repentance. But the end will come at last. Scientific men tell us that fire still burns in the heart of our earth. (15) Let us not fix our thoughts then on the present, but ever look for and hasten the advent of the new creation. This will tend to all holy living and godliness.

Grow in Grace (14-18).—Whenever Jesus comes, whether in his second Advent, or in the daily demand for service or ministry, let us give diligence to be found in peace and blameless. Mark how Peter speaks of Paul, who had once withstood him. He is his beloved brother; he speaks by the wisdom given to him; his writings are ranked with the other Scriptures. (18) To know Christ is so often referred to by Peter. Here it is the condition of growth. If Peter felt there was so much to know, what infinite realms await our investigation! Let us prosecute our studies seeking in the Word, in the experience of holy men, in Providence, and in nature, to know the Son of God, Immortal Love.

STUDENTS AT MONTAUBAN.

The students of the French Protestant Theological University of Montauban recently formed a Temperance Society, under the direction of the Rev. Professor Doumergue, D.D. The new society has sprung out of a former Association, the "cercle populaire d'ouvriers" (workmen's popular club), in which the students are deeply interested. It can be said, in fact, that the club has been promoted by the students themselves. Twelve young workmen and about the same number of students signed the pledge.

There are in Montauban several other societies: "the Missionary Society," "the Society of Evangelisation," etc. One of them, entirely composed of students of the Protestant University, and named "the Friends of the Poor," recently organised a bazaar, followed by a concert. The affair was a great success, and "the Friends of the Poor" feel very happy to be able more efficiently to help their protégés next winter.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 23.

THE SAVIOUR'S PARTING WORDS.—Luke xxiv. 44-53.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Matt. xxviii. 19.

VERSES 44-49 contain a summary of our Lord's teaching during the forty days that intervened between the resurrection and the ascension. The object of this teaching was to fit his disciples for the great work He was entrusting to them (Golden Text). They who would be successful witnesses for Christ must be much at his feet, to be taught by Him.

44. "While I was yet with you"—the phrase is remarkable and suggestive. "It proves that, in the mind of Jesus, his separation from them was now consummated. He was with them only exceptionally; his abode was elsewhere."—Godet. The backward look upon his life-work fills Him with no regret. He had neither left any part of his message unspoken, nor said anything He could wish to recall. His uniform testimony had been according to the Scriptures. The terms Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms denote the entire Old Testament Scriptures.

45. This act of power was necessary; for notwithstanding all the teaching Jesus had given them, the Scriptures remained, to a considerable extent, a sealed book. He had formerly opened the Scriptures (32), but it is needful that He open the understanding. See Psa. cxix. 125. He does this still by arresting attention, removing prejudice, awakening a deep sense of need, and by the teaching of the Holy Ghost. John xx. 22 describes the same event in other words. Compare the incident in 2 Kings vi. 8-17, as illustrating how God opens the eyes to see.

46-49. The commission of the apostles and of all the Church is here described. The message they were to declare was that which Jesus had so often spoken to them (46). The necessity for the death and resurrection was two-fold. First, it had been declared in Scripture, and everything written "must be fulfilled" (44). And next, our salvation required it. It was not necessary because Scripture foretold it, but Scripture foretold it because it was necessary. In no other way could God reveal his righteousness in the judgment of sin and the justification of the sinner.

"Repentance and Remission" (47) depend upon these Gospel facts. Apart from the death and resurrection of Christ, there can be no offer of pardon to the guilty (Acts xiii. 38-39). The connection between repentance and remission must be observed. Repentance is not the price with which pardon is purchased, but the condition necessary for receiving it. He who is not wounded cannot be healed; and he who does not know and confess his sin cannot be forgiven. The preachers of this message are "witnesses" (48). The apostles had been eye-witnesses of the life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus. But all effective preachers still are witnesses, who can tell, not only what they have heard, but what they have experienced. Who can preach pardon so effectively as those who have themselves received? The power for witness-bearing is the Holy Ghost (49). This is not only a promise, but "the promise of my Father," comprehending all the rest. Until Christ was glorified this promise could not be fulfilled (John vii. 38, 39); and until the apostles were endued with "power from on high" their testimony would be useless. Keep clearly the connection between witness-bearing and the power of the Spirit (Acts i. 8). He who would be filled with the Spirit must give himself to the work of witness-bearing. He who would bear witness must seek to be filled with the Spirit.

50-53. Old Testament prophecy had foretold the ascension (Psa. xxiv. 7-10, lxviii. 18). Jesus had often anticipated it, and associated with it the promise of greatest blessing to his people (John xiv, 2, 3, 12, 13, 28). In it man, as represented in Christ, reaches his highest possible destiny. The Mount of Olivet (Acts i. 12), "over against Bethany" (50 R.V.), was the last spot touched by the feet of our Lord, as it will be the first on which his feet will rest when he returns (Zech. xiv. 4). His final act was one of blessing (51). And this was not completed, for it was "while he blessed them" that He was taken from them. Is not the act of blessing continuing still? Think what He is doing in the Father's house as our Great High Priest, giving us sympathy, and succour, and full salvation (Heb. iv. 15, 16, vii. 25).

"Worshipped" (52) means no mere respect paid to a man, but religious worship offered to Him now as God (John v. 23).

"Great joy" fulfilled the promise of John xiv. 28. Remember that the last view of Jesus was not on the cross, nor in the grave, but ascending "to the right hand of power." He has taken the place of triumph; will He not cause us to share it with Him?

For the Young.

"They brought unto Him also infants."

IN 1875 a Children's Medical Missionary Society was begun, "to interest children everywhere in medical mission work everywhere." It took as its motto—

"Tell ye your children of it,
And let your children tell their children,
And their children another generation."—Joel i. 3.

In those days very few, even amongst grown-up persons, knew about medical missions, so that the work of telling the boys and girls about them was necessarily slow. But children's medical mission literature was written and sent far and wide, and in due course of time it had helped to tell the story, not only in many districts of this country where medical missions had not been heard of before, but also in many parts of the Continent of Europe, in America, at the Antipodes, and elsewhere; and thousands of girls and boys—yes, and very many parents, too, began in these places to love and to help medical missions.

What could the children do? They could not go about preaching and healing, as Jesus used to do. No; but they could pray for the medical missionary doctors; they could earn and collect money to buy them medicines and instruments; they could make and send clothing and other comforts for the sick; and they could give up toys and other treasures for the medical missionary's little patients. And all these things they did, and did right willingly and heartily, when told that in all such ways they were following in the footsteps of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But the boys and girls of twenty, and even of ten, years ago have now nearly all of them grown up, and have, many of them, little sons and daughters of their own. And now comes in the second part of our motto verse:

And let your children tell their children.

Are they doing this? Do they wish and intend thus to prepare new recruits for the medical mission army of workers? If so, they may be interested in hearing that we have started a "Babies' Band" in connection with the Children's Medical Missionary Society, and that their children are eligible as members from the time of their birth on the following two conditions:—

1. The baby to have one of our little collecting-boxes on its nursery mantelpiece, so that it may learn to give as soon as it is able to deal with money at all.

2. The baby's parents, or nurse, to become subscribers to the monthly magazine, "Medical Missions at Home and Abroad,"† so that, as soon as the little one can understand, they may be able to explain to it the object of the gifts.

This Babies' Band is not meant only for our children's children—the grandchildren, as it were, of the Children's Medical Missionary Society—but for any other "babies" under six years of age whose parents recognise medical missions as the Christ-appointed method of reaching the souls and bodies of the heathen at home and abroad, and who desire for their children the privilege of helping forward his work.

*All communications about the Babies' Band to be addressed—Miss Annie R. Butler, Medical Mission House, 49, Highbury Park, London, N.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending June 22, 1895.—Sun., June 16, Genesis ix. 1-17; Mon., 17, xi. 1-9; Tues., 18, xii. 1-10; Wed., 19, xiii. 1-18; Thurs., 20, xiv. 8-24; Fri., 21, xv. 1-18; Sat., 22, xviii. 1-10.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION promises to be more crowded than ever this year. It has been suggested that home missions, as well as foreign missions, ought to have an evening at Keswick. The churches are wanting young men "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost" for the parishes of our large cities. Two years' hard work in a "slum parish" would be good training for the foreign mission field.

A LITTLE HEART AND HOW IT GREW.

'Twas a wee little heart when it entered the world,
For how could a baby have anything big?
There was room for the baby himself and his wants,
But as for all else—why, he cared not a fig!
If the baby was hungry, he knew it right well,
If he felt very poorly, he fretted and cried;
But the dear little heart was too little, you see,
To know or to care for the world outside.

But the little heart grew as the days rolled by,
In the sunshine of love and the showers of care;
And the dear ones at home all so quietly crept
Right into the heart and were welcomed there.
And yet there was room for them all and to spare,
So quickly the heart of the baby grew;
And soon in his heart he had friends by the score,
Whom he loved with a love that was loyal and true.

And the baby grew big, and so tall and so wise,
He could scarcely be known as a baby at all;
And he heard the sweet story of Him who, of old,
Was cradled to rest with the beasts of the stall:
The children's best Friend, and their Saviour and King,
The dear loving Shepherd, who died for the sheep;
And down in his heart there was room for the Christ,
And a love that was trustful and tender and deep.

And yet even more did this little heart grow,
In knowledge and love, and in heavenly grace;
For the heart that loves Jesus is certain to grow,
Till it takes the wide world in its loving embrace.
Ye children who read of this dear little heart;
How quickly and sweetly and grandly it grew,
Come, answer a question, consider it well—
How big is the heart God has given to you?

OUR PRAYER MEETINGS.

Is there not a painful conviction in many minds that our prayer-meetings are not so useful and profitable as they might be? I think the small attendance shows that they are in some measure a failure. Some years ago, in good Mr. Boardman's time, prayer-meetings were held at his house in Camden-square. They were always well attended, and were to my mind models of what such meetings should be. We were urged to make our prayers definite, to ask for what we felt we really needed, also to bring any burden, or trial, and lay it before the Lord, with the assurance that the prayer of the one should be the prayer of all. Very frequently in succeeding meetings the person who had requested prayer invited us to join him in thanksgiving for the gracious answer that had been given; and thus our meetings were emphatically prayer and praise meetings.

If we could realise in our prayer-meetings more of the character of family gatherings round our Father's feet; and meet together in sympathy with each other, entering into and sharing each other's trials and burdens; and if our prayers were more definite and believing, and all felt it a duty and privilege to make these meetings as interesting and profitable as possible—we should not, I feel sure, have to complain of dull, dry prayer-meetings. Let the members understand that the meeting is theirs, and not leave it to the minister and three or four others to pray; let each bring some special request, or tell of some answer to prayer, relate some circumstance of interest, or read from some book which had been blessed to his own soul. Nor do I think it would be at all out of place if the case of some friend who was in great sorrow, or subject to deep trial, were mentioned; whilst the matter was thus brought before the Lord, opportunity would be afforded to some sympathetic souls of helping the friend whose case had been thus lovingly mentioned, and thus the Divine Father might send the answer to the prayer by one of his own children. Then, too, when could there be a better opportunity for suggesting plans of usefulness which might be taken up by the members? And when, through God's blessing, these had proved successful, what a pleasant report for further meetings, awakening thankfulness, and inspiring further effort.

STRANGERS' REST.—A correspondent who was present at a recent meeting for sailors in the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, writes:—"Mr. and Mrs. Isaac, the heads of the work, will be glad to meet with any brethren or sisters willing to share with them a little of the burden and heat of the day. There are meetings, I understand, every afternoon, in different languages, so that sailors of various nationalities may hear the Word of God. With such constantly varying congregations there are numberless opportunities of reaching many hearts, and of personal dealing with individual souls. Consecrated voices also may find a sphere of service for the Lord. A negro passing along the Highway the afternoon I was there, was attracted by the solo singing, and came in to hear more."

Y.M.C.A. Founder's Day.

Dating a new epoch in its history from the Jubilee of last year, the ruling powers of the Y.M.C.A. in London have moved the anniversary from April to June, and named it Founder's Day. Judging from the course of last Thursday's proceedings, the change is a politic one, and will probably impart to the annual gatherings of the Association a fresh lease of public interest.

As a fitting prelude to the two business meetings of the afternoon and evening, there were midday gatherings for prayer at Aldersgate-street and Exeter Hall. In the former place Sir George Williams presided, and the prayers offered bore specially on Y.M.C.A. work and its needs. The short address by Rev. Alex. Connell, of Regent Square, was in harmony with the occasion. From Paul's words to Timothy, "But the Word of God is not bound," he spoke words well fitted to stimulate workers of to-day in their battles for God and his cause. These words, written to Timothy just on the eve of the veteran apostle's exit from life, are part of his last legacy to the Church. The phrase "the Word of God" would probably mean, not so much the written Scriptures of the time, or the abstract truths that are embodied in revelation; though in both of these aspects God's Word is imperishable. What the apostle meant were those truths, as to redemption through Jesus Christ, which he had found in his own experience to be so quick and powerful—that dynamic Gospel which is able to lay hold of the weakest and the worst of humanity, and lift them up from the degradation caused by sin, and reinstate them into fellowship with God. Mr. Connell was admirably clear and strong in his utterances as to the primal place which the Cross and all that it signifies should occupy in our proclamation of the Gospel. From that Cross we, as workers, may look forward to the crown which lies in the future for every faithful servant. But for the present we can count on the sustaining power and presence of the living Christ Himself. Paul realised the abounding vitality and the unbending authority of the Word of God; and belief in its triumphs upheld him when his own testimony was about to be extinguished. Here is a great ground for confidence and hope, that our presentation of the truths of salvation, which is often weak and halting, will not prevent that Word from having its due influence in the hearts and lives of men.

Telegrams of greeting were read from the Croydon and Belfast Associations.

At the Exeter Hall meeting for prayer Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and the address was given by Rev. Sydenham Dixon.

The anniversary was of course that of the combined Central Associations at Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street, and Cornhill; but two meetings were held, that of the afternoon at the Mansion House, and the evening at the head centre in the historic Exeter Hall. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided over the company which gathered in the Egyptian Hall of the mayoral residence. The usual preliminaries over, Mr. Robert Burn, as the Aldersgate-street secretary, submitted an interesting summary of the year's work. First of all he called up some reminiscences of the Jubilee doings last June, and then told of the amalgamation effected during the year of the three central branches under one working committee. The fourfold character of the Y.M.C.A. programme, corresponding to the physical, intellectual, social, and spiritual needs of the young man, was dwelt on, and some statistics given. Among the special features of the year were the Sunday afternoon meetings at Aldersgate-street, and the popular Saturday evening gatherings in Exeter Hall, both of which have proved a great success. Some 1300 young men were provided with good apartments; and employment secured for 360 young men. Mr. Meyer's addresses to young men on Saturday afternoons at Aldersgate-street were gratefully referred to. Many young men have sought counsel from the secretaries as to commercial or religious difficulties, and numbers have during the year decided to serve and follow the Lord Jesus Christ. Coming to the financial side of the work, Mr. Burn reported a balance of £159 in hand, so far as the year's accounts of the two chief Associations are concerned. Taking into view, however, the incumbrances on Exeter Hall, the other deficits at Jubilee time, and the expenses of the Jubilee itself, the result is that a debt of £7300 stood against the Association when the balance-sheet was drawn up. Sir George Williams has most generously offered to meet the half of this deficit, provided the remaining moiety is made up without delay. Towards that moiety £1375 were promised before the meetings of last week, leaving £2275 to be donated by the friends of the work. An appeal for this amount was earnestly made by Mr. Burn; by Mr. Bevan in his few presidential remarks; and by Sir George Williams towards the close of the meeting. Mr. Bevan threw out the suggestion that if every London Y.M.C.A. man would contribute or collect 5s., the whole amount would be easily realised; but Mr. Knight, who spoke before the meeting ended, rather advocated the view that the great City merchants and business men were better able to make good the deficiency.

THE MANSION HOUSE SPEECHES.

At this afternoon gathering there were two set addresses. Hon and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, of Kensington, spoke very warmly of Association work, and of its claims from an interior point of view. Quoting a sentence from a South African report which had reached him, he showed that the Y.M.C.A. provides "a welcome to the stranger, work for the Christian, and fellowship for all." These points were amplified. We must go forward, said Mr. Glyn; we cannot allow this grand agency among young men to suffer. There are many living witnesses to the help it has been to them, not only in the religious life, but in fitting them the better to do their daily work and to achieve prosperity in worldly things. The second speaker was Rev. Andrew Murray, of South Africa, who said he felt it an honour to represent the distant endeavours of the Y.M.C.A. We thank God, he said, for what the Association has done for the wide world as well as for London. Thirty years ago it was his privilege to be president of the Cape Town Association, and strangely enough three of the men who began the work in that city were present in the meeting. The three veteran brethren referred to, Messrs. Earp, Cartwright, and Jones, rose in compliance to a request, and were warmly cheered. Mr. Murray proceeded to point out that the influence of the Association has now largely extended beyond its own immediate boundaries; in South Africa, for instance, in his own church—the Dutch Reformed—there are many congregations having each its own Young Men's Association; and it was the example of the parent Y.M.C.A. that had inspired them to undertake these local efforts for the salvation of young men. Then the speaker referred to the great and steady influx of British young men into the busy centres of South African commerce and life. In places like Kimberley and Johannesburg, these young men are surrounded by serious temptations. On a recent visit to Johannesburg he had been told that in the city there were more than one hundred young men who were once in a hopeful state, spiritually, who had now forsworn all religious sanctions, and were immersed in the pursuit of worldly riches. How important that young men before leaving England to go to such places should be decided, out-and-out Christians. This lends an added value to the work of the Y.M.C.A. Who knows what increasing tides of infidelity and wickedness may come in upon us before another half century is gone! May God enable this Association to train up a great army of Christian soldiers who shall stand bravely in the evil day, and work for the salvation of England and the world.

THE EXETER HALL MEETING

in the evening was very largely attended, and in every way worthy of the occasion. The esteemed president, Sir George Williams, was able to fill his accustomed seat in the chair, and was surrounded on the platform by a great array of friends of the institution. After Mr. Putterill, the general secretary, had given an admirable report (which was in substance identical with that given earlier in the day by his City colleague), Lord Kinnaird, in the name of the committee, presented the president with a handsomely-bound copy of the Report of the Jubilee Proceedings. This volume, we may here interpolate, the issue of which has been unavoidably delayed, is now ready, and makes a very substantial memento of last year's great gathering. It is beautifully got up and profusely illustrated. In the course of his remarks, Lord Kinnaird said he considered that the £10,000 or so lately contributed by London friends and the public generally towards the needs of the Central Association, was a miserable gift for such a work, and we ought to be ashamed of it. American friends can teach us a lesson in liberality, for they are spending £60,000 in the erection of a new Association building in the West End of New York.

In his hearty words of response, Sir George Williams said he would prize the volume presented to him as a splendid memorial of a memorable time. There has been a great step forward during the past year, and we must thank God for it. When recently visiting the Continent, he had met friends in different places who spoke of the wonderful stimulus which the Jubilee gatherings of last year gave to their Association work. What is to be the course of this second half century's work? For one thing, the Y.M.C.A. will try to help the churches of every denomination. There is no proselytising element in the Association. The great aim is to better young men, to make them wiser, purer, and more courageous, and to help them to become missionaries to their fellow young men. Sir George referred to the closer relations that now exist between the Association and the young men studying at our universities—a circumstance which he deemed to be full of hope for the future. If we can only influence these young men in a Christian way, what splendid statesmen, doctors, judges, magistrates, ministers, and missionaries we may expect in the time to come. Let us seek to further this effort to reach the young men in our great seats of learning throughout the land, and pray that large numbers of them may be brought to Christ. In America they can tell of some 20,000 of the students in their colleges and universities who are on the Lord's side. Why should we not have such results in England? There are now 5500 Y.M.C.A.'s in different parts of the world. In closing his little speech, the President referred to recent or projected advances in Association work in Scotland, Ireland, India, and America. Let the motto be for all these enlarged endeavours: "My grace is sufficient for thee; my strength shall be made perfect in weakness."

of Norwich, in the commencement of a stirring address, expressed his delight at addressing an audience representing youthfulness and vigour. After some congratulatory remarks as to "Founder's Day," the eloquent Dean went on to say that the history of the Y.M.C.A. was a proof of the vitality of the Christian faith and the reality of the Christian hope. The great law which governs the whole Church of God, by which every saved soul is bound, and which ought to govern every Christian Association, is the extension of the Kingdom of Christ by the aggression of Christian men. Different doctrines have had prominence in different periods of the Church's history; but this law of extension by aggression is irrevocable and eternal. The reasonableness of this is proved by all that we know of man and of God. Our Lord and Master expects it of us; we dare not be silent. Young men have many opportunities for making a spiritual impression on their fellows, and in order to make use of these opportunities they need faith and courage. If every member of the Association were to go forth in the spirit of the early Church which conquered the Roman world for Christ, they would increase the dimensions of the Society, strengthen the hands of those who conduct it, create fresh centres of life and power, and glorify God in their day and generation.

REV. GEORGE JACKSON,

of Edinburgh, followed with a powerful appeal for decision, specially addressed to young men. He took up and considered various objections that in his experience young men urge for neglecting the claims of Christ—difficulties as to the Scriptures, or the Christian creeds, the inconsistencies of professed believers, etc. The hollowness of such excuses was exposed, and young men were affectionately urged not to allow things that they did not fully understand to keep them back from the blessings of the Christian life.

The proceedings of the day were brightened by the song of gifted singers. In the afternoon a company from the Norwood College for the Blind discoursed delightful music. At the Exeter Hall meeting there was a well-trained male choir, and sacred solos were rendered with faultless skill and deep feeling by Mrs. Mary Davies. Towards the close of the proceedings an item not on the printed programme excited much interest. Madame Sterling sang one of her favourite songs, and followed up the singing by some burning words of appeal to the audience to show the reality of their Christian life by love of the brethren, and by seeking to rescue the lost sisters of our city streets.

THE LATE

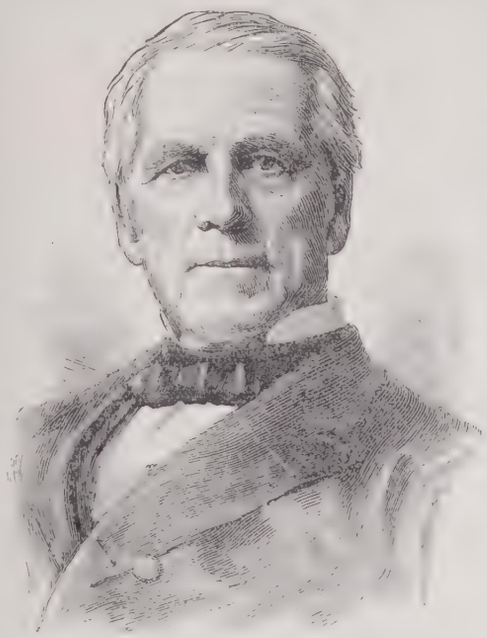
Rev. A. B. Earle, D.D.

This evangelist, who heralded the Gospel for full three-score years, was summoned home at the ripe age of eighty-three, on March 30 last. During the past three years he had been somewhat invalided, but he kept at work until he reached his eightieth year. It can truly be said of him that he was "a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit," and that through him "much people were added unto the Lord."

Like many other successful evangelists, he spent a few years of his early ministerial life in the pastorate. Such a task called out his best powers, gave him opportunity for study, brought him in touch with the people, and developed his gift for systematic organisation. During his pastoral years he combined evangelistic work with parish labours. But of this period of his ministry he said:—

When I commenced preaching I seemed to hear Christ say, "Do the work of an evangelist." My first protracted meeting was in Cortland, N.Y., three months after I was licensed to preach. I meant to obey Christ, but thought I could be pastor and evangelist both. The Lord gave success in "winning souls," and calls to Gospel work multiplied. While pastor in Oneonta, N.Y., the church feeling I was away too much, I told them that I would not go again that spring, unless they said "Go," and I would refer all calls to the church. A few days after this, a stranger arose in the congregation on Sunday, and said, "I have come for your pastor to assist us in special meetings." He appealed to them with tears. They met the stranger and talked it over, but found it as hard to say "No," as I had. The church said to me, "Pastor, go, and get back as soon as you can." I said to the church, "When my year is out, I shall give up the charge of the church, with no expectation of ever being pastor again. My life work will now be plain; I will "do the work of an evangelist."

Dr. Earle was a man of strong will, made strong, however, by his full subjection to Christ; he was also a hero of faith. He was author of a dozen books, many of which have had a large circulation.* They chiefly deal with questions of the soul and its needs. He kept a diary full of deeply interesting records, from which we glean the following:—



Have held up to this day 39,327 public meetings. Have conducted about 1000 series of meetings, preached 21,834 times, travelled to hold these meetings 370,000 miles. Think 160,000 persons have, as the result of these meetings, united with the churches of the twenty-three denominations with which I have laboured. About 400 of these converts have entered the ministry. Have written ten different publications...My peace in Christ is very great. I have accepted Him as my Saviour, and expect support and comfort in death.

This great worker was not forsaken of his Lord in the hour of death. During his sickness he often exclaimed, "I think I shall go home to-day." Sometimes he would add when the evening shadows fell, "I am disappointed; I thought Jesus would send for me to-day. After many days of pain and exhaustion he fell asleep after leaving this testimony, "It is all sunshine."

He was known as "the Union Evangelist," because in the early days of his preaching, sixty years ago, sectarianism was very rife, and he was among the first to insist on Union services. During his long life he advocated this kind of evangelism. Dr. Joseph Cook refers to Dr. Earle and his work with fond remembrance. We close this brief notice by a quotation from an article by Dr. Cook:—

"It is as one of Dr. Earle's pupils that I stand among those who mourn, not for him, but for themselves in his departure. It was my great good fortune to meet him at Vergennes, Vt., soon after I had left Andover Theological Seminary in 1868. He was then in the full maturity of his powers, and I studied his methods, convictions, and atmosphere with the keenest attention. I was occupying for a month the pulpit of the Congregational church in Vergennes. The revival in which Dr. Earle was labouring embraced all the churches. Many of his gatherings were held in the Congregational church, and I was at times his assistant. I had come from the instruction of the Andover Theological Seminary at a time when it was in some respects the foremost theological school in the world. I was reading President Finney's 'Lectures on Revivals,' and thought nothing was so much needed by the churches as a baptism in the fire that fell at Pentecost, and has not yet ceased to fall on all souls that are utterly, gladly, and irreversibly self-surrendered to God as both Saviour and Lord.

"'A good man and full of the Holy Ghost,' was my instantaneous verdict when I first heard this consecrated evangelist. No wildfire, but the true flame of the Holy Spirit, was my second assured conviction. A Biblical preacher, a bold, sensible and defensible theology; a Scriptural tone in every syllable—was the next point on which I felt at rest. Every sermon reins the impenitent hearers up to the duty of immediate self-surrender to God. The advice given to the religiously irresolute is such as they might die following and not die unsaved. This was my next and supreme conclusion.

"The last time I saw this saintly man was when he spoke in the vestry of Park-street Church, one afternoon, in Dr. Lansing's revival meetings. He moved away the pulpit desk, and stood on the lower step of the platform, as near the people as he could place himself. The westing sun sent almost level beams into the room and lighted up his noble form, his balanced and powerful head, his illumined and inspiring face. The discourse was a most searching appeal to Christians so to live as to have at all times the witness of the Spirit that they are sons of God. No one could look upon him and listen to his intonations and doubt that he had that witness in its most effulgent clearness. He made a slight reference to the association of Park-street Church with revivals, and said: 'I should like to walk the streets of heaven with Nettleton and Lyman Beecher and Edward Kirk and Charles Finney—and perhaps I may do so soon!'—a prophecy that has found fruition."

* Readers may be glad to know that two of Dr. Earle's books, "Bringing in the Sheaves" (1s.), and "The Work of an Evangelist: a Review of Fifty Years' Labours" (6d.), can be had from the publishers of this paper.

DR. PARKER ON THE BIBLE.

At length Dr. Joseph Parker has completed his great work, The People's Bible: Discourses upon Holy Scripture. The concluding volume, the twenty-fifth, is devoted to sermons and annotations of one fourth of the New Testament—Ephesians to Revelation. (8s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The treatment is somewhat wanting in proportion: two discourses on Ephesians, and seven on James; eight each on Hebrews and John, and only four on the Revelation. The work, however, of the latest volume is uniform in character with that which has gone before, the aim throughout being to present with power the teaching of Scripture, and to apply it to life and duty. The style is bold, and the substance of sterling value. The People's Bible is Dr. Parker's life work, although he has written much besides. In some concluding words, he tells the reader that almost without exception the sermons have been printed from a reporter's notes; the pages, therefore, represent the actual utterance of the preacher.

In some paragraphs on the Bible and its place in Christian life and work, Dr. Parker says: "In my judgment, the only preaching that can do profound and lasting good must be Biblical. Such preaching cannot be monotonous, nor disappointing, to men who sincerely wish to commune with God, and obey his will. Any pulpit that founds itself on personal invention, cleverness, ingenuity, audacity, or affected originality, will most surely cover itself with humiliation, and pass into merited oblivion. Revelation enriches us with truths which Reason never could have discovered, but which, being given, Reason can accept without loss of dignity or remission of responsibility. To me the Bible is a Divine revelation—a revelation of God, Providence, Sin, Atonement, Faith, Immortality. The Bible is not a book containing a revelation; it is a revelation accepting the risks and limits of a book....

"We assume an immense responsibility in claiming that any book is a final and authoritative standard in faith and morals. We place the Book itself in an awful position. We separate it from all other books; we make sceptical criticism a profane offence, and devout obedience an essential element of spiritual character. The mind has simply to receive, the will has simply to obey, the heart has simply to trust. The Book is to us verily as God Himself. Are we, in nineteenth century light, to stand by such a position, or to abandon it? Is the Bible still to stand alone, and to demand the obeisance of all other books; is the dream-book to stand in the harvest fields of literature and to receive the homage of the bending sheaves? There is only one Book in the world which can prove the inspiration of the Bible, and that is the Bible itself....

"Let the Bible speak for itself. When inquirers come with their questions, objections, and difficulties, insist, as a condition of conference, that the Book itself be read through and through from end to end, until the inquirer is thoroughly acquainted with its contents. That reading will do its own work. That reading has made me an unquestioning and grateful believer in the plenary inspiration, the Divine authority, and the infinite sufficiency of Holy Scripture; and, therefore, I can the more earnestly and definitely encourage others to impose upon themselves the sacred task. I now know that the Bible is inspired. It addresses itself to every aspect and every necessity of my nature; it is my own biography; I seem to have read it in some other world; we are old friends; the breathing of Eternity is in us both, and we have happened together, to our mutual joy, on this rough shore of time. I never know how great a Book it is until I try to do without it: then the heart aches; then the eyes are put out with the great tears of grief; then the house is no home of mine; then life sinks under an infinite load of weariness. In great moods of moral exultation, I cannot stoop to the unworthy fray of intellectual encounter, to compare theories, to discuss contradictory scepticisms, and to institute comparisons between the cleverness which baffles me and the faith which impels me to service. I know well all the criticisms which this kind of confession never fails to evoke; if I knew less of them I would make more of them, but knowing them well, in all their scope and meaning, I will no longer allow them to rob the heart of its most sacred joys."

CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—A muster of many seamen and others in port, members of this body, took place on Thursday at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's headquarters, 215-17, St. George's-street, London Docks, E., under the presidency of Mr. George Lampard, who gave an excellent Gospel temperance address. Mr. Cairns, Mr. Beckett, and others gave addresses, and several seamen gave testimonies of the joy they experienced when held from temptation by the Holy Spirit.

THE IRISH REVIVAL OF '59.

Dear Sir,—In a recent number of The Christian I noticed an article referring to the religious Revival of 1859 in Ireland. The writer wished that the spirit of prayer might be upon us, so that a similar manifestation of the Holy Spirit might be given to us. I think, however, that very few of your English readers have the faintest conception of what form the manifestation took.

It was not simply an expression of sorrow for sin or of enthusiasm in loving service, but a tempest of the Holy Ghost shaking souls to their foundations, like the rushing mighty wind on the day of Pentecost. Tongues of fire were not visible, but bodily prostration, caused by a sense of the wrath of God, and the unveiling of the terrors of the invisible world to the unrepentant, were everywhere present. It was as if God by his Spirit had shown to sinners sin as it appeared to Him, loathsome, death-deserving, paralysing by the sudden revelation of their physical powers.

No sooner had people come together for worship than agonised cries for mercy and pardon would be heard. The man in the prime of life and the child at school were stricken, as it was called, in the same way. The Holy Ghost overshadowed us; his presence was as really felt as an earthquake or a cyclone. The prince of the power of the air had his power wrested from him for the time being, though not without a struggle.

I have seen dozens of cases convulsed with mental agony, oblivious to the presence of the clergyman or minister, or dearest friends, while the powers of darkness fought with the spirit of grace on the battle ground of their souls, the stricken ones after the conflict falling on their knees and thanking God for the victory. Men, women, and children, waited and longed for the coming of Christ, thinking He must be preparing the way for his reign; where two or three met together for prayer was a very gate of heaven.

The girls at the school I attended held praise and prayer meetings in their play hour. The farm labourers returning from their fields would call to each other, "Good news, I have found the Lord." The untaught and uncultured spoke of the glory of the Lord with fluency and power.

Caste, the curse of English Christians, was thrown aside, and rich and poor clasped hands and asked after each other's welfare. The millennium had come in part. Many who in pride said, "Nothing would make them cry for pardon of sin in a public meeeting," went to see, and remained in the throes of the second birth.

The land rejoiced and was glad, but, alas! suddenly, the Spirit's manifestation passed away, having only shown us a glimpse of his power and majesty.

Are England's professing Christians really and whole-heartedly desiring the abiding presence of the messenger of rest? Are those who say they have Pentecostal power comforting their own souls by the knowledge, instead of electrifying other souls they come in contact with, as the influence was felt through the masses in the Irish Revival? England will not be saved from her infidelity, agnosticism, and Popery, and formality and ignorance and heathenism in this land of Bibles, except by the overwhelming power of the Holy Ghost. England sleeps as the dead sleep, the land languishes for the gales of heaven, the breath of the Spirit of God.

The harvests are white, yet gold-loving England holds the money that would buy the sickles and pay the labourers. The labourers, lonely and sad, die in the distant harvest fields, stinted in their labourer's fare. The Christians loll in their carriages, and only give to Christ what they do not need for their unnecessary luxuries.

When will Christians awake to the fact that they have the gold from the Lord, and that He expects the tithes? When will Christ our Redeemer's kingdom and glory be their first thought and not their second? When will all that call themselves by the name of Jesus band together for prayer, for the gift of the Holy Ghost? Why cannot our churches and chapels be left open all day, so that at any time Christians may snatch a few minutes for united prayer on this matter, that prayer may then be without ceasing?

The day that brings this spirit of prayer will be the herald day of the Omnipotent Holy Ghost, the dawn of gladness and life in this sin-stricken, broken-hearted, and despairing world.

SOUTHSEA CONVENTION.

In recording the days of blessing at Southsea, in connection with the recent Convention, we would praise God, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessing in Christ Jesus. Among those who were God's instruments of blessing, we note the names of Mr. Frank Anderson, Dr. Barnes, Rev. W. H. Etches, Dr. Bullinger, Rev. J. B. Figgis, Rev. J. G. Gregory, Rev. C. L. Hamilton, Rev. R. Middleton, Dr. Neatby, Rev. W. S. Standen, Rev. George Wainwright. Accounts of work in the Lord's vineyard were given by Dr. Baedeker, on Siberia; Rev. W. W. Cassels, China; Mr. and Mrs. Harrington (Soldiers' and Zenana work, India), Mr. Anderson and Miss Blane (S.V.M.U.), Mr. George Holland, Mr. Osborn Howe, S. Africa; Miss Abraham, India; Miss Wilson and Miss Larritt, Thonon, France; Mr. Gelson Gregson and Mr. Lane.

An especially interesting and helpful plan was the opportunity being given to these Christian workers to speak for a few moments in the hour following dinner which was held each day in an adjoining schoolroom, the time after tea being given to an open Bible reading, in which any were invited to take part.

It is difficult and perhaps unwise to single out special addresses, but the lines of truth more especially emphasised were the complete cleansing of the heart from sin; the crucifixion of the old man; the blessed fulness and filling of God; and the danger of not claiming and receiving what we hear and enjoy to hear at such Conventions. Solemn words were spoken at the missionary meeting, Christ's need of workers abroad being specially emphasised in the presence of numerous young people.

We who were present have each received a greater knowledge of God's fulness and power in us to meet the needs of a needy world. Solemn were the warnings lest the living waters should find no outlet through sealed lips or crippled capabilities. God grant that the blessing may remain with us by the added blessing of being witnesses unto Him, by whom we are enriched in all things! M. E. H.

THE SUMMER SEA.

The grand old sea! how beautiful, sublime!
Gleaming like fretted silver in the sun!
As bright, perhaps, as at the birth of time,
When throbbings of thy heart had just begun:
Even yet, veiled in thy awful solitude,
Thy mighty Maker's Spirit seems to brood.

Like pleasant music with a minor tone,
Beneath thy rippling laughter sounds a sigh,
A ghostlike echo as from myriads gone,
Whelmed in wild billows menacing the sky:
Boats, ships, armadas, fleets, old Noah's land,
Thy prey, O Sea, now smiling on the strand.

Too sweet the hour to catalogue thy crimes,
Or, looking back, to celebrate thy praise,
To count thy riches borne from distant climes,
The finny treasures of thy teeming bays,
Thy breath of healing—nay, vast sea so grand!
We'll gaze on thee and let our souls expand.

The heavens are mirrored on thy shining face;
Framed in thy majesty and might is found
A glass wherein we clearly mark the trace
Of Him who made thee, set to thee thy bound;
Thus we ascend, until in Him who trod
Thy waves of yore, we meet and worship God.

"JORDANS" IN BUCKS.

On June 6, "Jordans Monthly Meeting" was held in due course, and was a time of extraordinary interest and profit. On the Sunday week before, the little meeting-house, close to the spot where Wm. Penn and most of his family are buried, was crowded to excess, and only about a quarter of those who attended gained admittance. Two splendid meetings on that beautiful Sabbath day, amid such charming surroundings, maintained the character of "the Quakers' Yearly Meeting," and left, we trust, manifold impressions of good.

The weather on Thursday, the 6th, was equally propitious, and though fewer attended the meeting-house was unable to hold all that came. Christian union on these occasions is extraordinarily exemplified and illustrated. America and Great Britain are represented, Conformists and Non-conformists shake hands as brothers, different political and social classes unite under his banner, whose love has fused them into oneness with Himself. The divisions of counties and of churches are wholly lost, and with one mind and one mouth they glorify Him. "Unity in diversity," as a good clergyman who was present said, was God's plan for making his people one.

Among our visitors, Luke Woodard, of Indiana, took a very profitable and interesting part. A young Baptist minister, and an Evangelical clergyman rendered excellent help. Mr. Colin Taylor, who has for years past attended these gatherings, did his part nobly, and both at the indoor and outdoor meetings, the Gospel was proclaimed with no uncertain sound. Hospitality by the members of the monthly meeting was, as usual, unstintedly and generously extended, and a series of services, and of intercourse, far from the madding crowd, more likely to extend the Redeemer's Kingdom, it would be difficult to imagine. To some of those unacquainted with the democratic and unpriestly ways of the Friends, the day was a revelation, and many were the expressions of surprise and pleasure.

Residents in the district are constantly asking for more such opportunities and intercourse with Friends, and we trust the time is near when it may be possible to gratify their wishes. Meantime, a sort of "Keswick at Jordans" is contemplated, when a quiet day with God, of a wholly unsectarian character, may unite Christians and uplift them to a higher ideal and experience of his power. In these days of yearning for closer fellowship among the disciples of Christ, gatherings that at once prove and strengthen their oneness are a great desideratum, and a more fitting or beautiful locality, whose historic worth Mr. Summer's new work, "Memoirs of Jordans and the Chalfonts" illustrates, could hardly be found. HOUSE OF REST.

At the monthly meeting at the House of Rest on Friday, Miss von Kirchner, a Russian Stundist, pleaded earnestly for the sympathy and prayers of Christian friends on behalf of her persecuted countrymen. She told the story of her own conversion, and of the difficulties which had beset her path when turning from the errors of the Greek Church to the simple teachings of the Gospel. Banishment from home and friends, and threatened exile to Siberia followed, so that she was compelled to quit her native country, and face life alone. With true missionary spirit, she felt compelled, after many experiences, to return to Russia, and to tell the good news of Christ's salvation to her own people. She was not allowed to remain long in one place, but as opportunity occurred she sowed the good seed. The unjust accusations and fiery persecutions to which the Stundists are subjected were told in pathetic language.

Miss von Kirchner's appeal came as a challenge to English Christians to pray, to sympathise, and to work for a people whose only fault, in the eyes of Russia, is an adherence to God's truth.

TO THE FALLEN.—Some useful leaflets have been printed in connection with the Midnight Meeting Movement for distribution among unfortunates. They contain loving motherly counsel, well calculated to awaken happier memories. There is a space for the address to which the recipient can go for friendly assistance. The leaflets may be had (3d. per 100) of Mrs. Henry Fowler, Glebelands, South Woodford.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE tenth annual meeting of the National Vigilance Association was held on Thursday last, by kind permission of the Duke of Westminster, at Grosvenor House, W. There was a goodly attendance, the Rubens Room being well filled. In the unavoidable absence of the Duke, the chair was occupied by Lord Kinnaird.

The report, which was taken as read, was distributed in pamphlet form. It showed that the work of the Association continues with unfailing vigour, a constant stream of more or less difficult cases requiring prompt attention. One of the most conspicuous signs of improvement since the work began is the growth of assiduity and skill on the part of the police, both in London and the provinces, in taking up prosecutions for criminal vice; and this has, to some extent, relieved the Association from preventive work, and enabled it to give more time to other branches of its service. Both in the punishment of offences against young girls, and in the suppression of obscene photographs and advertisements, there is a wholesome accentuation all round of public opinion and decisive action. The most agreeable portion of the Association's work is the shelter and training of those in peril, and this department has been fruitful in a high degree. The Homes at Hackney, one for training elder girls in laundry and household work, and the other for the temporary shelter of young children, are going on well. There is a hearty and cheerful tone about the place which works for moral health, and it is found that the girls go out really fitted for life, and do well.

The report said: "A large proportion of the children who fall into immorality do so from sheer ignorance and inexperience of the world, from the slipshod and sodden ways of poverty and degradation in which they have been brought up; and while the Association is dealing with those who have already been brought to or over the edge of vice, it is most encouraging to believe that the gradual social improvement, upon which public feeling is now intent, is by degrees closing up the sources of the supply of the victims. The Association keeps up the Medical Home in Camden Town, and it is usually full. This model hospital is officered entirely by women; it is quiet and retired; it takes no more patients than can receive careful individual attention, and it works for physical and moral reform with equal care. That such patients should be left in the hands of good women is a point of critical importance, for their double maladies cannot be properly treated apart, and the soul-healing is more than half the work. The provincial work of the Association is in a healthy state. At Cardiff and Sunderland especially, a great deal of vigilance work is going on; the work in the Midlands has just been reorganised, and though the numbers of district centres might well be increased, there is much active vigilance work going on in other places which is not directed by the central office."

The CHAIRMAN, in a brief address, called attention to the wide diffusion of harmful literature. That "people are what they read" is more generally accepted than hitherto, and the fact involves serious considerations as to the repression of improper publications.

Mrs. HENRY FAWCETT pointed out that there is no curse so great as apparent impunity in wrong-doing; the individual wrong-doer becomes hardened, and society corrupted. Hence, when the Psalmist spoke of destroying the wicked (Ps. ci.) he was, as he declared, singing of "mercy and judgment," for judgment is the forerunner of mercy.

Dr. R. F. HORTON spoke of the Association as one of the most salutary influences in the England of to-day, being potent for what it prevents as well as for what it does. He went on to urge the importance of endeavours to rescue fallen men. The immoralities of society emanate almost entirely from men; hence the wisdom of stopping the demand which creates the supply, rather than continually tinkering at the supply, which only responds to the demand. Women fall almost wholly because betrayed by men, or because in want of bread. Men go wrong because of passions which, not being kept under control, are like a rampant wild beast within them. There is every reason to expect success in the work of reclaiming fallen men, for they do not plunge immediately into hopeless demoralisation, as women fall under the judgment of society. A man may have gone some distance in the way of evil, and yet, in the main, be a man of virtuous intentions. He had met no men who could be regarded as hopelessly vicious; but he had met men who were bitterly ashamed of themselves, and who could be saved if, before the sense of shame was dead, they were appealed to by fellow men. Their instinct of chivalry to women, their pity for women, and the recollection that they were sons of mothers, would help them to resist temptation. Therefore he suggested a mission to fallen men, corresponding to that to fallen women. In Holland, such endeavours had been attended with remarkable success. A man with a loving heart stationed at the doorway of haunts of evil had not only induced those on the downward course not to enter, but had done important rescue work. Every form of impurity brings hateful degradation, and what the sinning one needs is to reach some level where the storms of passion are still, so that the secret of purity may come down from God out of heaven.

After some earnest words by Lady HOPE and a melody by Madame ANTOINETTE STERLING, a forcible address was delivered by Mrs. ORMISTON CHANT, who spoke of the uphill character of the work. Prebendary H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE read from a recent pamphlet expressions professedly philosophical, which were, in fact, debasing to our human nature and a degradation to Christian society. Mr. PERCY W. BUNTING also pleaded the cause of the Association, speaking in detail of the excellent work of the Rescue, Preventive, and Medical Homes.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

WE have been having, for six or eight weeks back, remarkable blessing in our entire work in France and Switzerland.

In La Chaux-de-Fonds, the largest village of Switzerland, and of the world (30,000 inhabitants), our meetings lasted several nights till after one o'clock, so great was the power of the Spirit of God, and so large the number seeking for deliverance. Several remarkable cases of Divine healing have occurred. Amongst the 150 persons still remaining in the hall at one o'clock, after a Sunday evening service, only four were unconverted; we dealt with them as they were passing out, the spirit of God fell upon them, and they surrendered there and then, and testified of it in a way which left no possible room for doubt.

At an open air meeting of 500 on the slopes of the Jura, the unconverted son of the pastor of the parish, M. Rollier, a warm friend of ours, entered the orchard. He would not have been there but for the providential breaking of the pedal of his bicycle, with which he had intended to run a race that Sunday afternoon. He described afterwards that the moment he entered the outskirts of the meeting the Spirit of God used the words of the speaker, which smote him with conviction. After an hour and a-half of prayer for him kneeling on the grass, he came out before all to the penitent form. His testimony was thrilling indeed, and had a great effect upon the peasants. We then re-formed our ranks, placed our happy prisoner in the midst and marched down the side of the mountain to the village of St. Aubin, of which his father is pastor. Good news runs sometimes as fast as bad, and when our procession reached the rectory beside the old village church, the father and mother were standing there with tears flowing down their cheeks. They rushed forward to meet their son, while he ran to meet them.

The young man had been carefully brought up, and it was only about a year ago that he had commenced to grieve his parents' hearts in consequence of his sin and worldliness. Who can tell how far the careful training and the godly example of his parents helped the crowning work of his conversion? God had enabled us to repay a little the cordial brotherliness manifested towards us by Pastor Rollier during the days of persecution. He received our wounded into his house nine years ago, after the bloody attack of Montalchez, had their wounds washed and bound up, and his wife nursed a lieutenant through the illness consequent upon the wound in her head.

The next morning M. Rollier and I consulted as to the best way for the young man to take his stand for God right away amongst his college comrades. The same afternoon the college closed just in time to allow him to come with me to La Chaux-de-Fonds by rail, and just twenty-six hours after his conversion he was standing on the chair beside us in the middle of our ring in one of the public places of La Chaux-de-Fonds, surrounded by 1500 people, some of whom were scoffing, some holding bottles aloft in derision, some throwing sand, and gravel, and pebbles, but the greater part listening most attentively. He gave a splendid testimony, as did also one of our young officers, a converted Catholic of the old French noblesse, a young student of theology converted in our meetings; Major Peyron, senior, formerly a judge at the Commercial Court of Montpellier, was another speaker.

My dear wife, "La Maréchale," has just concluded a series of crowded meetings in Marseilles, during which a remarkable work of grace, resembling that of Havre and Rouen, has been accomplished by the Spirit of God.

My wife and I have decided to give our attention chiefly to the Swiss work this summer. We have now 64 corps in Switzerland, and I am organising special holiness meetings for the summer months. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN can obtain the list by writing to Major Peyron-Roussell, or myself, to our headquarters for French Switzerland, 11, Rue St. Pierre, Lausanne.

Just as I was about to close this letter news has come in of a startling accident in the village. On Sunday evening two young unconverted friends of Pastor Rollier's son took tea with us in his house. We prayed for them after tea. They were under much conviction, but instead of coming to our meeting went to a ball. The following day (yesterday) one of them fell from his bicycle in front of a waggon loaded with stones, and only escaped as by a miracle, the horse's foot having been upon his head and the wheel of the waggon having come all but over his body, crushing his side slightly. He says that as he lay there he saw hell and all his life pass before him. When he came to—after having been unconscious for an hour—he rushed off, in spite of his wounds, to the captain's quarters, flung himself sobbing into his arms, saying, "I've come to give myself to God." He found peace, testified at the evening meeting, and is now in bed suffering, but gloriously happy. Thus does God daily answer our prayers.

OUTLINE BIBLE STUDIES.

I.—SCRIPTURE BASKETS.

1. OF BLESSING. 2. OF FRUIT. 3. OF BREAD.

1. THE BASKET OF BLESSING.—Deut. xxviii. 5, "Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store."

The storehouse filled (v. 8). All fulness in Christ for us (Col. i. 19).

The treasure-house opened (v. 12). All opened and revealed through Christ (Eph. iii. 8).

The basket and store blessed (v. 5). Blessed us with all spiritual blessing (Eph. i. 3).

The basket filled, enjoyed, and used according to our faith (Eph. iii. 18, 19).

2. THE BASKET OF FRUIT.—Amos. viii. 1, "Behold a basket of summer fruit."

There are two kinds of fruit in life, the fruit of sin and the fruit of grace (Rom. vi. 21, 22).

There is a season for the perfecting of these fruits. Now (Luke xiii. 7).

There is a ripening of this fruit, both bad and good (Luke viii. 14, 15).

There will be gathering soon, some for destruction, and some for glory (Matt. xiii. 39).

3. THE BASKET OF BREAD.—Mark vi. 43, "And they took up twelve baskets full of fragments," etc.

There is bread enough and to spare from the Lord (Luke xv. 17).

There is a basket for each worker (Mark vi. 41.)

There is work for each to gather up the fragments, etc.

The storehouse is God's grace. The treasure-house is his Church. The basket is our individual capacity, and the basket and store blessed is present and future good. The condition of blessing our obedience. The measure of blessing his fulness.

"There are three requisites," says Mrs. Hannah More, "to the proper enjoyment of earthly blessings. A thankful reflection on the goodness of the giver; a deep sense of our unworthiness; and the recollection of the uncertainty of long possessing them. The first would make us grateful, the second humble, and the third moderate."

"A SAVIOUR WHO UNDERSTANDS."

Under this title an encouraging word appeared in The Christian of April 25, wherein the woman described in the earlier verses of John viii. was the character chiefly under consideration. One sentence let me quote :—

> There is no need to sentimentalise about this woman and her sin. The point is the compassionate understanding of Christ; He, knowing all, forgave all.

I cannot refrain from bringing to the writer's notice, as well as to that of your readers, that just as the spear of Abner (2 Sam. ii. 23) wherewith he slew Asahel, was as sharp behind as it was in front, so there is another point to this wonderful narrative to which the general reader is completely blind.

What are the conclusions of such an one as to its teachings? First, that a crime should not be punished, except by sinless judges; secondly, that the sin of which the woman stood accused needed no graver reprimand than did the utterance of a falsehood. On this account no doubt the earlier transcribers of the Gospels saw fit to omit the whole narrative from the sacred page as if it encouraged immorality. It is my privilege to show that as every beam of sunshine that brings light into our darkness carries with it heat as well, so this beautiful instance of the tender mercy of our Lord is equally grand for the strictness of its justice. What should we do when one utterance of Him who is the Truth appears to conflict with others? Is it not to examine the context and compare Scripture with Scripture? I will endeavour, by the unusual method of question and answer, to do this, so that any Sunday-school teacher may follow me.

Who were the men that brought this case before the Lord, as He began teaching in the Temple courts, early in the morning? The Scribes and Pharisees. What was their character? Hypocrites who combined teaching the law with violating its precepts (Matt. xxiii.). Did they go beyond this? Yes, they actually paid money, and sometimes heavily, for the commission of crimes which furthered their designs. Thus they gave thirty pieces of silver to Judas (Luke xxii. 5) to betray the Lord, and "large money" to the soldiers who guarded the tomb to deny his resurrection (Matt. xxviii. 12).

What was their purpose in bringing the woman before our Lord? Temptation with a view to accuse Him. Why are words written in the dust with the finger? To be large enough for bystanders to read, but not for the people at a distance. With Divine delicacy our Lord refrained from allowing the case to be discussed before those who had sought Him for other reasons. What did the Scribes and Pharisees argue from the stooping figure and the silence of our Saviour? That He was perplexed for a reply, and therefore urged Him to it. "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her," went like an arrow to each of their consciences, and while they pondered it the Lord finished what He had to write. It revealed to the conspirators that He knew each one of them had been guilty in bringing about her transgression.

Belshazzar earnestly desired Daniel to proclaim the meaning of the mysterious handwriting on the wall, little dreaming what it might be. The handwriting in the dust needed no explanation to those for whose eyes it was intended. That it should have been read aloud was the thing they most dreaded, so they went out one by one, leaving the woman alone.

The Lord then said, "Woman, where are those thine accusers? Hath no man condemned thee?" So the righteous Judge passed sentence of condemnation on the whited sepulchres who stood up as teachers of the law, and yet had contrived her fall. She was now fully warned, and needed nothing further from his lips than "Go, and sin no more!" Yes, indeed! we have a Saviour who understands.

E. K. Groves.

[A very important consideration, however, must not be overlooked. Jesus had come from heaven to earth to bear our iniquities, to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. Therefore He had power on earth to forgive sins. He forgave the weeping woman in Simon's house; the palsied man whom his friends let down through the roof; the thief on the cross; and many more. He could not condemn the woman whose sins He was on his way to Calvary to wash away by his own blood.—Ed.]

THE OPIUM COMMISSION REPORT.

Dear Sir,—Again and again we are destined to hear, "You anti-opiumists have been thoroughly beaten by a large majority; the Commission has recommended that the growth of the poppy and manufacture and sale of opium in British India should be continued. The question, long debated, may now be regarded as settled, by the voices of eight men to one." Against this we shall continue to reply, "The question is not settled, nor ever can be until it is settled to the satisfaction of Him who weighs all causes according to the standard of absolute truth and fact." How often in the history of mankind has the minority report of a Commission been endorsed by God's verdict, even as I believe the "Minute of Dissent" presented by Mr. H. J. Wilson, will be.

I remember another "Minute of Dissent" presented in the wilderness of Sinai by Joshua and Caleb to Moses and Aaron and all the congregation of Israel. A commission of twelve men had entered Canaan to report upon the land and its inhabitants, and to determine the question of the propriety of an immediate armed advance upon a people known to be warlike. The "majority report" of this commission emphatically protested against such a movement as perilous in the last degree. The "minority report," however, condemned these timorous counsels in the words, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it."

We all know which side the Divine verdict favoured, but unfortunately Israel would not listen to the "Minute of Dissent," no doubt saying, "Here are ten against two. Of course, the truth is with the ten." Israel was deceived, and the penalties were terrible and far-reaching, not less than thirty-eight years of wandering in the wilderness, and the disinheriting of a whole generation, which was excluded from the goodly land. Will England be deceived, and in her deception inflict upon herself, India, and China, losses far beyond human power to compute?

On the opium question the national conscience needs educating and enlightening. The churches must educate the national conscience, and the ministers must educate the churches. Let ministers study the question; especially let them read and digest a remarkable pamphlet of less than fifty pages by Mr. H. J. Wilson, entitled "Royal Commission on Opium, Minute of Dissent," published for one penny by the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, at Finsbury House, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

If light dawns on the churches generally upon this great question, it must dawn upon the country. At present England does not realise what the poppy plague means either in China or India. Indignation cannot be great when information is so small. As the needed information is diffused in the church and through the churches throughout the land let supplication keep pace with it. Faithful appeals to men must be supported by fervent appeals to God Let each Christian speak to God every day on this urgent matter. Let the churches every week at least address an Anti-opium petition to the Prince of the kings of the earth. Such united continuous prayer must have power in Heaven, and therefore in the House of Commons.

SAILORS IN THE CANARY ISLANDS.

Dear Sir,—For several years Mr. and Mrs. Searle have carried on work at the Sailors' Institute, Las Palmas, with singular devotion, blessed by a tolerable measure of success. The work has been done unostentatiously, and the support of the Institute has been, I believe, in very few hands. It was my fortune to reside next door to Mr. Searle for some time, and as I accompanied him on his visits to the sailors on their ships, I had ample opportunity of learning something of the value of the work which is being done.

Mr. and Mrs. Searle are peculiarly adapted for this special kind of labour in the great vineyard of the world, and Christians at home need only to be acquainted with the facts to take a livelier interest in them. There is a public service every Sunday night at the Institute, and this is the only building in which service is held all the year round, the English church being closed in the summer. Large numbers of English people are annually going to the Canary Islands, and they will be assured of a very hearty welcome at the Institute.—Yours faithfully,

J. Johnson Leak.

ON HISTORIC GROUND.

Where Roman legions landed from their mighty war-galleys, carrying with them, as they marched with sandalled feet, the wonders of an eastern civilisation and the might of military prowess; over those same sods, tramped by the stern-visaged hosts of Puritans who, hundreds of years later, followed Cromwell in his crusade for truth and the spread of a national commonwealth, there went forth on Whit-Monday last a very different band.

These latter-day visitors to Shawford Downs carried greater things than Roman civilisation and military tactics; they bore the blessing of the news of regeneration, and the glorious proclamation of the power and might of the conquering Christ, to bring deliverance to every sin-bound soul who had gathered about the wagon pulpit to listen to the glad message of peace.

Instead of "Ironside" soldiers of Cromwell, with their heavy-bladed swords of steel, and their sturdy blows for a national commonwealth, the servants of God who visited picturesque Shawford on Monday, June 3rd, were armed with the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, and were bent upon proclaiming a Divine commonwealth to all who would accept Jesus as Saviour and King.

The occasion was the great camp-meeting, inaugurated last year, and carried out again this, on somewhat similar lines.

The al-fresco meetings which continued, without a break, from three to half-past nine, were skilfully led by the practical ever-genial superintendent of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, Mr. Charles Edwards. (May I here correct a false impression that obtains in some places, that a presentation recently made to Mr. Edwards indicated his retirement? He was never more in evidence, and never looked more fit to do good service for God in this important, far-spreading mission, than now.)

Through nearly seven hours the Gospel message and waves of Gospel song rang out over the Downs, and were listened to earnestly by some thousands of people. The largest number of people who gathered at once would probably number 1700.

None who heard that sturdy champion of God, Mr. John McAll, will easily forget his trumpet notes of salvation, nor the earnest words of Messrs. Sinclair and Pitt, and the Misses Perks and Clibborn.

About 500 partook of tea in the pretty little mission hall of the Mission, close by, and at 7.30 a large party gathered inside the hall to finish the day with another, a final Gospel meeting. "We have had," said one of the workers, as he stepped into the train at ten o'clock that night, "what many men are clamouring for—an eight hours' working day."

May we all be increasingly alert for such opportunities as these Bank Holidays, and such places as Shawford Downs, for the proclamation to holiday crowds, of the glorious Gospel.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

Vichy is a town of casinos, hotels, parks, and baths, and is one of the principal watering places of Europe. It is laid out at great expense, for the most important of the mineral springs belong to the State. Situated in the Auvergne, in the centre of France, it is close to the volcanic range of mountains of the Puy de Dôme. Fifty thousand visitors of all nationalities flock thither every year, seeking health, pleasure, or both.

It has been my privilege, with a handful of God's children of different branches of the family, to inaugurate a small mission room in the heart of this centre of gaiety. An active Methodist pastor from a neighbouring town had hired it, and has promised to hold meetings regularly. It is hoped that visitors, members of different churches, may be able to afford help for Gospel meetings, Bible-readings, etc. We ask the earnest prayers of God's people that this effort may redound to his glory.

It may be that some who have regained their health at these far-famed springs of Vichy would be glad to give expression of their gratitude to God by aiding this modest work. If so their offering will be most gladly received and acknowledged by M. le Pasteur Boisson, Thiers, Puy de Dôme.—Yours in the Master's service. Geo. Whelpton.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

CONVENTION AT BIRMINGHAM, JUNE 1—4.

There was a fine glow of enthusiasm and earnestness pervading all the meetings of the Christian Endeavour Convention last week. The Metropolis of the Midlands is one of the strongholds of the movement in the British Islands, having nearly seventy societies enrolled in the local C. E. Union, with over 3600 active members. With a large proportion of these attending the gatherings, besides a goodly number of strangers, and nearly 2000 delegates from all parts of the United Kingdom (for whom hospitality was generously provided by the local friends for the four days), one hall was not sufficient to accommodate the crowds who flocked to the various gatherings, and the two largest halls in the city had to be chartered for the occasion—the Town Hall and Curzon Hall, each seating about 3000.

Beginning with the reception to the delegates by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Cadbury in the Town Hall on Saturday evening, the meetings were throughout a time of rich spiritual profit and holy inspiration, and should result in a widespread awakening of energy and an increase of zeal throughout the churches of the land.

There was an early prayer-meeting at 7.30 on Sunday morning in Curzon Hall, at which some hundreds of Endeavourers were present, and the Divine blessing was earnestly invoked. District meetings with the same object were also held simultaneously in a number of other parts of the city. Again, in the evening, at 8.15, Curzon Hall was crowded for a prayer and praise meeting, conducted by Rev. W. Ross, a returned missionary from the Congo. The special convention sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. J. B. Morgan, of Chester, his subject being the impression made upon the Jewish rulers by Peter and John at their arraignment after the healing of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate.

Commending the boldness of Peter, Mr. Morgan said: That attitude is to be recommended to Christian Endeavourers. A man need not apologise for being a Christian. There is too much of that halting weakness which allows the world its say and claims no say for Jesus Christ; which is afraid of a sharp sarcasm, and shrivels up before a jibe; which cannot bear to be called a saint, or fanatic, or enthusiast. I have sometimes been sanguine enough to think that the Gospel is quite as much worthy of enthusiasm as golf or tennis, politics or art, science or literature.

Wesley pleaded for men who hated nothing but sin, and feared nothing but God. Be that our standpoint: if we fear God, we shall hate sin. In consecrated loyalty and whole-hearted devotion, we shall stand "for Christ and the Church." In the world, but not of it, we shall stand for good citizenship, for sweeter manners, purer laws; for the best interests of the individual and the community. We shall not tamper with vice, however fairy-robed and plausibly presented. We sometimes speak of faith, hope, love as the cardinal Christian graces. I sometimes think that drunkenness, gambling, and impurity are the three cardinal disgraces of English life. Anyway, they work mischief enough to be met with uncompromising hostility.

The dauntless freedom of the two disciples was the result of Christ's teaching and influence. There lay the secret of their courage: the source of that quiet confidence and manifest power was in their close companionship with Christ. It is impossible for any man to stand face to face with Jesus Christ without being better or worse for it. It has in it the making of a Judas or a John. Rejected Christ spells love-disaster. Accepted, He is the way to all that is noble and heroic. The Christ influence upon a soul is as surely seen as the sun influence upon tree or flower. It will be seen in the manliness, the moral strength, the quenchless enthusiasm found in his society. It will be seen in the abiding peacefulnesss, the tender sympathy that abide in the soul, and glow and flow in daily deeds.

Can men looking at you and me see that we have been with Jesus? Could they bear that testimony, if they knew our life in its incomings and its outgoings, not only in the church, but in home and shop, and street and solitude?

Pointing to those two dauntless souls, Peter and John, I say that what Christ did for them He can do for us. Strength to battle with the world, courage to maintain the right, wisdom to understand the truth, grace to live and grace to die, are his gifts, and to be obtained in his companionship.

On Whit-Monday morning, at 9.30, there was a gathering for an hour of prayer and praise, in Curzon Hall, which was marked by much fervour and heartiness, and was a fitting prelude to the day's proceedings. This was followed by the first session of the Convention, over which Rev. W. S. Houghton presided. The subject for discussion was the "pledge" which all Christian Endeavourers take on joining the Society. The subject was treated in three able addresses, by Miss Coombs, a high-school teacher, and Revs. W. Y. Fullerton and T. T. Stephens. Mr. Houghton in his opening remarks, said that the two pillars on which the Christian Endeavour movement rested were personal consecration to Christ, and a pledge of active service. The summons of Christ to them was to be up and doing; if they had any truth in them it should never be hid. Mr. Fullerton's address, which was full of native humour, was on the disciplinary uses of the pledge. It was discipline, he said, that made the disciple, it was discipline that changed the mob into an army, and it was because young people needed discipline that the Christian Endeavour movement was so largely effective and so largely effectual for good.

Rev. James Mursell spoke on "Sources of Power," remarking that spiritual power is as essential in Christian effort as steam is to an engine. Incidentally he mentioned that, according to the arrangements originally made, Dr. Dale was to have presided over that meeting; and having recalled a notable sermon, in which Dr. Dale declared that even the Gospel could be of no avail unless those who preached it and professed its truths were touched by the Holy Spirit, Mr. Mursell said it was not until they got to an end of themselves and their own resources—whether they be few or many, great or small—that they would get to the sources of Divine power in the presence of the Holy Spirit.

FREE PARLIAMENT.

The meeting then resolved itself into a free parliament, three minutes being allowed to each delegate who wished to speak. This gave an opportunity to a number of friends to contribute useful hints and information. One spoke on missionary work, remarking that his own and several neighbouring societies connected with one denomination had joined together to contribute enough to support a worker in the foreign field; another spoke on temperance, and others related their personal experience in the work of the Christian Endeavour Society, special reference being made to the observance or violation of the pledge. Several delegates urged strongly the imperative duty of members to keep the pledge in its entirety as a sacred obligation, and spoke deprecatingly of the tendency to modify it, and perform it only half-heartedly. One of the speakers (Mr. T. R. Alderwick, of Bristol) was warmly applauded when he urged that the Christian Endeavour Society should capture our national sports. He believed it could be done, and the matter was worthy of anxious consideration. His credentials for approaching the Convention on the subject, were that he was captain of what was probably the best Y.M.C.A. cricket club in existence, and a member of the committee of the Gloucestershire County Cricket Club. The national sports ought to be won over to the side of religion, and the accomplishment of that end should be hastened as much as possible. A crisis had been reached in this country in regard to the matter, and if our popular games were not secured for the kingdom of God, the devil would get hold of them. Then they would sink lower and lower until they became so degraded that no decent man or woman would be able to have anything to do with them.

In the afternoon there were sectional "rallies," the Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc., meeting in chapels connected with their respective denominations. The most popular afternoon meeting, however, was the junior Christian Endeavourers' rally at Carr's Lane Chapel. All who attended felt that it was one of the most interesting features of the Convention.

In the centre of the chapel were mustered a number of junior societies from the neighbourhood, whilst the sides and gallery were full of eager spectators, many of whom were, doubtless, junior superintendents. One idea ran through the meeting, viz., "the Giant C.E.," and various speakers dealt with the different parts of the giant's body, such as "the Giant's Eyes," Look-out Committee; "heart," Prayer Meeting Committee; "tongue," Music Committee; "hands," Social and Sunshine Committee; "feet," Missionary Committee. As each speaker rose, juniors from different societies mounted the pulpit and represented the committee referred to. All did their part splendidly, but special mention must be made of the Missionary and Social and Sunshine committees. Rev. G. A. Harris, of the South Seas, in true "junior" fashion, asked several questions from his committee, to which they answered by presenting a banner, inscribed "I am the Light of the World," with a lighted candle underneath; a large picture of the missionary ship John Williams, and a large open Bible, all of which were enthusiastically received. But it was reserved to the Carrs-lane Juniors, representing the Social and Sunshine Committee, to create the sensation of the meeting. They carried in their arms bunches of flowers, oranges, dolls, scrapbooks, kites, etc., which on descending from the platform they very prettily handed to a poor old man and woman, and a number of scantily-clad slum children. The effect was thrilling, and was heightened as some of the juniors stooped to kiss their poorer brothers and sisters. Truly, this was a representation of real Christian Endeavour, and many found it difficult to keep back their tears as they watched the scene.

Then followed testimonies from several superintendents, one of whom said she was often asked if the C.E. meetings did not tend to make the juniors priggish, to which she replied, very energetically, "Come and see."

In the evening crowded meetings were held simultaneously in the Town Hall and Curzon Hall, a report of the year's progress, prepared by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin being presented at each meeting.

We have all discovered, said Mr. Chaplin, that the letters C.E. stand for an infinite variety of phrases. If I may add to the list, I should say these letters stand for Continual Enlargements. During the year we have enlarged our borders in every direction, and these Continual Enlargements are Christian Evidences of the most eloquent and convincing kind. They are a glorious inspiration to strong faith, and an invaluable tonic for faith that is weak. Last year we reported a total enrolment in the United Kingdom of 1453 societies. Since then we have added 1192 companies to our army, making a present grand total of 2645 societies in Great Britain and Ireland.

Some societies have not yet sent in their returns this year; but reckoning them as having members in the same proportion as other societies, and allowing for eighty discontinued, the membership will be 77,917 active, 32,237 associate, 10,879 honorary. So that the Christian Endeavourers of the United Kingdom number 121,033—a mighty army made up of the very flower of the life of our Christian churches. These societies are divided among the denominations thus:—Baptist, 791; Congregational, 733; Presbyterian, 182; Episcopal, 5; Wesleyan, 63; Primitive Methodist, 124; Bible Christians, 41; United Methodist Free Church, 175; Methodist New Connexion, 132. Of the 1192 societies organised since the last convention, more than 100 are junior. We regard the multiplication of these junior societies as most inspiringly prophetic of the future power and usefulness of our churches. If the older church members of to-day had been educated in Junior and Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour, there would be fewer backsliders, fewer lukewarm Christians, to discourage pastors and earnest workers.

Some idea of how far the societies have benefited the churches may be gleaned from the fact that 1953 societies report that 6784 Christian Endeavourers have become Church members during the year. This is a matter we shall do well to press upon our members with special urgency. Every Christian should be a member of some section of Christ's Church. There is no other place for one who has begun to follow Christ but the Church of Christ. He belongs there just as much as a soldier belongs to an army, or as much as a child belongs to his father's house. Then during the year 5789 associate members have become active. This is cause for devoutest thanksgiving. It means that 5789 youthful minds have passed from indecision to decision—that these young souls have been brought out of spiritual bondage and darkness into the light and liberty of the children of God.

The Y.P.S.C.E. has most certainly found a home and a welcome in hot countries and in cold, in highly-civilised nations and among the simplest and rudest tribes. Someone asks: "What about the creed of this great multitude of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues?" Well, there is one resolution which we can all pass with enthusiastic unanimity, one determination to which we all subscribe. It is this:—

E'er since by faith I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die.

Addresses were given in both halls on "Foreign Missions" and on "Home Missions." Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, speaking in place of Mr. Chalmers, of New Guinea, said that missionary work was essentially the outcome of spiritual life. If the life of Christ was within their hearts it would impel them to missionary work at home and abroad, and he believed the practical way of accomplishing it was to train in their Endeavour Societies the missionaries of the coming days. Everyone agreed that the man who had to go abroad was not to be the man who could not get on at home. Those with the choicest culture, the most marked and beautiful talents, were the ones who were needed; and the Christian Endeavour Society was the ground to which they should look for them.

Speaking on home mission work, Rev. J. S. Drummond said England needs Christ, and Christ needs England. Christ wants you—everyone of you who call yourselves by his Name—to help in winning England for Him. Begin where you live, and in connection with your own church. Does your church show apathy and indifference to aggressive work—then you are the people to stir it up. If you are true to your pledge, and take some part in every meeting, that means you can speak for Christ; then if you can speak in your own meeting, you can speak outside. And if you can speak you ought to; the talent is the call. Go where no one else is working. Get at a particular district and peg away there. Then as to the villages, you can make tours out there, and rouse the neglected people in those out-of-the-way places. Some of you can go in for the sanctification of the cycle. Those who cannot speak to a crowd can speak to individuals; the population of England is to be saved by ones and twos.

Tuesday's proceedings were opened, like those of the previous day, with an hour devoted to prayer and praise. Presiding over the session which followed, Rev. G. R. Wedgwood, of Dublin, said he brought hearty greetings from between sixty and seventy societies in Ireland, with about 3000 members. He was able to report progress in the Emerald Isle; for one fact worth noting was that a committee of the Irish Methodist Conference which was appointed to consider what steps should be taken for the spiritual advantage of the young, had unanimously recommended the Conference to approve of the principles and aims of the Christian Endeavour Society, and to urge the formation of societies wherever practicable.

THE JUNIOR SOCIETIES.

In a well-written and well-read paper on "Junior Societies: Their Need and Value," alluding to the terrible hold which sin of all sorts seems to have on the men and women and young people of our land, Miss Townsend asked, What can we do to bring about a purer, holier state of things? The thing we can do, ought to do, and must do, is to save the children. They are round about us in tens of thousands; they are in our churches and Sunday-schools, brought up in respectable Christian homes very often, and yet many of them are never pointed to the Saviour. Look at the children in our streets and alleys, the boys and girls who know nothing of purity and righteousness simply because they have been born in the midst of evil and misery, and have been acquainted with nothing else all their lives. It was for these that Christ died. While they are young at any rate they are not responsible for their position; it is for us to win them and save them from saddened and ruined lives.

How can we help them? The work of the Sunday-school is not sufficient, and the Church must supplement that work if they are to be saved. To a very large extent we can do so by the Junior Endeavour Society. There are hundreds of children who never go to any religious service; they are not well-dressed enough to go to school on Sunday, and there is no meeting, in very many cases, of sufficient interest to draw them at other times. I never heard of a child who did not like these meetings. The very poorest and naughtiest will come; their clothes don't matter on a week-night, and if they only feel they are welcome, they will soon be as earnest and eager as well-brought-up children.

The Junior Endeavour is doing, and has before it, a magnificent work, but it has need to be active and to use all its power. Satan spares no pains; he thinks the children are worth having, and he does his best to steal and ruin them. Let the Endeavour Society look after them, and think no trouble too great to win the little children, to fill their lives with happiness, to fit them for consecrated work, and prepare them for glory.

Miss Alice Bennett read a paper on the management and development of junior societies, and Revs. J. F. Hughes and W. Bainbridge spoke on "The Service of Endeavour to the Church," and "The Influence of Endeavour on the Church." A free parliament followed, eight delegates taking part. One friend told of encouraging work in the Berkshire villages; another of a junior society which had led to the starting of a senior one. An Endeavourer from Liverpool gave some particulars of the floating society which had been formed for the benefit of men at sea. Earnest prayer was also asked for the Christian Endeavourers in Madagascar in this their time of trial.

PHASES OF ENDEAVOUR.

Rev. F. B. Meyer presided in the afternoon, and in a few earnest sentences besought all who truly desired to be good servants in the cause of Christ to seek the special anointing of the Holy Spirit. Several practical papers were then read on the topics:—"The Endeavourer at Home," "The Endeavourer in Business," "The Endeavourer as a Citizen," and "Christian Endeavour in Relation to Social Evils." Miss Webb, speaking on the importance of love at home, said that Endeavourers must realise that Christianity is a principle to be carried into every department of life, and sometimes their simplest duties were the noblest opportunity for glorifying their Father. Mr. R. W. Davies remarked that Endeavourers were wanted in business to show that a business life and a Christ-like life were not incompatible. Speaking of the drink traffic, he asked if it was possible for any Christian to be associated with any branch of this trade. Was it possible that Christians for the sake of profits would touch the unclean thing? Those who were on the threshold of their business career, he urged to be faithful in little things, to be scrupulous about a penny or a postage stamp, and avoid the simplest deviation from the truth.

Rev. G. Howard James dealt vigorously with the subject of our social evils, and carried the meeting with him as he pointed out the enemies that are to be fought, and called upon Endeavourers to concentrate their forces against them. There is drunkenness stalking through the land like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour; there is lust, so differently regarded on earth and in heaven; there is gambling, the meanest passion that ever demoralised a nation, and has its hold alike on rich and poor, prince and pauper. Besides these three evils he mentioned others, among them greed, the passion for gold and what gold could buy. Speaking of the relation of the Christian Endeavour Movement to the social evils, he said their aim must be to destroy, root and branch, the works of the devil. These burning questions are themes that need to be studied by young Christians, not in the heated atmosphere of party meetings, but in the spirit of prayer. Every. Christian Endeavour Society ought to be a Temperance Society, a White Cross Brigade, an Anti-Gambling League, and to uphold the banner of love and brotherhood. Political life as well as social life must claim attention. A State does not become Christian by the establishment of religion any more than a bookmaker becomes an honest man by building a church; a State becomes Christian by the application of Christian principles to its Government, not by the profession but by the practice of Christianity.

A resolution, to be sent to the Government, in favour of the Local Veto Bill, was enthusiastically adopted. A quarter of an hour's free parliament followed, and then, in a series of resolutions, the thanks of the visitors were presented to the Birmingham friends for their hearty reception and generous hospitality, and to the committee who had made such excellent arrangements for the convention. It was announced that next year's Convention is to be held in Bristol.

In the evening both Halls were again crowded for the closing session of the Convention, Mr. D. Morris, of Marple, presiding in the Town Hall, and Mr. E. Towers, of London, in Curzon Hall. The proceedings in both meetings were almost an exact counterpart of each other, the subject for consideration being "Christian Endeavour and Church Membership."

Following the discussion in either hall an opportunity was found for about fourteen ministers, representing Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist Churches, to give three-minute testimonies to the usefulness of the C.E. Society in their Churches. These pastors were from English, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh Churches, and each declared that the society had been of most practical value. This part of the proceedings was most interesting, every succeeding speaker making some good point, and the audience receiving each one with hearty cheers.

The closing consecration services were felt by all to be the most solemn seasons in the Convention. The delegates from the Northern counties and towns, with those from Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, took up their positions in the Town Hall, while the Southern division mustered in Curzon Hall, the leaders of the respective gatherings being Revs. W. H. Towers and E. R. Hassé. Here again the order of proceedings was identical in the two halls. Before going on with the service, the chairman appealed to all those who believed that they had been the means, in God's hands, of leading one soul to the Saviour since last year's Convention in London, to rise in their places, and immediately several hundreds responded. Then those were asked to rise who would try to lead at least one more soul to Christ before the convention of 1896, and almost every individual present stood up. Then pastors, Sunday-school workers, and members of the different C.E. committees followed the chairman in consecration responses.

The roll-call of the counties and large towns was now called, and a most earnest time it was; each batch of delegates responding unitedly with a text of Scripture or the singing of a hymn. The Irish, the Scotch, and the Welsh delegates responded in a peculiarly appropriate manner, some of the responses being sung to the national airs, and in the national tongue. Finally all present joined hands and repeated together the Mizpah benediction, "The Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from another."

Thus closed a most helpful and stimulating series of gatherings, the effect and memory of which will doubtless have a permanent influence on hundreds of young lives, inspiring them to holier aspirations and more energetic service "for Christ and the Church" in days to come.

THE POPPY BLIGHT IN 1893-94.

From a "resolution" of the Government of Bengal, just out, we find that the opium crop of last year—the time of the Royal Commission—has run short by about 20,000 maunds—a maund is eighty pounds—and the average price of the drug is about 16s. per pound. Here is a great loss, and the strange thing about it is this: The poppy pod came to apparent perfection, and no one knew that there was anything wrong until the pods were ripe and lanced; then it was found that the juice would not issue. There was a singular and a strange blight never known before. The article seemed to be there, but it would not come forth; as if the God of nature would say, "You shall not yield the poison any longer."

The Government of Bengal and the opium staff are all at their wit's end, and know not how to solve the mystery. May we not say, in the language of the magicians of Egypt, "This is the finger of God." He has sent a tiny worm to impede the secretion of the juice that otherwise would run freely. The late attempt to justify the wicked traffic through a so-called Royal Commission seems to be to me the climax of the iniquity, and it may be that the Righteous Ruler of all has said, "Hitherto, but no further!" There is a limit to the forbearance of the Almighty. When will our rulers learn wisdom?

Letters to the Editor.

INTERPRETATION OF PROPHECY.

CANNOT DIFFERING SYSTEMS BE RECONCILED?

Dear Sir,—The suggestion of Mr. St. Dalmas in to-day's "Christian" is worthy of prayerful consideration. In all ages of the Church's history there have been differences of judgment, and variations in interpretations of Scripture. The Divine rule of action in things not essential is laid down in Phil. iii. 16, and Romans xiv. 1-8. It is mutual forbearance. If this rule were obeyed, it would save us from the unhappy contentions so often manifested.

The Master's Word in the beginning was, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." We manifest our discipleship, not by agreement and doctrine, but by mutual love, and when love burns brightly we will be able to discern the points of agreement, rather than contend on the points of difference.

In the two great schools of Pre-millennialists, are there not many points both can agree on? Will it not be found that the truth lies between the extremes? The Historicists believe the opening of the seven-sealed book has been in course of fulfilment all through this age; and that the Pope, as the head of Papacy, is "the Antichrist." Is there not truth in this? Let any candid reader take up any book of the Historical school, and he will be struck with the remarkable analogy between the sixth chapter of Revelation and the history of the Church in the first four centuries. Does not the Pope sit in "the temple of God" as spoken of in 1 Cor. iii. 17? But, on the other hand, does the Historic "filment" (as it has been called) preclude a future fulfilment when the principles of evil will have become focussed, so to speak, in the manifestation of the great Satanic Trinity, "the Dragon," "the Beast," and "the False Prophet," and when of necessity the judgments of God will be intensified? Is not the Book of Revelation the book of the conflict between "the seed of the woman" and "the serpent" and the final victory of God and good over Satan and sin? That conflict is now going on, therefore there is the Historic or present-age application. It will reach its climax in the coming crisis, and this gives the Future or Tribulation application.

As a Futurist, believing in the immediate coming of Christ for his Church, to be followed by a great crisis connected with the rise of a personal Antichrist, I am thankful for the light I have received through the writers of the Historical school. I would take this opportunity to express my thankfulness for the helpful and suggestive teaching in the papers on "The Unveiling," now appearing in The Christian. Combining, as they do, a close study of Scripture, a width of reading, and a ripe experience, I have found them exceedingly instructive. I do not understand them as the denial of a future fulfilment, but rather the united testimony of Scripture that the Book of Revelation is the book of God's dealings with the principles of evil in its application to this age.

And this brings me to the question, Have all the writers of the Reformation who have interpreted the Book of Revelation on the Historic lines, been altogether outside the guidance of the Spirit of God? Or rather, was not their interpretation the mind of the Spirit for the time and existing conditions they were in? and is not the same Spirit guiding those who in this century have brought out a further and fuller interpretation, as meeting the exigencies of the time, but which is in no wise contradictory in reality? The Antichrist of this age being the Papacy does not make it impossible for the rise of a personal Antichrist in the coming age, who will be actuated by the same spirit as the Papacy. "Does the Church pass through the tribulation?" may be answered by the question, "Has not the Church been passing through her tribulation?"

Take the second and third chapters of Revelation. They are addresses to seven actual existing assemblies. Therefore, they may be interpreted as primarily representative of "Church" condition. But as assemblies are made up of individuals, they can rightly be applied to individual condition. But the Book they appear in, the number seven, being the number of completeness, the order in which they are placed, the meaning of their names, all point to a prophetic application, and a review of the history of the Church on earth proves there has been a sevenfold condition, analagous to the conditions described in these seven addresses. This threefold application is not in any way confused or contradictory. How absurd it would be, then, to found three schools on these three interpretations!

There is one important point that should not be overlooked. There are three distinct lines of teaching as to the time of the Lord's coming.

One school has reckoned up days and years, and has fixed not only the year and the day, but the very hour when the Lord will come! Past failures in this direction have placed this school very much in the shadow, and rule it out as a subject for consideration. Another school assert certain events must take place before the Lord comes, while they believe the Lord is coming again personally, yet there is no possibility of his coming this year, and no prospect of his return for some years to come. They are firm believers in his coming and his personal reign on the earth, but believe the tribulation must first intervene.

The third school teaches we are to look for the Lord to come at any moment as the "Morning Star" for the Church, and thus that the Church will not pass through the coming Tribulation, but be associated with Christ in his rule over the nations.

It is the latter teaching that has gained the distinctive foothold during the last twenty-five years, although many gifted and godly men believe the second.

I would suggest that this question might be taken up in a conference of teachers on both sides, and by waiting on the Lord grace might be given to fully know his mind. An united testimony on the Lord's Second Coming would carry great power with it. Can we not have it?—Yours sincerely,

J. J. Sims.

18, Victoria-villas, Brondesbury-road, London, N.W., June 6, 1895.

Dear Sir,—An elder brother calling on me a few days ago told me of a conference held a few years since in which the question whether the saints are to be caught up before the Tribulation, or to pass through it, was exhaustively discussed. For two days the advocates on either side brought forth their arguments. A very aged, highly esteemed, and much loved brother had been invited as a sort of balance wheel, but had taken no part in the discussion until, at the close, one of the chief speakers said they had continued their silvern speech much too long, and begged him to break his golden silence and give them his opinion. Under their kindly pressure, he at last referred to a passage in Rev. xx., which he understood to mean that those who were beheaded, the martyrs of Christ, would be raised to reign with Him a thousand years; but that the rest, including themselves, would be raised after the thousand years and appear at the great white throne. This was so utterly off the lines that the former disputants were thrown into each other's arms, for their difference of ideas was trivial compared with the distance at which their patriarchal brother stood from both.

A converted Brahmin was once pressed to give his views on the above prophetic question. He not unwisely replied, "Mr. M. who has studied his Bible alone for fifty years, and Mr. N. who has also done the same thing for the same time, hold opposite views. Dr. M. thinks this is true, and Dr. B. thinks the other; Henry D. is sure we shall, and Henry G. is sure we shall not; would it not be presumptuous in a young man like me to attempt to form an opinion on a subject on which his elders so disagree?" If this were only a parable or a fable, which it is not, the moral would be obvious.

My friend went on to say that the truth of the Lord's Coming, or any other truth, is divinely important in its own place, and in due proportion with other truth; but when it is made a specialty it becomes eccentric and hurtful, as proved to be the case among the Thessalonians.

Christians are God's specialists in relation to the world; but they must not make specialties of parts of the truth. The Gospel of God is one harmonious whole. Even in calling attention to a forgotten truth, it should be replaced in its true position, and as a component part of the whole truth of the Gospel.

No one has any right to object to the individual or united consideration of this or any other subject; but the authoritative propounding from a public platform of doctrines not specifically affirmed in Scripture before audiences unqualified to form an opinion upon them, is, I think, to go beyond the legitimate function of "pastors and teachers," and tends to divide Christians into parties under the banners of opposing leaders: "For [among carnal Corinthians] there must be sects (or schisms) among you, that they that are approved among you may be made manifest" (1 Cor. xi. 19) An Elder.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of this week, I observe a letter from Rev. Henry Brooke accusing me of what would certainly have been most unchristian arrogance, if I had been guilty of it.

The charge is that an article written by me has recently appeared in The Morning Star, that it deals with alleged errors of the Historical School, and is headed "Divine Wisdom and Human Folly," from which Mr. Brooke infers that I regard my own opinions as Divine Wisdom and his views as human folly.

Such a charge would never, I trust, have been made by any of my intimate acquaintances; and had Mr. Brooke followed our Lord's injunction by writing first to me and pointing out the supposed fault, he would have been spared the pain which I am sure he will feel when he finds that he has, on two occasions at least, publicly defamed a brother in Christ.

The article to which he alludes is a fragment from one of the chapters in my recently published book, "The Great Prophecies of the Centuries." A proof-copy of this chapter was sent to Birmingham, to be read in lieu of an address which illness prevented me from delivering. Its title was, and is, "Proofs of Divine Inspiration"; and its object is to show that the Scriptural Cosmogony and the Evidence of Prophecy are the credentials of the Bible, and are amply sufficient to vindicate its Divine origin against all the efforts of sceptics and "higher critics." "Divine Wisdom and Human Folly" would not, therefore, have been a very inappropriate title for the chapter, though I have no remembrance of having suggested it.

Now, in dealing with the Evidence of Prophecy, I endeavoured to prove that it is not weakened by diversity of interpretation, because such diversity is caused simply by non-natural methods of exposition. This led me on to a brief discussion of some of the methods, and about half a page deals with what I believe to be the errors of Historicism.

Unfortunately, the half page was included in the extract that appeared in The Morning Star, under the heading mentioned by Mr. Brooke. But how it got into the magazine, or who selected the extract and gave it its title, I do not know. My permission for its insertion was neither given nor asked; had it been asked, I should certainly have declined the title as being most inappropriate to the fragment of the chapter which was quoted.

It will now, I trust, be evident to Mr. Brooke that the comparison between his views and my own, which he supposes himself to have detected, was neither made nor thought of by me. The prayer which for some time has been earliest upon my lips in the morning is "Hallowed be Thy Name;" my constant desire is that it may be granted, not only in my thoughts and conduct, but also in my influence upon others. For on all sides both the name and the revelation of God is being degraded to a human level; so that it will presently be easy for an unbelieving world to deny Him altogether. It would be a strange result of such a conviction if I were presumptuously to identify opinions of my own with "Divine Wisdom."

Prophetic differences should not be allowed to separate real believers in the Lord Jesus. It would be a great pleasure to me to join with Historicists in spreading the great and solemn tidings that the Lord is at hand, in striving to pull as many as we can out of the stream of corruption, and in rejoicing together when even one voice is added to swell the chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb that has been slain, to receive the power, and riches, and wisdom, and might, and honour, and glory, and blessing!"—Very sincerely yours, G. H. Pember.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—This institution recently held its ninth annual meeting. A great amount of good work is being effected among the parishioners by the various agencies at work. The splendid library is open to all comers, absolutely free. The various classes are an important feature; in these the process of education is carried on, and many a youth may be equipped for the business of life by special study under competent teachers. The one depressing note in the anniversary proceedings was the want of funds. The secretary and librarian, Mr. G. F. Hilcken, will be glad to hear from any friends who may be willing to co-operate in such a noble cause.—James Bartlett.

ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY.

Bishop Mitchinson, D.D., presided on Friday at the annual meeting of the London Anti-Vivisection Society, held at St. James's Hall. In their report, the committee noted an increasing interest in the work of the Society, but regretted the small response to the urgent appeal for additional funds, and reminded the members that without more liberal support the operations of the Society must of necessity be restricted.

The Chairman pointed out the danger and moral wrong of absolutely unbridled research, which was the besetting sin of human nature. Rev. Nevison Loraine declared that the dissection of living animals, or otherwise performing painful experiments upon them in the alleged interest of scientific research, was to be reprehended upon religious, moral, and humane grounds, and asking all Members of Parliament to support a bill by which it might be prohibited. Vivisectionists had not answered the objections of this society, which attacked acts and methods, not men. Mrs. Henry Lee said the interests of true science could never be advanced by cruel and unnatural methods. Let them oppose this hideous thing because it was contrary to the law of God, and inflicted great torture upon dumb animals. Vivisection was a scientific delusion, and they ought to oppose this scientific cruelty in the interests of children. Dr. A. Wall moved:—"That this meeting considers vivisection to be contrary to the teaching of true science, and that any results claimed to have been obtained do not justify the practice, which has been useless, fallacious, and misleading." Dr. J. H. Clarke seconded, and the proposition was agreed to. Col. Waterson dwelt on the neglect of the authorities to enforce the Vivisection, Act which offered great encouragement for the evasion or infraction of the statute, and while considering that the present attitude of the Home Office, more especially as regarded inspection of experiments, rendered the statute nugatory, the meeting was of opinion that even if sternly administered, it would afford insufficient protection to animals liable to vivisection. Addresses followed by Mr. George Candy, Q.C., Mr. C. L. Money, Rev. A. Fillingham, and Mrs. Gordon.

AMONG JEWS IN NEW YORK.

"The Church of Sea and Land" is the name given by Mr. Hermann Warszawiak to the building in which he now holds meetings for his Jewish brethren in New York. The opening service was held on May 18th, when more than eight hundred Jews and Jewesses met to hear an address on "Which is the true and better religion—Judaism or Christianity?" After the service 485 persons asked for and received a copy of the New Testament, in either Hebrew, Yiddish, German, or English.

Mr. Warszawiak is hoping that ere long he will be able to erect a building to be called "Christ's Synagogue," where a Jewish-Christian congregation may meet for worship on the Lord's Day as well as on week days, and not on Saturdays only, as is now the case. Mr. Warszawiak's address is 78, Bible House, New York.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE, M.P., in a published letter, says he fears there is not the slightest prospect of the drink evil being dealt with in Parliament so far as England is concerned.

"AMONG BERLIN CABMEN."—We are requested to intimate that friends who desire to help on the work of Mrs. Davies may communicate with Mr. A. D. Dodds, Rock Villa, E. Liss.

THE LONDON CITY MISSIONARIES held on Tuesday week their annual outing, Lowestoft being this year the chosen spot. The day was spent in full enjoyment of the beauties of the place; but in the afternoon a large open-air service was conducted on the sands, the L.C.M. Mission choir leading. Short "after tea" meetings were addressed by Revs. C. D'Aquilar Lawrence, rector of Christ Church, and W. Hay Chapman, the Mayor of Lowestoft, Revs. J. M. Hamilton, and James Bolton, Miss Colman, and others.

WEST GREENWICH RAGGED SCHOOL.—There was a seasonable freshness in making the forty-fifth annual meeting of this institution take the form of a garden party, as was done in the grounds of Avalon House, Blackheath, on Saturday afternoon last. The report, read by the secretary, Mr. Maclure, gave a good account of the work done in all the departments through the year, including the Working Lads' Institute, at a total cost of £215, with a deficit due to the treasurer of £14. Rev. E. C. Leete, as chairman, warmly commended the work, especially from its spiritual side, as did also Rev. Storer Clark, Mr. Shrimpton, and other friends. Mr. John Kirk emphasised the scheme for extending the fortnightly holidays for drooping and weakly children through the Ragged School Union Holiday Homes.

MR. C. INGLIS AT ST. GILES'.

We have been greatly cheered by what the Lord has graciously permitted us to see in St. Giles' Christian Mission, through the special meetings just brought to a close by Mr. Charles Inglis. His former mission was so greatly owned and blessed of God in the salvation of souls, many of whom have stood firm and are now workers in the Master's vineyard, that we urged him to pay us another visit.

For the past fortnight Mr. Inglis has been preaching daily in our mission church, and the Spirit of God has carried the message home with loving power to the hearts of not a few. Many have gone into the inquiry room to have the plan of salvation put before them more clearly, and left rejoicing in a newly found Saviour. The majority of those who have been led to Christ are men and boys. It has been a great joy to us not only to see many of the lads in our Homes seeking Christ, but men who have been steeped in sin making a full surrender of themselves to the Lord Jesus, and now sitting at his feet, clothed and in their right mind.

Mr. Inglis is now preaching at the Edinboro' Castle, and in August and September holds services at the Polytechnic. Wm. Wheatley.

STOKE NEWINGTON CONVENTION.

The ninth annual holiness convention was held in Wellington-road Hall, Stoke Newington, N., and was a time rich in blessing. The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit was the most prominent theme of the week. The effects of his presence were clearly manifest in the unity and liberty that prevailed on the platform, and by the deep conviction that rested upon the audience at each gathering, as the different speakers bore personal testimony to the need of the Holy Ghost for victorious love and successful service.

Prof. Rendel Harris gave the opening address, and struck what proved to be the key-note for the week. Nor will it be easy to forget the addresses of Rev. F. Paynter, Mr. W. J. Govan, Revs. J. Brash, E. W. Whaley, and J. H. Hopkins.

The meetings were presided over by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, who gave the closing address on Whit Sunday evening, from Acts vi. 5, "A man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost."

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE IN IRELAND will hold its annual conference at Belfast in September next. The secretary (Mr. A. J. Arnold) has just returned from Ireland, where he has been making the final arrangements, and there is every promise of a successful gathering. Amongst those from a distance who have promised to speak at the conference are Canon Bell, of Cheltenham; Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham; Dr. Marshall Lang and Principal Douglas, of Glasgow; Revs. G. H. C. Macgregor and Peter Thompson, of London. The Archbishop of Dublin will be present and take a prominent part in the proceedings. His Grace has always been a warm friend of the Alliance.

CARRUBBERS' CLOSE MISSION, EDINBURGH.—The fourteenth annual Gospel temperance social gathering in connection with Carrubbers' Close Mission was recently held in the large hall of the Mission, High-street, Edinburgh, when Professor A. R. Simpson, M.D., presided over a crowded attendance. The chairman, after referring to the successful work carried on for many years by the Mission, said the Government were entitled to credit for seeking to grapple with the drink problem. Mr. G. A. Barclay then gave in the report upon the work of the year, which was of a satisfactory nature. Professor Marcus Dods followed with an address on temptation, and how to overcome it. Other addresses were given by Rev. James Robertson, Mr. James Guthrie, of Brechin, and Mr. and Mrs. Man Sukh Lal, of Bombay.

BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.—The s.s. Berlin, of the American Line, left New York on Wednesday last, and arrives at Southampton on Friday next, having on board one hundred and fifty delegates to the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union Convention, to be held in London next week. The steamer also carries the polyglot petition with its two million signatures, packed in fourteen large cases. The petition is to be exhibited at the great Convention in the Albert Hall on June 20. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard will head a large demonstration of the British Women's Temperance Association to meet the American and Canadian contingent at Waterloo Station on Friday evening next. Amongst the American pilgrims who are coming to England, and then proceeding to visit the Grindelwald Conference, are Mother Stewart, of Ohio, the famous leader of the Whisky Crusade, who is now seventy years of age and founder of the British Women's Temperance Association in 1876; and Mrs. Todd, President of the Canadian Women's Christian Temperance Union, and other leaders of the movement.

HOLIDAY LITERATURE.

How to Visit Switzerland. Edited by Dr. H. S. Lunn. (2s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) To his many other services in connection with the famed Grindelwald summer gatherings, Dr. Lunn has added a substantial one in this excellent and exhaustive introduction to "the chief scenes of interest in Switzerland." Besides the matter directly bearing on travel, there is a historical sketch of the origin of the Grindelwald conference; a chapter describing Switzerland and its national features; an article on mountain-climbing; hints to travellers, maps, etc.

Messrs. Iliffe and Son, 3, St. Bride-street, are the publishers of some attractive and useful literature of travel for the season. Holiday Tramps, by H. H. Warner (1s.), gives, within convenient compass, short and lucid notes of holiday journeys through many of the most picturesque districts of England and Wales. With each section there is a well-executed map; while the prefaces and appendices to the various chapters provide a vast store of information valuable to the rambler. It is a marvellously cheap guide-book. The same firm are issuing a "Way About" series of English county gazetteer guides, which make excellent reading, and will render easy and enjoyable the lot of the cyclist or walking tourist; these gazetteer guides, which cost 1s. each, also have maps and illustrations.

The Lord's Prayer. By Rev. George Milligan, B.D. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) A series of simple discourses by the minister of Caputh, Perthshire.

Cromwell's Soldier's Bible.—A little time ago Mr. E. Stock issued a fac-simile of "The Souldier's Pocket Bible," compiled by Mr. E. Calamy in 1643. He has now issued a cheap reprint. (1s.)

The Protestantism of the Prayer-book, by Rev Dyson Hague, M.A. (2s. 6d. Church Association.) A seasonable book, full of important facts, sound history, and good reasoning that ought to be in the hands of every English Churchman.

John Knox, and the Scottish Reformation, by G. Barnett Smith, is a popular biography which we cordially commend to old and young readers. Some famous pictures, illustrative of the great reformer's life, are reproduced in these pages. (1s. 6d. Partridge.)

Astronomers and their Observations, by Lucy Taylor, is an attractive addition to the "World's Wonders" series. (1s. 6d. Partridge.) There are many illustrations, and a hearty introduction is supplied by Mr. W. Thynne Lynn, B.A., F.R.A.S., formerly of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

The Chinaman in His Own Stories, by Thomas G. Selby, affords a good idea of Chinese life through Chinese fiction. The translator knows his subject; and those who desire to learn something of the heart and mind activities of the Celestial should not overlook this little book. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

The Ethics of Gambling, by W. Douglas Mackenzie, M.A., is a little book of great value. (1s. Sunday School Union.) Gambling is analysed as to its economic and moral nature; and its hurtful effect on the individual and society is clearly shown. Those gamblers who are prepared to "consider their ways" should have this lucid essay put into their hands.

A Wheel Within a Wheel. By Frances E. Willard. (2s. Hutchinson & Co.) Having mastered the art of riding a bicycle, Miss Willard here describes very cleverly the process and its resultant enjoyments. Some thoughtful "reflections by the way" add to the solidity of the little book, which is also illustrated. Sir B. Richardson contributes a useful preface.

The Inquisition and Confessional of the Present Century is a little book which should be widely read in the present day. (Paper, 6d.; cloth, 1s.) Other useful pamphlets are: English Convents—What are They? or, Is there any Necessity for Conventual Inspection? (3d.); Scripture Proofs of the Main Doctrines of Christianity, and on the Leading Points of Controversy with the Church of Rome, by Charles H. H. Wright, D.D., Ph.D. (2d.); and Confession and Absolution, according to the doctrine of the Apostles and of the Church of England (1d.), a sermon by the Bishop of Sodor and Man. (John Kensit.)

SAILORS' ORPHAN SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—Mr. Richard H. Hunter, Glasgow, has received for the above society a cheque for £1000 from Mrs. J. P. Kidston, Nyn Park, being part of her late husband's bequests to Glasgow charities. This sum will be added to the endowment fund of £100,000 which is being raised, and will be the means of providing for some orphan children for all time coming. This fund is steadily increasing, and the revenue from it is a great help in the daily expenses.

THE Y.M.C.A.

ROME.

FOR a long time the members of the Y.M.C.A. at Rome have been endeavouring to find good quarters to occupy as a centre, and so to be able to increase their usefulness. This they have at last succeeded in doing, and the "locale" was recently opened. There are already a goodly number of associates, and the direction consists of the ablest men amongst the evangelists of Rome. The Association is quite undenominational, and it is the earnest wish of the members that all sections of the Church should join. The place chosen is, 31, Via due Macelle, on the first floor. Those who know Rome will remember what an exceedingly central situation that is.

The president at the opening meeting, Signor Giampiccote, minister of the Waldensian Church, offered prayer, and he was followed by various speakers, all members of the society, but of different churches. The treasurer, Dr. R. Prochet, wishes us to make known that he will be happy to receive help towards the support of the Association, and also gifts of books for the library in any European language.

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. Miyoshi states that there are sixty Associations, with a membership of 1300, in Japan.

The Wolverhampton committee have secured the freehold of their premises, with valuable adjacent land, for £1650.

Mr. John Heggie, acting secretary of the Southern section of the Glasgow Association, is likely to be chosen secretary of the Aberdeen branch, as successor to Mr. Shireffs.

Out of thirty young missionaries recently studying the Chinese language at the Nankin College, it was found that twenty-four were formerly members of English Y.M.C.A.'s.

The Melbourne Association has secured a central building in Collins-street, and Mr. Arthur Nicholls is the general secretary, succeeding Mr. Stockwell, who has gone to Calcutta. Mr. Stockwell writes that as the result of the McNeill mission, 17,000 rupees are pledged towards the new building.

Coventry Y.M.C.A. has initiated a forward movement. An encouraging number of members met their president, Councillor J. K. Starley, at the rooms, Cross Cheaping, and agreed upon a scheme by which to obtain premises better adapted to the needs of the Association, and the appointment of a general secretary.

The South London Y.M.C.A. Magazine says:—Y.M.C.A. open-air work is now in full swing, and, united with other Christians who realise their mission, a good field-year is anticipated. It is an inspiring sight to walk through any part of London on a fine Sunday evening and observe the vast number of street-corner "oases" where the glorious Gospel is being proclaimed.

The Bayswater Association is forming a party for Keswick, to start from the rooms at 9.45 a.m., on Saturday, July 20, and travel in specially reserved saloon carriage by Midland Railway, a beautiful route, 23s. return. Arrangements have been made for accommodation at Braithwaite, twenty minutes walk from Convention Hall. There is still room for four gentlemen to join this party. Details to be had of the secretary, Mr. W. Wild, 172, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

Mr. Thomas A. Bailey, late secretary to the Cork Young Men's Christian Association, and Mrs. Bailey will shortly leave Ireland for India, to labour in connection with the mission to lepers there. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey, whose record of unselfish Christian work in Cork has made for them a host of friends, expect to leave that city in July to take charge of a mission in Edinburgh for a few months, and to depart for Dhera Doon, N.W. India, in March, to work among the afflicted and outcast lepers of that province.

The Weston-super-Mare Association has just held its annual Sunday morning flower service. This is a unique festival by which a large number of persons benefit. The secretary, Mr. Harrison, was glad to announce that he had been provided with the means of satisfying the recommendations of persons for gifts which had been made to him. He did not think their numbers last year exceeded 300, but this year they would touch 350 at least. They had over 300 packages, each containing ¼lb. tea, 1lb. sugar, and a cake. These packages, together with the flowers contributed, would be taken to the various recipients by the young men belonging to the Bible class.

REV. W. LONEY, Stanley Vicarage, Crook, R.S.O., Durham, is anxious to take six or nine "lay" helpers to Keswick, chiefly miners, earnest, devoted men, in need of such spiritual help. Something of the kind has been done for several past years. About £6 (in addition to local help) would suffice.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE Sons of Temperance Friendly Society reports an adult membership of 32,000.

At a Local Veto meeting held in Nottingham, Mr. Henry Boden, who presided, said he had letters from Sir William Harcourt pledging himself to do his utmost to pass the Veto Bill.

There are now 28,779 enrolled members in the Irish Wesleyan Bands of Hope, and 3958 new pledges were taken last year. 315 competitors entered the recent temperance examination.

The Kent Temperance Congress will be asked to declare at its next meeting that the time has arrived when every church should give notice that, beyond the end of the present century, no person engaged in the liquor traffic should be allowed to continue in recognised membership.

The Countess of Carlisle has been speaking against the introduction of drink into political clubs. She knows that the wives of working men dread those clubs in which alcohol can be obtained even more than they dread the public-house itself, because the clubs can keep open all night.

Mr. Donald Maclean, who has acted as Borough Prosecuting Solicitor to the town of Cardiff for eighteen months, writes to The Daily News, rebutting the statements as to the failure of Sunday Closing in that town. He denies that shebeening is common; it is, he says, a very rare thing for a working man of average respectability to be found in a shebeen.

The Nineteenth National Council of the British Women's Temperance Association, which will take place at the City Temple, on Monday and Tuesday, 17th and 18th inst., will be attended by nearly 800 delegates, the largest delegation on record. The meetings of the council will be open to the public, and Lady Henry Somerset will preside each day. Special Sunday services on June 16th will be held in about 200 places of worship. Leading White Ribbon women from America and other places will give addresses. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard will speak at the City Temple in the afternoon, at 3 p.m., and Madame Antoinette Sterling will sing.

On Thursday the annual meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety was held at the Society's Rooms, 11, Chandos-street, W. Dr. Norman Kerr read a paper on the report of the Scotch Departmental Committee on Inebriety in Scotland. The committee took the same view as to the medical treatment of inebriates that he had always held. Dr. Kerr said he had found that it was much easier to cure men than women. In this he was supported by the report, which also stated that women were more easily governed than men. According to the report the Inebriate Homes in Scotland had done excellent work. Drunkards were classified in the report, and the establishment of homes under Government control was advocated. The maximum period of detention was fixed at two years instead of one, as at present.

A sad letter appeared in The Times last week about the gin traffic in West Africa from Bishop Tugwell, who says: "Gin and rum are being poured into the country in appalling quantities, and that almost without let or hindrance." The advance of the natives in civilisation has been wholly checked by this abominable traffic. Whatever may be the case in Europe, in Africa spirits are the destruction of the black man, body and soul. There is absolutely no difference of opinion on the subject among those who know Africa, and the moral guilt of the white importer who makes a profit out of this hideous degradation is no less than that of the slaver. Nor is the administration concerned free from this black stain. The plea that the drink is necessary to give the colonies a revenue is contemptible; even if it makes things easy for the moment, it is at the price of ruining legitimate trade and cutting away the roots of all future prosperity.

SEASONS OF JOY.

IF we had no cares seasons of joy would be unnecessary. They come most opportunely in the Convention gatherings of midsummer, but at this time the flow of money to missions comes to a dead stop, and the workers see that before they can leave home to enjoy the happy meetings there must be money in hand to pay rents, salaries, and all the charges of their service. The heavy loss we experienced last year in the death of many supporters of our institutions ties my hands to a painful extent.

It is most distressing to be obliged to refuse many calls, and to see sufferers failing whom a small sum spent in refreshing change would relieve, and in many cases prolong life. We have among our helpers several who at this moment sadly need a change, whom I want to aid, but I must be just before generous, and the Mission has grave liabilities to be met this month. S. MEREDITH.

IRISH NOTES.

DR. ELEANOR MONTGOMERY, daughter of Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, is about to go to the foreign field as a medical missionary.

An evangelistic mission was conducted last week in St. John's Church, Malone, near Belfast, by Rev. W. Hay Aitken. It was a time of much blessing.

Mr. F. Greville Eland, for nearly four years pastor of the church in Athlone, has been appointed by the Irish Baptist Home Mission special evangelist for the North of Ireland, and will henceforth devote his time to mission work, with Belfast as headquarters.

Two brethren who have lately been sojourning for a Sunday in Cork, send us an account of open-air services held in that city, showing the wonderful contrast between the attitude of the people now and the time, about a year ago, when there were great disturbances. The preachers are quietly and earnestly listened to on the whole, and priests appear to have lost any power of effective interference. For this there is great reason to thank God and to take courage in the work.

The great event of the past week in the Irish ecclesiastical world was the annual meeting in Belfast of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church. Rev. Dr. Buick, of Callybackey, was chosen moderator. Very hopeful reports were submitted. That on Irish missions stated that there are now thirty-five colporteurs employed, and four others are waiting for appointments. Five students who have finished their collegiate course have offered themselves for foreign missionary work.

THE BAROTSE COUNTRY.

THE following is from the London correspondent of The Scotsman:—

News takes long to travel from the country of the Barotse, on the north or left bank of the Upper Zambesi, which forms the extreme north-western territory of the British South Africa Company. There for several years M. Coillard, with his Scottish wife, who was a Mackintosh, has lived to do only good to the people and their king, Lewanika. The Matabele threatened to cross the great river and extinguish the Barotse, but since the Matabele ceased to exist as a nation there are peace and prosperity in the far north. All down the left bank to the junction of the Zambesi with the Kafue, Lewanika and his chiefs have now confidence to plant villages. The king's son, Sitsa, from Kazungula governs all the province of Shesheke and the Batoka country. The Right Hon. Cecil Rhodes and his company are to spend on the Barotse country the ten or twelve thousand pounds sterling hitherto given for the administration of the protectorate of British Central Africa. M. Coillard has been at his brave work single-handed for ten years, and he sees light at last.

AN OPENING FOR CHRISTIAN WORK.—A lady who has been carrying on a little work, chiefly amongst laundry women and girls, near Bournemouth, is leaving at Midsummer. She is anxious to find someone to carry it on. It is very simply and inexpensively managed, the little mission-room costing under £5 a year, the people living close by, and many of the heads of the laundries having given openings for reaching the women. All information would gladly be given by Miss K. Laston Smith, Perran Lodge, Bournemouth, W.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—A conference was held on Whit Monday at the Central Bible Mission Hall here, on the foundation facts and truths of the Christian life. Christians of various sections of the Church united in prayer, praise, and Bible study. Many came in from the villages around. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. Blake, of Tonbridge, Jas. Douglas, of Brixton, A. C. Tessier, C. Stirling, L. Liesching, of Sevenoaks, Trevor Francis, J. McAuliffe, and others. During the interval between the afternoon and evening meetings, a hearty praise and testimony meeting was held in the smaller Bible Mission Hall, whereat many testified to the saving grace of God in personal salvation.

VAN EVANGELISATION.—The Church Army has now 14 mission and colportage vans continually evangelising in the villages of England. The attendances at the meetings, both indoors and outdoors, have been very remarkable, numbers professing to have received blessing. The vans are working at present in the districts of Canterbury, Norwich, Manchester, Wakefield, St. Albans, Durham (2), Exeter, Belfast, St. Asaph, Carlisle, Oxford, Worcester, and Chester. The society is anxious to place more vans in some of the poorer dioceses. A new van costs £100, and lasts about 20 years with care. A good second-hand van costs £60. Rev. W. Carlile would be thankful for any to take the responsibility of placing another of these vans in the field.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. Wm. R. Lane, evangelist, asks us to state that he has changed his place of residence to 5, The Triangle, North Kensington, W.

Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, the well-known philanthropist, lies in a critical condition at his home, the Cabin Crick, near Rugby. Only faint hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Mr. Henry Richards, who by error was referred to in our issue for May 9, as "gone home," is, we are thankful to learn, well and actively engaged at Banzamanteka, on the Congo River.

Mr. G. R. Cairns hopes to sail for England on June 26 from Montreal, but will return to the United States on Sept. 1. He purposes beginning Gospel work in England again Jan. 1, 1896.

Dr. Baedeker requests special and sustained remembrance in prayer for journeying mercies and open doors for the Lord's service in Germany and Russia. He hopes to leave England on June 18.

Major Penn, the Texas evangelist, who visited England with Mr. Cairns ten years ago, has gone to his reward. He died at his home, Eureka Springs, Arkansas, May 3. Many were led to Jesus during that visit.

Mr. Charles E. Faithfull is at present in England, and will be glad to hear from any one concerning the work at the Seamen's Rest, Marseilles. He may be addressed care of the Editor of The Christian.

Mr. George C. Needham, who expects to reach London in time to attend the closing meetings of the Mildmay Conference, will be open to a preaching engagement on Sabbath, June 30. Letters may be addressed to our care.

Mr. Henry Thorne, evangelist, was married on June 3, to Miss Mary J. Davis, of Halifax. From June 27 to July 28, he may be addressed Shaftesbury House, Margate; after that his permanent address will be 9, Louisville-road, Balham, S.W.

Rev. George Whelpton has, after fourteen years of work in Havre, been called to Paris to take the place of the late Rev. W. Gibson as agent of the "Commission d'Evangelisation," or Home Missions of the French Methodist Church. His address will be 4, Rue Roquépine, Paris.

Miss Beatrice Hurditch has safely reached Zanzibar, and writes home full of hope. We regret, however, to hear that the heat has so affected Miss Coote, who went with Miss Hurditch, that she has been obliged to relinquish the work and return home. It will be necessary to send out, as soon as possible, additional helpers. Mr. J. T. Isaac, of the Strangers' Rest, 163, Ratcliff Highway, E., will gladly correspond with inquiring friends.

Sir James Stansfeld, for a long period the Parliamentary leader of the C.D. Acts repeal movement, is about to retire from public life. He was last week, at a meeting in Halifax, the recipient of many tributes of esteem from fellow-workers, chiefly ladies, who have taken a leading part in promoting moral reforms.

General Booth.—We are very glad to learn that the General is so far improved in health as to be able to resume the heavy administrative work attendant upon his responsible position. According to present arrangements, he leaves London at the end of the present week for a series of meetings in Sweden and Denmark, including the annual field-day at Sodertelge, which grows in importance year by year.

Miss Hattie Q. Brown, of Wilberforce College, Ohio, U.S.A., spoke on Monday at the Central noon prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, on the work of the College in training Christian young men and women for educational and evangelical work among their fellow freedmen. Nearly 4000 have already been sent out from the college on such service, while a number have gone to Africa. The description given by the speaker of the condition of many of the negroes in the Southern States was deplorable. Unless bold measures be adopted for their evangelisation, there is danger lest they lapse entirely into barbarism. Miss Brown, who is a fluent and eloquent speaker, will be glad to address meetings on behalf of this work. She is now staying at Arundel House, 4, The Bank, Highgate, N.

CHRISTIANS IN THE ALPS.—Whilst acknowledging with many thanks the gifts of English Christians, I desire to keep before the eyes of your readers the great and urgent need of the poor but faithful Alpine Christians at Montorfano. Only a small portion of the amount required has as yet come in, and the season during which we ought to be building is rapidly passing. I was recently at Montorfano, and found the little church and Sunday-school undiminished in numbers and unwavering in the faith of Christ. They are very poor, and all that they can themselves offer is the labour of their heads This they are ready to give, to the extent of their ability, as soon as the building can be commenced.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. William Forbes conducted a seven days' mission last week in a tent on the Albert Embankment, Vauxhall.

Carlisle.—The Brothers Weaver have concluded a third visit to the Cecil-street Primitive Methodist Church, Carlisle. The crowded meetings testified to the hold they have on the people in the old border city. The services throughout were characterised by great spiritual power, and a number professed decision for Christ.

Mr. T. W. Canning, of the Evangelisation Society (Scottish Branch), concluded a very successful mission in a tent at Cupar Fife, on Sabbath, June 9. The mission commenced on Sabbath, May 26, and all the meetings were largely attended. Great interest was manifested in the preached Word, and there is good reason for believing that satisfactory soul-saving work has been accomplished. W. L. T.

Mr. A. Draper has begun at Redcar a month's mission with the 3rd Yorks Militia battalion. During their annual training, he will carry on tent to tent visitation, day by day, and open-air evangelistic services every night. He would be glad of earnest prayers that God's blessing may attend these efforts to win men from gambling, swearing, drink, and impurity, to Christ for salvation. A good supply of booklets, tracts, money, etc., is asked for, to work the mission. Address, Mr. A. Draper, Sergeants' Mess, Militia Camp, Redcar.

Brockmoor, Staffs.—Mr. Sidney Vivian, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a thirty-two days' tent mission in this parish. The meetings from the first have been well attended, many of whom were among the number of those who previously attended no place of worship. The tent is a large one, yet on several occasions numbers were unable to gain admittance. This is Mr. Vivian's fourth visit to this place in mission work, and although each visit has been marked with great blessing, his mission this year has in every respect proved the most successful. Several men of debased character and advanced age have testified to the salvation of their souls. Mr. Vivian is now conducting a tent mission at Mount Pleasant, Quarry Bank, Brierley Hill.

Mrs. Baeyertz has just concluded a fortnight's mission at Motherwell, N.B. She came in answer to prayer, and God did not disappoint the faith of his people. Although the worst time of all the year for evangelistic work, yet it was delightful to see how the people crowded to the meetings; on several evenings the churches were fully taxed to accommodate those who came. The evening Gospel addresses were very powerful, and about two hundred have been dealt with in the after-meetings. The afternoon Bible readings on "Holiness" were a special feature of the mission. Seldom before have God's people been so deeply moved on this all-important subject. At the closing holiness meeting, hundreds of Christians waited to yield themselves up to God, and to let Christ live in them henceforth. T. Wyse.

"LE SIGNAL."—We recently announced that this daily paper, in the interest of French Protestantism, had ceased to exist. It appears that at the last moment arrangements were made for the continuance of the paper. The need for a French daily paper at once free from Roman Catholic domination and untainted by atheism, is undeniable, and we trust that Le Signal, though not performing a definitely religious ministry, will aim at a high moral ideal, and be a great power for good in France.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—In the midst of much rowdyism and tumult following a Bank Holiday in Ratcliff Highway, on Tuesday week a meeting was held, in which the presence of the Lord was felt. The text for the month was given out and briefly dwelt upon by Miss Child—"Jesus Himself!" All hearts seemed to realise his presence standing in the midst of them. The addresses which followed were very appropriate. The record given about the past month's work was indeed cheering, and included the laying of the memorial stones of a new hall in connection with the Strood Branch of the Christian Lifeboat Crew.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A united meeting of all the branches in Aldershot was held at the North Camp Soldiers' Home on Wednesday, last week, when about seventy members were present. Addresses were given by Revs. E. P. Lowry, T. H. Chapman, W. S. Jaffray, and A. H. Wheeler. Besides the weekly meetings in the North Camp and Grosvenor-road Soldiers' Homes, weekly regimental meetings in connection with the Wilts, Leicester, Seaforth, and Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders are held in camp, and a monthly united meeting of all the branches at the iron church, in the centre of the camp, used by the Presbyterians.

OBITUARY.

GEORGE FREAN EVANS, SITTINGBOURNE.

This earnest Christian worker passed to his rest on Tuesday, June 4, at the early age of 36. Though much engaged by business claims, he always found time for Sunday-school work, children's services, Christian Endeavour societies, and so forth. The oppressed and friendless, whether amongst men or animals, always found a friend in him. He will be much missed by a very large circle, but to his wife, mother, sister, and two brothers the blow is a very heavy one. A sharp attack of pleurisy and pneumonia carried him away after five days' illness, borne with much sweetness and patience.

REV. P. DOUGLAS.

Last week the death took place of the Rev. Peter Douglas, for close upon thirty years minister of Inverkip Free Church. Mr. Douglas, who was a native of Scone, was in his seventy-third year. In August, 1851, he was ordained minister of the Free Church at Inverkip, where he spent the whole of his ministerial life, resigning his charge on account of failing health in the spring of 1800. By his people Mr. Douglas was much beloved, and he was held in very high esteem by the whole of the residents in the district. Since his retirement from active duty Mr Douglas resided with his family in Glasgow.

MDLLE. CAROLINE GAUSSEN.

The daughter of the venerable Louis Gaussen fell asleep in Jesus on December 26, 1894. The memory of Gaussen, that devoted, heavenly-minded servant of God still lives in our hearts. It is more than thirty years since he entered into rest. The pretty white house in a suburb of Geneva, where he lived with his aged mother, his sister, and his only daughter, will be remembered by a few. His highly-gifted daughter became her father's inseparable companion, entering into his thoughts, enjoying his conversation, and sharing his sympathies, and helping him in his labours. After his death she drew up and published from notes left by him the Sabbath school lessons given at the Oratoire on Exodus, Elijah, Elisha, Jonah, etc.

From the year 1875, when she lost her aged aunt, Mademoiselle Gaussen lived alone. She could not, however, be really lonely, for she was one of those who give themselves without ceasing. Her home in Rue Eynard became a fresh centre, and in her case were fulfilled the words of the Psalmist: "He setteth the solitary in families." In the midst of physical weakness her old age was peaceful and fruitful in good works. In the last weeks of her life, when this weakness increased, and even after the final great trial which deprived her of the power of speech and motion, deep peace reigned in her sick chamber. Her gentleness, tenderness, self-forgetfulness (the distinguishing trait of her character), solicitude for others, gratitude and submission will never be forgotten by those who had the privilege of watching beside her. At length, without a struggle, she passed beyond the veil.

CLAPHAM PROPHETIC CONFERENCE. — The gatherings annually convened at Clapham-road Conference Hall for the study of prophetic Scripture will be held next week, June 18-20. A number of well-known brethren are expected to address the conference, which meets on the three days at 11 a.m., 3 and 7.30 p.m. Full particulars from Mr. Waterfield, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

MACCLESFIELD STREET MISSION.—This mission was at one time attached to Harecourt Chapel, Canonbury, but for the last ten years it has been worked independently by a band of earnest workers. Owing to financial stress it has been temporarily closed, and the workers desire, if possible, to find someone who would relieve them of the responsibilities of the work, and carry it on, as the neighbourhood is well suited for such a mission. All particulars can be learned from the treasurer, Mr. W. J. Collins, 795, Old Kent-road, S.E.

JEWS IN EAST LONDON.—On Tuesday last week a tea meeting for Jews was held in the Gospel Hall, 70, Sidney-street, Commercial-road. The tea was given, as was stated on the tickets, in the name of the Lord Jesus, according to Col. iii. 17, and it was announced that Gospel addresses would be given. The hall was well filled with Jews, Jewesses, and children. Testimony of God's Son, incarnate, crucified, risen, and coming again was given by several brethren in English and Yiddish. It is two years since Mr. Henry Barnett and his wife began this work, and they have been helped through many difficulties and trials. As the year advances, Mr. Barnett is hoping to prepare his almanack for 1896. This is a very useful publication, exhibiting Gospel truth as well as the calendar. Communications should be addressed to Henry Barnett, 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E.

SUMMER DRESSES.

THE LATEST CONCEPTIONS are included in Our Saxony Series and Our Exclusive Series. Especially would we call attention to our large variety of Bright Silken Lustres, at 2s. 6d. and upwards per yard. These lovely Continental fabrics, in Silver Greys, Fawns, Gold and Blue, Fawn and Blue, Green and Heliotrope, and other blendings, surpass in taste and elegance any English Alpaca.

CHOICE AND SERVICEABLE Washing Fabrics in Linens, Hollands, Drills, Piqués, Muslins, Crépons, Lace Goods, Silken Flaxes, Prints, Galateas, in infinite variety for Dresses, Blouses, etc., are contained in our British Section, at prices from 3½d. to 1s. 6d. yard.

THE HIGHEST PERFECTION of the Dyer's art to be found in Plain Cloths is in our Habit Cloth Series, and in Fancy Cloths in our Coloured Crépons in Wool and Silk and Wool, 1s. to 4s. 6d. yard.

THE FASTEST DYES and the best wearing Serges are in our Serge Series, 1s. 3d. to 3s. 6d. yard.

THE PRETTIEST AND NEATEST Cloths for Children's wear are in our Tweed and 1895 Series, 1s. to 2s. 9d. yard. In this Series we include two Specialities in British Alpacas, which are decided bargains. The first is a Plain and Fancy Shot Alpaca in many colours—Fawns, Greys, Mingled effects, etc.—which are very bright and lustrous. The cloth is exceedingly good, and 40 inches wide. The price is 1s. 6½d. per yard. The Second Specialty is a very minute Check, in Steel Grey, Dark Grey, and a darker mixture. Excellent quality, width 44 inches. Price 2s. yard.

IN BLACK CRÉPONS we are offering the Cheapest high-class Crépons in England, from the All-wool ranges, at 1s. 6d. to our Recherché Crépons, at 6s. 11d. to 8s. 11d. per yard, which, from their great width, are adapted for mantles as well as gowns, and of them we may be permitted to say, that in richness and distinctiveness they are simply unapproachable, and masterpieces of artistic developments.

The wide world o'er does not contain within its boundless domain more perfect or more beautiful colourings than the above collection.

CONSUMPTION,
AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.
INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

NINETY-FIRST INTERVIEW,
With Mrs. MARY JENNINGS, Wykeham, Yorkshire.
CONSUMPTION—A HOPELESS CASE.

This case was published in the weekly journals in the middle of May, 1890 (the name accidentally misspelt). "Case of Mrs. Gennels, pronounced hopeless—letter from Mr. C. Shaw, of Ganton, Yorks."

Mrs. Mary Jennings, when I called upon her a few months ago, was in the possession of good health and able to attend to all the concerns of her household. She said she was not what one might call a robust woman, but she certainly is a marvel, considering what her condition was when first she came under Mr. Congreve's treatment. That condition is best described in her own words.

"My father died from Consumption, and so did nearly all his relatives, and one of my sisters died of the same disease. My own illness commenced with my first confinement in 1880. I could not recover my strength. In 1886 I broke a blood-vessel through coughing—I coughed incessantly, resting neither by day or night. The expectoration was of a frothy character. I had much pain in the region of the lungs, and I spit a quantity of blood. At that time I was so weak and ill that I thought life scarcely worth living. One doctor who attended me said there was great danger of Consumption. About that time I went to Ganton to stay with my mother, and while there became much worse. I couldn't get upstairs by myself. A doctor at Ganton said my left lung was entirely gone. One day when Mr. Shaw was passing he overheard my mother say, 'She will not be long here.' They all gave me up. I have heard them say that I couldn't last long."

"I believe it was Mr. Shaw who recommended you to try Mr. Congreve's treatment?"

"Yes, and he sent for the first bottle of medicine for me. After I had taken three doses I got some relief—the cough was much easier. When I had taken the first bottle I was so much better that people could scarcely believe it. After taking three bottles I was almost well, though I still continued the treatment, and even now take the medicine whenever I get a cold."

Like a wise mother, Mrs. Jennings keeps a supply of the medicine in the house, and gives it to the children at the first appearance of cold.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Poor Jewish Children in Whitechapel, Stepney, and Mile End.

The Jewish Missionaries of the London City Mission wish to give 1000 poor Jewish Children a Day in the Country. The cost will be about £50. In addition, if funds permit, it is desired to send away, for one or two weeks, many of the sick and ailing Jewish children. But for the efforts of the Missionaries these little ones will get no change from the dreary courts and alleys of East London.

For 10s. a child can be sent to the country for two weeks.

Will Readers of THE CHRISTIAN give these little ones a sight of the beautiful country?

Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, or by the Secretary, Mr. G. R. COLE, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C. c.221

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSION TO SOUTH AMERICA.

All who desire to see the Gospel preached to the millions of Indians in South America, and are interested in the spiritual well-being of our fellow-countrymen scattered throughout that vast continent, and who also desire to see its Spanish and Portuguese speaking people brought to a knowledge of the truth, are invited to GIVE THEIR SUPPORT TO THIS SOCIETY, which sends out its Bishop and Clergy and Lay Missionaries to effect these blessed and important objects. Its work at the great ports AMONGST THE SAILORS is deeply valued.

THE MISSION TO THE INDIANS OF ARAUCANIA,

Commenced as a fitting memorial of the Jubilee Year, is intended to gather into the Church of Christ this, the finest of the aboriginal races in South America. The Araucanians were long inaccessible to the missionaries of the Gospel, but are now EVERYWHERE OPEN to welcome them. For this new mission the help of new friends and the increased support of old ones are earnestly sought. The project was dear to the hearts of Captain ALLEN GARDINER, and his son and grandson, and has been warmly advocated by the Bishop of the FALKLAND ISLANDS. Cheques and Money Orders should be crossed "Messrs. BARCLAY AND Co.," and made payable to Captain E. POULDEN, R.N., Lay Sec., at the Society's Offices, 1, Clifford Inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C. c4825

Notes and Comments.

DURING the summer season, when Christian tourists are flocking to the Continent, it would often add to their comfort and pleasure to seek a lodging at some of the Christian missions and educational institutions to be found here and there in preference to hotels. There are schools pleasantly situated which, in the absence of the pupils during vacation time, are well adapted for the accommodation of visitors, and would form very good resting-places as well as proving means of cheer to isolated Christians.

According to a Shanghai telegram, the attacks on Europeans in China are said to be the outcome of a conspiracy on the part of a number of mandarins who have been discredited by their conduct during the war, to divert the odium of their defeat by the Japanese from their own shoulders to those of the foreigners. Telegrams from these districts are apparently being delayed till the work of destruction aimed at is completed. But as the British Minister at Pekin is holding the Chinese officials responsible for some of the outrages, and a British gunboat has gone up the Yang-tse-kiang, there will probably be some care exercised as to how far the outrages are carried. Poor China, it is so large, so ill connected, so ill governed, that it hardly knows what has happened to it, much less what is being done with it. Its awakening is a sight both sorrowful and hopeful.

An Italian writer, quoted in the British Weekly, is of opinion that as one of the principal causes why men forsake the country for the city is the dulness of country life, the way to check the migration would be to make each village a miniature city. He says :

We in Italy are fortunate in having, as a result of our ancient history, a multitude of tiny cities, each perfect in its way, each fully equipped with the material of civic life. The result is that our country has resisted, better than almost any other, the centralising tendencies of the age. In most other countries the population in the interior is scanty, and the landscape almost deserted, while as a direct result we see the monstrous social evils of overcrowded cities.

Any practicable scheme for checking city immigration is to be welcomed, and the provision of increased social, educational, and Christian institutions as an antidote to the village pothouse must form an important part. But whether the city, even in miniature, is the best model is open to question.

Apropos of this subject is the migration of pastors from village to town, and town to city. It is not unnatural that a man should seek to use his God-given abilities to the best advantage and the widest influence. But the villagers suffer by the process, and additionally so by the fact that devout persons often move nearer town for the sake of a more efficient ministry. One remedy is for pastors and people in the town to pay occasional visits to the village. This would result in profit to themselves, and tend to the cheer and encouragement of the smaller congregations. And after all this is only fair. It is a sort of Simony for wealthy churches to buy up the gifted men; and that there should be no method of poorer churches participating in gifts which are given to the Church as a whole.

It is pleasant to see that Dr. Gregory is beginning in the Methodist Recorder a series of articles on the Centenary of the London Missionary Society and the Jubilee of the Evangelical Alliance. His account of the L.M.S. is appreciative and hearty, calculated to inspire its readers with thankfulness for an agency and a work which exists outside the limits of Methodism. The descriptions of former leaders of the missionary movement and of events which he has witnessed in connection with it are sufficiently radiant in style, and will be enjoyed wherever they are read. The value of the articles to us is the aid they will give to a brotherly spirit and to a deepening of zeal for the spread of the Gospel, no matter who may carry it abroad.

Some characteristic sayings fell from Rev. James E. Clapham at a meeting of the London Methodist Council, where a discussion took place on "Our Public Services: Do they Attract the People?" He said :—

My own impression is that there is more likely to be a great deal of pith in a short sermon than in a long one. I don't care about catchpenny entertainments. Methodism is not going in for these things. Magic-lantern entertainments will pull the people together for a little while, but they won't last. I am an old-fashioned Methodist. I believe that doctrinal preaching is popular, i.e., when doctrinal preaching is properly done. The grand old doctrines of the New Testament have as strong a charm, even for common people, as they ever had. I also maintain that the grand old Methodist hymns that stirred the hearts of plain, illiterate villagers—the quarrymen of Yorkshire and the miners of Cornwall—will stir Londoners. I believe at the same time in adapting ourselves to the age in which we live.

We cannot but think that Mr. Clapham is right in his standing by the things which have always, in every age, and in every country, been the mighty instruments of God for good. Nothing lasts like the truth of God's Word.

Wesleyan Methodism is greatly exercised about the leakage of its young people; one of its papers complains that :—

There is a thirst, we had almost written a mania, for novelty. This and other causes are fostering habits of wandering, of "going about Zion," the result among young people being a weakening of the bonds of church loyalty, a loss of interest in the affairs of their own community—a curious type of catholicity which is much more concerned with the things of others than with personal duty and privilege. It is regarded amongst intelligent young people as a matter of little moment whether they belong to this or that church, or to any church at all, provided only that they may hear music in good taste and sermons "up to date," and may have a modest provision of church entertainments, duly balanced by philanthropic, and occasionally by evangelistic, excitement. And so they roam hither and thither, leading a religiously butterfly existence, and gathering sweets from every opening flower.

In order to stop the leakage it has been decided to form a Wesley Guild on lines somewhat like the Christian Endeavour Society. In fact, the constitution is so similar that it seems a pity not to affiliate with the older and widespread society. But the Guild is avowedly one for making Methodists. The Methodist Recorder says that they do not want to foster undenominationalism in Methodism, but to see all the Methodist people more intensely devoted to their own church, and their own work, and their own means of grace.

For many years the Evangelical party in the Church of England has allowed itself to be kept out of certain Church societies and organisations, or has held aloof from them. But now, says The Rock :—

There is a growing feeling among Evangelicals that they should again take their places on the committees and boards from which they have too often withdrawn, and if they do so with a firm determination that they will not support or countenance Sacerdotalism, that they will be as true to their convictions without yielding to a false charity, as the High Churchmen are on their side, it will be a step in the right direction. If, however, they take up the attitude that an advanced Sacerdotalist is just as loyal a son of the Church as they are themselves, and that it is quite right to vote considerable sums to parishes where doctrines indistinguishable from the teaching of the Council of Trent are being diligently inculcated, where the vile confessional is openly practised, and the mass is constantly celebrated with every Romish accessory, then we cannot conceive that an Evangelical on a committee is of as much service to the cause of truth as his compromising and condoning schism of heresy are an offence in the sight of God.

Evangelicals are urged by our contemporary to make themselves heard and felt at the next Church Congress at Norwich. They may do good service there. At the same time, the party which grows the strongest and ultimately wins by pressure of numbers, is the party which gives itself most unselfishly to the work of preaching and teaching Jesus Christ.

The re-establishment of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland is talked of, and the National Review is in favour of it. To each of the 1,091 parishes it would give £150 a year; to each of the twenty-seven bishops £500 a year, and to each of a hundred higher officials £300 a year; a total of £206,150 a year. It is thus proposed to endow a force which would work incessantly against the highest welfare of the people and of the kingdom. In the present state of political parties this result is not impossible of attainment. The preliminary will probably be the making of large grants for purposes of education. Indeed, if Rome ever reconquers the British Empire it will be through the schools. The process is going on now.

Rev. Thomas Connellan, in the June issue of his paper, The Catholic (18, Bachelor's-walk, Dublin), analyses a propagandist pamphlet of the Catholic Truth Society; and, knowing Romanism from within, he is able not only to point out the errors of Popery, but also the apparent unwillingness of the hierarchy to see things as they actually are. Criticising a common perversion of Scripture, he writes :—

Our author proves the apostolicity of the Roman Church from the text, "On thee, Peter, will I build it." Where does he find such a text of Scripture? The real text is, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church." The point is an important one, for the following reason:—In the second article of the Creed of Pius IV., every Roman Catholic professes never to interpret Holy Scripture "otherwise than according to the unanimous consent of the Fathers." Now, Archbishop Kenrick, of St. Louis, in his concio habenda at non habita, which was clotured at the Vatican Council, tells us that the Fathers were divided on the interpretation of the words "On this rock will I build my Church." Seventeen Fathers held that the Church was built upon Peter. Eight, that the Church was built upon the apostles. Forty-four Fathers and doctors held that by rock Christ meant the faith of Peter. Sixteen Fathers and doctors held that by the rock was signified Christ. Archbishop Kenrick concludes:—"If we are bound to follow the majority of the Fathers in this thing, then we are bound to hold for certain that by the rock should be understood the faith professed by Peter, not Peter professing the faith."

Hence it is clear that in matters of doctrine the Papacy does not abide by its own standards. We all knew this before, but it is well to be reminded, as by Mr. Connellan in his useful monthly, of the inconsistency of Romanism and the flimsiness of its claims.

The influence of the too prevalent idea that at best Christianity is only one of many useful religions which men have had, is, we believe, doing a great deal of harm both at home and abroad. At home it is weakening attachment to the Gospel, which is regarded as a faith to be patronised, accepted, or rejected, just as men like, not a revelation from God which imposes a solemn responsibility on all who hear it. Abroad it is taking the fire and force out of missionary enterprise. What use is there in working and making sacrifices for a religion which only holds some more truth than other religions, and is not above them and separate from them by a declaration of the love and righteousness of God nowhere else to be found? Is it or is it not true that "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," than the name of Jesus? If true—what other religion preaches Christ? None; therefore they have no Saviour whom they make known.

Sir Dyce Duckworth has been addressing the Clergy Home Mission Union on the subject of "breaking down." The Pall Mall Gazette says that he spoke out "fearlessly and boldly":—

He discountenanced too much intoning or monotoning, just as severely as noisy declamation, as inducive of clerical sore throat. He condemned an unwarrantable degree of fasting in Lent as leading to weakness and disability, and he clearly stated his opinion that fasting Communion was not a practice that could with safety be urged or enforced on all. He was quite apostolic in his injunctions in regard to the use of stimulants: "A little good wine is very useful for men who are working hard in cities or towns." And—tell it not to Sir Wilfrid Lawson—he thought the clergy might turn a deaf ear to "the nonsense so constantly declaimed from so-called temperance platforms."

That is very good about the monotoning, for every speaker who has observed himself knows that nothing tires and wears him down like speaking long in the same key. George Whitefield, John Wesley, and C. H. Spurgeon, never were afflicted with clerical sore throat, and for a good reason—they spoke naturally. That about fasting is also good. But the distinguished doctor is all wrong when he gets on to temperance. Numerous teetotal clergymen are standing witnesses against him, and in the ranks of the Nonconformists, teetotal ministers who work as hard as anyone, and do not break down, are as common as blackberries. He has something to learn about his art, as many preachers have something to learn about theirs.

A reverend member of the Aberdeen Free Presbytery, in a recent debate on the Gothenburg system of drink management, expressed himself in this extraordinary fashion:—

To his mind a good deal would be gained if men could be persuaded that the liquor traffic would exist as long as human society exists. He believed it was not in accordance with the Divine will that the traffic should come to an end. God had made the traffic, and He had so constituted human nature that there was a natural desire for drink on the part of men.

We do not wonder that a brother presbyter at this point exclaimed, "Shocking!" To say that God is the author of the drink traffic appears to us to border on the blasphemous. If many Scottish ministers were of that opinion there would be little cause for wonder that Scotchmen and whisky are proverbially associated. We trust their number is but few.

And so there is to be a railway to Uganda. The idea seems strange to those of us who remember the publication of Speke's "Journal of the Discovery of the Source of the Nile" and his stay at the Court of King M'tesa. But the world moves fast, and the size of English territory grows apace. Once made, the railway cannot but be a heavy blow to the slave trade, and a quickener of the life of central Africa. The days of the "savage" will be over. But what will take the place of the old? Gin and gunpowder, degraded white men, and savages more degraded than ever? The railway would be a pleasant prospect, if only good men or decent men were to use it for reputable purposes, but one shudders at the thought of the probable.

Dr. Cairns used to say: "Happy is the man or woman who loves laborious monotony! It is the most easy of all things to be got in this world, and the most serviceable to our day and generation." Yes; it is the old grace commended of Paul the Apostle as "patient continuance in well-doing," without which nothing was ever done well, or even done at all.

Senor Zorilla, one of the Spanish patriots, who died last week, about a year after the death of his wife, to whom he was deeply attached, expressed some thoughts which are full of suggestion:—

He had lost all taste for life, having lost her. All that interested him before, even the life of nations, seemed to him hollow and deceptive. What was, he asked himself, the use of struggling for a cause? Life was such a short, unsatisfactory affair, that perhaps after all it was better to drift than to steer in a given direction. What did Gambetta's efforts lead to? The long triumph of the party that will be for ever associated with Panama and the heaping up of taxes. Mankind was irrational and did not like to be led by reason.

No, the soul can never be satisfied with a cause; Christian service is for a Master, a Saviour. The cause may or may not prosper at present; but his will is done, and He is glorified. The Saviour is greater than all causes.

STROUD GREEN, N.—In connection with the Mount View Congregational Church, open-air services were commenced on Sunday evening in a field adjoining the well-frequented footpath on the "Hog's Back," which connects the districts of Stroud Green and Harringay. The pastor, Rev. E. Griffith-Jones, with a large number of his congregation and choir, attended. More than 200 hymn sheets were required before the meeting commenced, and about 300 persons, in the aggregate, heard the Gospel message proclaimed by Mr. W. R. Nicoll and Rev. Robert Balgarnie, while the anthems by the choir formed a pleasing feature of the service. The meetings will be held every Sunday evening at eight o'clock (weather permitting). A covered platform supplied with electric light forms a convenient and easy point of vantage for the speakers. The presence and help of local friends are invited.

PREB. SHELFORD ON MIRACLES.

On Wednesday, 12th inst., in connection with the June lectures of the London Diocesan Church Reading Union at SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C. (at 1.15 p.m.), Prebendary Shelford said: "The miracles of our Lord have been attacked in three different ways; they have been called (1) pious frauds, (2) myths, (3) the exercise of natural forces then generally unknown. As to the first, we cannot conceive that a good man could perpetrate a 'fraud,' however pious. Our Lord is acknowledged to be pre-eminently good; He was incapable of fraud.

"As to the second, we are told that our Lord was a great moral teacher, and that the miracles were an afterthought, woven seriously into the accounts of his life by his devoted and admiring, but mistaken, disciples. But remark, the miracles of our Lord and his discourses are inseparable; many a moral discourse of his turns upon some miracle; many a miracle resulted in a moral discourse. The defenders of the 'myth' view are driven into a corner. If you give up the miracles, you must give up the discourses, too; then subtract both discourses and miracles from the Gospels, and what have you left? Have you enough to convert the world? Have you enough to account for the great spread, growth and influence of Christianity, which has spread civilisation and brotherly love over the earth?

"Lastly, as to the third. We know, of course, that the world of Christ's day was ignorant of much which we now know of natural powers and forces. Ordinary things in medical, electrical, and other sciences to-day would have been reckoned miracles then. But think; would it not be a miracle in itself for a simple Galilæan peasant to have foreseen and foreknown such powers? The argument at once falls to the ground. Now, we are told that because miracles do not happen, they cannot happen; that they conflict with what is thought to be the law of nature, as found by modern science. Yet in ourselves we know that we can prevent the laws of nature from operating at certain times and under certain conditions; we know that mind is greater than matter; we can control our bodies. If this is so with us, ought we not to assume that it is much more so with the God who governs all things? Assume that the Incarnation is a fact; that Jesus Christ was the Son of God; we at once see how mighty works could show themselves forth in Him. It has been well said that the miracles which He did amounted only to the natural workings of nature performed instantaneously instead of by degrees. Nature turns water into wine, and multiplies food, and raises the dead. If the miracles do nothing more, they at least keep alive the conviction that there is One in heaven who is victor over every form of evil and misfortune, and will bring us safe through all."

CHINESE AND THE WAR.

In a letter dated Lao-ho-kéo, April 5, Mr. Wm. Cameron, of the American Bible Society, who had returned from a successful three months' journey in the provinces of Ho-nan and Shen-si, says:—

The war has been the means of scattering a more correct knowledge of outside nations. The first question is, "Which country do you belong to?" Then follows a general talk on geography, after which they listen to the Gospel. In connection with this I may add that the difference between Roman Catholics and Protestants is becoming more understood. The Romanists are hated by the people.

I tested the sincerity of the officials to protect foreigners travelling just now. They are really alive to this important point, and are taking great pains to keep themselves informed of our movements and to offer protection. Indeed, I was secretly escorted nearly all the time, and handed over from city to city without their referring to me at all. Not once did I have to apply for help; by simply giving my card I was allowed to pass. The city people know about the war, though many are ignorant as to the real facts of the case. The people were as friendly as I ever found them before the late war took place.

Over 300 Scripture portions were sold, and many thousands of people heard the Gospel preached.

THE UNVEILING.—24.

THE THIRD WOE.—THE SEVENTH TRUMPET.—I.

THE Sixth Seal brought us to the verge of the coming doom of the ungodly world, when they cry to the rocks to fall upon them and the hills to cover them, from the wrath of God and of the Lamb. The Sixth Trumpet brought us to the end of the Second Woe, when in spite of God's long-suffering and their pain under the plagues which slew a large proportion, represented by a third, they repented not. And now at the close of the two episodical visions of the Little Book and the Two Witnesses we are brought to a similar result: the inhabiters of the earth, the ungodly world, rejoice whenever the Witnesses are slain; but when they ascend to heaven at the resurrection of the just, and a great earthquake follows in which were killed 7000 names of men, that is men of name, the rest were affrighted and gave glory to the God of heaven.

Not that they repented, but like Achan they confessed their sin; or like Pharaoh's magicians they say, "This is the finger of God"; or like Ahab they humble themselves and go softly; or they act like Judas, who cast down the thirty pieces of silver and went and hanged himself. When sick unto death men vow that if they recover they will serve the Lord: but how often their goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away.

Nevertheless, the First and Second Woes and the testimony of the Witnesses have been intended to lead men to repentance; and these actings of God have not failed, for it has been true throughout the ages that "as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." And whosoever is willing is thus ordained, for, "He that is athirst, let him come; he that will, let him take the water of life freely" (Acts xiii. 48; Rev. xxii. 17).

"The Second Woe is past, and behold the Third Woe cometh quickly." That is, the vision of the Second Woe was past, and the vision of the Third Woe followed quickly. The two former Woes continue as long as the day of grace lasts, for the sting which every lust carries in its own tail (the First Woe), and the direct judgments of God in this life (the Second Woe), are his severe mercies, the goodness of God leading to repentance. But the Third Woe comes quickly when these are past. The Seventh Trumpet sounds, and the mystery of God is finished. Great voices in heaven say, "The kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever."

This takes us back to the previous chapter. "And the angel which I saw standing upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by Him that liveth for ever and ever, who created the heaven and the things that are therein, and the earth and the things that are therein, and the sea and the things which are therein, that there should be delay no longer; but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he is about to sound, then is finished the mystery of God, according to the good tidings which He declared to his servants the prophets" (Rev. x. 5, 6, 7).

This again takes us back to a similar passage in the prophet Daniel. "And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by Him that liveth for ever and ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished" (Dan. xii. 6, 7).

The "holy people" here spoken of are doubtless, primarily, the nation of Israel. But God's ways are the same, "whether it be done unto a nation, or unto a man, alike." Many a man asks concerning his own experiences, and God's dealings in providence with him, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" and the Scripture which cannot be broken, whether it be done unto a nation or an individual, evermore repeats the same reply: "When He shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people [or of the man only], all these things shall be finished." "For the Lord shall judge his people, and repent Himself for his servants, when He seeth that their power is gone, and that there is none shut up or left" (Deut. xxxii. 36).

In the youth of the nation Moses thus foretold what would be the method of God's dealings with them—viz., that when their natural human power was gone, and there was no earthly resource or help shut up or left, no god, no rock, for them to trust in, then Jehovah would appear to help them. "If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land."

To John in The Unveiling the selfsame, world-wide, life-long principle is revealed, in the vision now before us. The angel on the river said in Daniel's hearing that it should be for a time, times, and a half, until He should have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people; and John hears the Angel standing on the sea and on the earth say there shall be no longer delay, when the seventh angel shall have sounded. "And the seventh angel sounded: and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. xi. 15).

When the successive and varied dispensations of God, "whether unto a nation or a man alike," have exhausted self-dependence and shown the futility of human effort, then is God's time to act: then the Lord God, the Almighty, who was and is, takes his great power and reigns. Men have recognised this in their proverbial sayings: "Man's extremity is God's opportunity."

> This truth of old was sorrow's friend:
> Times at the worst will surely mend.

It is a very important principle which is contained in those words, "whether it be done unto a nation, or unto a man, alike" (Job xxxiv. 29). God governs nations and men on the same method. What the mind cannot grasp when presented on the greater scale of nations, may often be comprehended on the lesser scale of the individual; and on the other hand, there are ways of God which we fail to perceive in the minuter world of our own experience, which are easily observed in the history of the race. These facts explain the reason why, even to persons unlearned and of limited information, the Bible is so precious and so intelligible. An evangelist used to visit a bedridden Christian boy, whose greatest enjoyment was to read the Book of Revelation with his friend. Neither of them had any knowledge of prophetic interpretations, preterist, presentist, or futurist, but there was a personal fulfilment of the prophecy, which made it so comforting and edifying to the child and to his visitor; and the key to this individual appropriation is found in the words of Elihu—"whether it be done unto a nation, or unto a man, alike."

If acquaintance with systems of interpretation were essential to suck the honey and the oil out of the rocks of truth, few indeed of the poor of the flock would attain to the secrets of wisdom; but the Teacher and Comforter reveals them to unlearned and ignorant men, and they understand—if not upon the scale of the wider world without, yet upon that of the lesser world within—the wonderful works of God, who liveth for ever and ever, and who maketh all.

An illustration of this is found by comparison of Deut. ii. 14 with the narrative in John v. For thirty-eight years after their refusal to enter the land at Kadesh-barnea, the rebellious people were sent back to wander in the wilderness, "until all the generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host." For the same period of thirty-eight years did the impotent man lie by the Pool of Bethesda, until he had "no man" to help him, nor any power to help himself. The same period, and the same result, in the nation and in the man; and in both cases God interposes to help and bless when human power is wasted out—the nation was led into the Promised Land, and the impotent man arose and walked.

This wasting out of human might, as the necessary antecedent to Divine blessing, is the key to the mystery of God. Whether we read it concerning the kingdoms of the world, or concerning a nation, or concerning a man only, it is true on every platform, that when God has accomplished to scatter human power, and there remains no self-dependence, no natural resource, no false god shut up in reserve—when no rock but the Rock of Ages is left to lean upon—then the kingdom becomes the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and HE shall reign for ever and ever; "that the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared."

But while God takes out from among the nations a people for his name, whom He educates and trains to lean upon Him alone, the world as such never repents; but all the judgments detailed in the remaining visions of the Unveiling fall upon the false harlot church and the ungodly world. M.

AN INDIAN NATIVE PREACHER.

MR. J. DEVADASEN, writing from Vepery, Madras, says: My parents were converts from Brahminism, and my father was for nine years pastor of the church at Nagercoil. For eleven years I was a teacher in the Seminary at Nagercoil; afterwards for a time I did evangelist's work among the Hindus at Salem, and then was transferred to work with Rev. Maurice Phillips, in the city of Madras. It is nine years since I came to Vepery, where there are three evangelists with me.

Our plan is to meet in the morning, and by singing, with the help of a violin, we get an audience, to which each of us delivers an address of about a quarter of an hour's duration. Our audiences vary from sixty to 350, and occasionally we have more. In the evening we meet in a hall, to which from fifty to 200 people, of various castes and creeds, find their way. We sell books; last year we disposed of about 150 rupees' worth of tracts and Scriptures, also distributed several thousands of handbills. We trust in God that the seed will not be sown in vain.

On Sundays we help our pastor in preaching to the Christian congregation. In connection with the L.M.S. we have two churches, one in Vepery and another in Black Town, having about 350 and 150 members respectively. We have also a Boarding High School for Girls, with about a hundred scholars. Once every three weeks we go on a preaching tour. Mr. Phillips has returned from his recent furlough, refreshed in spirit and body.

The Evangelist's Work.

The Church of Christ appreciates pastors and teachers, but it has not recognised the world-wide evangelist. The Church recognises locally-appointed evangelists, and denominational evangelists, but if any presume to be Pauls and Peters, marching forward against the world, and against error, going wherever crowds go, entering every open door—the saints, as a rule, will not aid, support, and encourage such a Paulite. I use the word Paulite advisedly; the bold world-wide evangelists in 660 were the "Paulicians." Fiery and denominational thunders forbade them at that time, but they were the mighty preachers in Turkey, Italy, and Venice; even Gibbon, the Deist, says they dared to preach in Rome and all over the East of Europe.

In the eighth century the Emperor Leo boasted that he persecuted 100,000 of their disciples. If they could afford to lose 100,000, what a powerful church they must have been.* God's evangelists truly! A proof of what can be done even when popularity is an unknown thing. They were not fighting for their own name or denomination; its appellation meant to the crowd death and fires; they fought for men's souls; "Souls" was their watchword.

IS IT NOT POSSIBLE NOW

that our "churches" our "meetings," our denominations, are our sheet-anchor, virtually our watchword? "Increase our section," is to many dear saints the longing wish in our day, and that fatal barrier is arresting work in the old lands. It is not operating powerfully in China or heathen lands. "Save souls" is the cry where workers are few and opposition very great. Peter, Paul, and John, all pull together when the tide is strong against one and all; but in old lands, even saints often ignore God's converting work, if it presumes to appear outside their own fences. I fear this practically applies to every section of believers.

I speak from personal experience. It has fallen to my lot during forty years to evangelise among almost every section of the Church. I have preached with and among English clergy, Presbyterians for years, Baptists very frequently, Independents, Open Brethren, and Exclusives even, as well as among other smaller sections. I could almost count on my ten fingers all the places where the longing for "souls" completely triumphed over sectarian hopes and expectations. Alas! it was often the case that all regard for the work of souls appeared to vanish (I do not say it did vanish) when the work was outside of party lines. In such cases souls were mere accessories, mere helpers; "our own meetings" were virtually, practically, the heart's cry, and the heart's prayer.

THE EVANGELIST MUST KEEP OUTSIDE of all parties. He goes for "souls." He must preach Christ—Christ-Life; Life—Eternal Life, Eternal Salvation. His duty is to preach the Word, and place men upon God's Word; he ought to see them placed firmly on the rails of God's Word, but he must pass on, praying like Epaphras in Col. iv.: "That they may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." If he is a true evangelist he must pass on, and reap in other fields; even the weakest new-born saint finds his pasture in the Word, and it is dangerous in such a case to neglect feeding upon the Word. Some teachers even presume to draw the young saint afterwards to themselves, rather than to the Word. Teachers ought only to be Echoes of the Word, not sermon-inventors, not lecturers about the Word, and ideas of their own. The Sower, says our Lord, sows "the Word."

CAN A TRUE-HEARTED PHYSICIAN

who has health and strength, refuse to give remedies in any house whatever? He cannot refuse to go where he is asked. He is acquainted with the disease, he knows the remedy. How can he refuse? A narrow-minded bishop or a narrow-minded pastor may attack him for giving medicine outside of their particular lines, their denominational barriers, but to his own Master the evangelist stands or falls. Others may be "pay-masters," appointed as "stewards" of wealth to help and assist, but they also are only servants, and the evangelist dare not call them his popes or rulers. They can in no case whatever wield more "honour" than a parent, and a parent is not a spiritual commander-in-chief, even although he be parent in the two senses. Evangelists are of the true Church, but they are not esteemed as they ought to be, and the whole work of the Lord languishes on this account. The evangelist is the ploughman and the sower. He ought to be greatly esteemed and much encouraged. But every self-made evangelist is not an evangelist: "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Every well-intentioned preacher is not an evangelist; he must be an acknowledged winner of souls, and he must be allowed full and complete liberty—no chain must bind him. Mr. Moody is not bound, I fancy, or he could not work. Mr. Radcliffe, my old friend, has always been free. Brownlow North chained himself up once at the suggestion of men, but broke loose again, and was a bold, able workman once more.

I am not referring in this paper to either pastors or teachers; these remarks do not apply to pastors. That subject requires to be treated in quite a different way, according to Scripture. I especially ask readers not to draw inferences as to pastors or teachers from remarks as to evangelists. The Scripture lines are not at all similar. The point I do affectionately urge is, that the Church of God is virtually saying to the evangelist, "I have no need of thee"—no need virtually of the ploughman. Is it so? Gordon Forlong.

HOME-READING UNION.

A very delightful holiday has been arranged by the Social Branch of the Home-reading Union from July 5 to September 6 at the modest sum of 31s. 6d. per week. The first experiment at Keswick and Ambleside was so successful that last year parties were organised at Barmouth also, and about 700 took part altogether in the holidays. Walks and drives, with field lectures, make up the days, while the evenings are spent in boating, lectures, etc. The sum of 31s. 6d. is an inclusive charge for everything, and provides rowing and bathing as well as excursions. The committee has secured excellent accommodation in large houses or temperance hotels this year, and the success of last season has induced them to make arrangements at Tavistock and Portrush, in addition to Barmouth and Keswick as before.

Those who attend the holidays are of very varied occupations—clerks, teachers, solicitors, warehousemen, shop assistants, and parties from the great manufacturing towns who have joined for their "wakes." An enticing little programme can be had by sending a stamped addressed envelope to Rev. T. A. Leonard, 1, Carlingford-road, Green Lanes, London, N.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE CONFERENCE, at Belfast, noticed in our last issue, is the forty-ninth annual conference of the British Alliance (the parent Society), not that of the Irish branch.

WORK AMONG SEAMEN.

By the kindness of Lady Ashburton, a meeting of friends, interested in the work of the Strangers' Rest, was held at Kent House, Knightsbridge, on Thursday last. Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided in the place of Mr. John Cory, unavoidably absent, spoke of early experiences in the Rest, of its usefulness as a place of refuge, a safe resort, and a centre of Gospel testimony in a dark district. He believed God had greatly blessed these efforts among seamen.

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac spoke of the Rest as established for the spiritual well-being of sailors. After dwelling on the familiar phases of the movement and its various operations, he emphasised its evangelistic and undenominational character, and referred to the fact that the numerous agencies are carried on by voluntary workers. Hence it is most economical, the whole of the diversified and important agencies being kept in full operation, every night, all the year round, at an annual cost of some £400. Of course with more workers and an increased income, yet more might be done, for the field is well-nigh limitless. After an earnest plea for book bags and woollen cuffs, comforters, and helmets for the sailors, he passed on to speak of the Rest at Zanzibar, where Miss Beatrice Hurditch is labouring practically single-handed—Mrs. Agnew having returned for rest and change after three years' absence. Meanwhile, Captain Agnew is rendering what aid he can, but reinforcements are urgently demanded.

Surgeon-Gen. Partridge bore strong testimony to the valuable work going on in the Ratcliff Highway Rest, showing how, at a recent meeting he attended, thirteen men wished to be spoken to personally as to the way of peace, while on another occasion there were ten who seemed anxious. This kind of thing is going on constantly, and God is greatly blessing the work.

At this point a seaman was called forward, and gave testimony to the fruitfulness of the services at the Rest. Many, he knew, had been won to the Saviour, and are now witnessing for God on board ship, and in other lands.

Mrs. Agnew, who has done noble service at Zanzibar, gave some description of the work in that East African island. It is to a large extent among men-of-war's-men; although a number of merchantmen also come in. Apart from the Rest, there is, as a seaman said, "not a place in the island where a decent man can set his foot in." She had also given all the time she could to visiting the ships in port, holding short "sunset services"—that is just after work is knocked off for the day and before the sudden darkness falls; for twilight there is none. They had been able to have a meeting for natives on Sunday mornings, when there are few seamen at liberty; but, apart from this, there is practically no mission work for the natives; a fact our sister greatly deplored. It is true the Universities Mission has a work, but it is mainly among rescued slave children. Of direct missionary work for the natives, there is none. Mrs. Agnew closed by pleading for sympathy, prayer, and more workers.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch followed with a sympathetic address, warmly commending the work of the Strangers' Rest, as one which God is greatly using for the salvation of men.

Miss Everett, who has visited Zanzibar, gave a description of the place and its urgent need of missionaries. Mr. John McCall closed with a few hearty words as to his sense of the importance and usefulness of the work going on at the Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff Highway.

Further details concerning both Rests may be had from J. Theo. Isaac, Hon. Sec., Strangers' Rest, 163, Ratcliff Highway, E.

BUENOS AYRES ORPHANAGE.—For many years the want of an orphanage has been felt in Buenos Ayres, now a great city of 600,000 inhabitants. Up to the past year all Protestant orphans had to go into Roman Catholic institutions, with the usual results. This need be so no longer, as an effort made at Quilmes, a Buenos Ayres suburb, by Mr. and Mrs. Torre has been crowned with success. The necessary funds have been provided to start the orphanage and meet the small monthly outgoings. The matron is a truly Christian woman who has taken up the work for Christ's sake. The present house, a small one, is quite full with the nine inmates, but as time goes on and the institution becomes known it will be necessary to move into larger premises. Mr. and Mrs. W. Barnett (at Hutton Lodge, Brentwood, Essex), who are at present visiting England from the Argentine Republic, will be happy to reply to any inquiries.

A CHANGED LIFE.*

BY REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

I TAKE you to the same two texts as I did the night before last, Acts ii. 4, and Eph. v. 18; the one relates the fact of Pentecost, and tells us they were filled, and the other gives the command to be filled with the Spirit. Now I will try to put before you the blessedness of the life of being filled with the Holy Ghost. Having spoken previously of the preparation and conditions, I wish to speak of the blessedness of being filled with the Spirit. How can I do this better than by pointing out the wonderful change Pentecost wrought in the disciples. I think it is one of the most wonderful changes in the world's history. These twelve men had been under Christ's own teaching for three years, and yet remained apparently outside and at a distance; then all at once the coming in of the Holy Spirit made them all God wanted them to be.

I. First then look at the change in their relationship to Jesus. During his life on earth with them, they could not have Him within them. There He was outside, separate from them, very near, and very loving—and yet He was not in them. Christ taught them humility time after time. "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted"; yet at the very holy communion table they were contending who should be greatest among them. Why was this? Christ was still outside of them. He was not dwelling in them; his time had not come. What took place at Pentecost is thus described:—"At that day ye shall be in Me and I in you." Not that Christ is in us as we are in this tent. We are here, but we can go out without suffering loss. I live in an house, but I can leave it at will. That is not organic unity; but when the Lord Jesus Christ comes in He comes to become part of us. It is an organic unity; He comes to fill heart and thought and affection. All that Peter and James and John had, with Christ alongside of them, you and I may have with the life of Christ in us.

How did this change come about? By the incoming of the Holy Ghost. "In that day ye shall know that I am in the Father, and ye in Me and I in you." "If a man love Me, he will keep my commandments, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." Does not your heart long for that? Can anything short of it satisfy you? I have gazed on Jesus at Bethlehem, at Calvary, and on the throne, and my heart has rejoiced in Him exceedingly, but all the time I want something better, deeper, nearer, and that is

TO HAVE THE LIVING JESUS IN ME.

Will you not give yourself up to be with the blessed Jesus, that He may take possession of you and dwell within you? Think of it; the very mighty Jesus who died on the cross and sits on the throne condescends to become our life. The glorious risen Jesus, full of love and power, reveals Himself by the Holy Spirit in Divine nearness and power that He may have the mastery within; according to the wonderful prayer of Eph. iii. 16.

II. The second thought is the change in continuity. Jesus was not always with the disciples, He is always in us. He sent them away in the ship and waited behind to pray. Another time He took three of them and went up into the mountain, leaving the rest down below, to confront the crowd, the mocking Pharisees, and the evil spirit they could not cast out. There were times of separation. Sometimes they were with Christ, and sometimes not; sometimes alone with Him, and sometimes far from Him, the crowd thronging round Him and shutting them out from Him. But his presence by the Holy Ghost is continual and for ever. And is not that what we long for? Often a cloud comes, we know not how, and his face seems hidden. It may be bodily depression, or the cares and difficulties of this life, or even our sin; but, friends, do we not see that Jesus does love us so He cannot afford to be separate from us one instant? We want to believe more fully in the love of Jesus. No mother ever so delighted in the babe in her arms as our Jesus does in Christians who surrender themselves to Him that they may have fellowship with Him. Oh! that God would set us longing; "God helping me, but I must have the fulness of the Holy Spirit, that I may have Jesus always dwelling in my heart."

III. Another thought: look at the change wrought in their inner life. Before this it was one of failure, and weakness, and pride. The loving, patient Christ had to reprove them from time to time; but they could not help it, for they had not yet the Spirit of God in them. Peter said, "Lord, I will never deny Thee," and in a few hours he did it thrice. They did not know the evil of their own nature. Peter had said, but at the word of a maidservant, he began to curse and deny his Lord. What utter weakness. But what a change when Pentecost came! I do not say they had victory over sin, for I do not think they had to fight it in that way. The Holy Spirit (Christ by Him) became their life; and they were filled with the life and power of the living Saviour of God. You know the great work of Jesus is to take away sin. How does He do it? Many think of this merely as his taking it away on the cross. Others go further, and realise that, acting from heaven, He takes it away from the heart, cleansing and keeping. But true keeping is the light coming in and dispelling the darkness. It is the presence of Jesus by the Holy Spirit which makes us holy. Look at the disciples—so weak, so ready to deny Christ, but afterwards so bold to speak even when threatened with death: "We must obey God rather than men." Thank God for the change the Holy Spirit wrought. What does this teach us? We spoke last night of the death of self, our death with Christ, and the life by the Holy Spirit. Do we cry to God, "Lord, can I hope to be rid of this double life I now experience; this conflict?" Have we discovered our own failure, our own self-confidence, our own self-pleasing: this accursed self-seeking of our own way? There is no conquering power save the presence of Jesus. Some may be troubled with theological difficulties, wondering how much or how little sin remains. But I tell you, believe, even if you cannot explain it all. The Spirit of holiness will become the holiness of Jesus in your heart. Be content with the fact that you may be filled with the Spirit. Let Him in, and you have within you the power of holiness—the Holy Spirit, who will do his own blessed work of sanctification.

"I WILL FOLLOW THEE TO PRISON AND DEATH,"

IV. Then, again, see the wonderful blessedness of being filled with the Spirit. Look at their changed affection; see how they love one another now, how united in one body. Before there were contentious, strikes, jealousies; but when the Holy Ghost came down He moulded these believers into one body, and they were filled with the consciousness that they were members of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now they loved one another, and did

THINGS UTTERLY UNHEARD OF BEFORE.

Many of them were perfect strangers to each other, but they sold lands and possessions, gave up property, had all things in common. What made them do this? It was the Holy Spirit in their heart and life; many of the greatest difficulties in life arise from fellow-Christians. Intercourse is difficult. Two work together, and friction and difficulties come. We differ in theological views and as to the way work should be done; and how bitterly some who so differ speak and write against each other. Thus there are terrible divisions in the Church. Even among those professing to keep the love of God, to know the blessing of holiness and sanctification, what divisions arise? It is a sad sight. Take this England of yours. How many earnest Christians have so much to say against each other! How ready they are to point out where one is wrong! But, beloved, is there not underneath a vital unity which we can express in the presence of the living Father? Do you want to have love for the children of God overflowing outside your own little circle; to be set on fire with love; that the self-sacrificing love of Jesus may take possession of you, so that you may learn to bear and forbear with the long-suffering, gentleness, tenderness, the very meekness of Christ, so that you may move about as the helper and servant of all. Do you long for this? Child of God, you need to be filled with the Spirit; cry for it, claim it, rest on it. The Spirit is the Spirit of God's love, the crucified love of Jesus. Receive the Holy Ghost, and "the love of God will be shed abroad in your hearts," never to be taken away.

V. And now one more thought specially in regard to work. What a difference Pentecost made in the service and witness of the disciples. We all feel that the one important thing in connection with being filled with the Holy Spirit is power for service. Many here are workers, I doubt not. They thank God for what He has permitted them to do; yet they feel they want something very different—the joy of speaking in the power of Jesus, the consciousness that God is using them. How many Sunday-school teachers, Bible-class leaders, and so on are without that consciousness? I am weak, and stammering, and helpless, and I am often ashamed of my work, but that is of no consequence; I am in his hand, and He does as He will with me, and I know He will use me. How may we get this assurance? Look at the disciples. The Lord Jesus sent them out to do three things—to preach the Gospel, to heal the sick, and to cast out devils. When they came back they told of the last two, but I do not read of the first. I do not think their preaching resulted in much. But see them after Pentecost. Hear how Peter and the others preach the Gospel, see the floods of blessing that followed, and went on and on. Think of the boldness and of the largeness of heart. How they went out to Samaria, Cæsarea, Antioch, and on and on the Gospel spread, even to Europe. How is this? The Holy Ghost did it.

We want power for our work; we want light and wisdom to commend our Saviour to those around us. I thank God for the fresh interest in heathendom, yet I sometimes fear there may be some neglect at home. I thank God for anxiety as to Darkest England, for the efforts made for the drunkard, the poor, the outcast; but what about

THE MIDDLE AND UPPER CLASSES?

Is there no power to take hold of them? Do you remember that Sunday by Sunday in your congregations there are multitudes of unconverted? Surely there is something wrong. We want wisdom how to reach these. We need new power and love and boldness to work and pray and speak God's Gospel not only in China, but to those around us at home who are without it. We thank God, He is arousing Christians as never before to work; but it is only the beginning. If believers will take counsel of God, and wait on Him in prayer, He can make them ready for anything. Remember that He is able to do far more than hitherto. The one thing needed is the Spirit that He may do as He did at Pentecost. The Spirit gives fulness; the Spirit gives wisdom; the Spirit gives the message; and the Spirit gives converting power; and, dear workers, is not that just what you need? Jesus sends no man a warfare at his own charges, in his own strength. He has provided for everything. All may have the fulness of the Holy Ghost. We need that power, whatever our work may be—preaching the Gospel, teaching a class, large or small, whatever it may be, we are powerless without the Holy Spirit of God; we may have his fulness if we will only yield ourselves to Him.

Are we prepared to receive this from Jesus, who loves to give it? God delights in nothing so much as giving the Holy Ghost to them that ask it. Shall we not claim it? Let us take four little words as steps.

Let every soul that longs for this blessing say, "I must be filled with the Holy Ghost." God commands, and I must obey.

Then let each one say, "I may be filled with the Holy Ghost." Indeed, I may: it is for me, that promise is for me. Settle Thou, Lord, every doubt; let this wretched self life be done with. In all my weakness and failure I come to Thee, and Thou hast assured me I may be filled.

Then, thirdly, let us say, "I would be filled. I long for it, I am willing." This means giving up. To get the pearl of great price the merchantman had to sell all that he had. So we have to give up all. Are you willing to give up anything, everything for this great thing, and to say, "Lord, I am willing; I would be filled."

Then one thing more. "I shall be filled." God has promised; that is enough. Never mind whether it comes to-night in floods, or as the dew in deep silence; or to-morrow, if God is preparing some other way for you. It shall come; I cannot be disappointed. Does not God delight to bestow? I claim it now—I shall be filled. My God, it is almost too much. Will Thou not do it? Yes, Thou wilt, and I shall be filled with the Holy Spirit. Father, I shall be filled in the name of Thy Son, my Saviour, Jesus, who saves from all sin, and fills with the Holy Spirit. Glory be to his name. Amen.

HOW TO HELP YOUR PASTOR.

By REV. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

The relation of a pastor and a parishioner is much like that of wedlock—a relation of mutual obligation, and it ought to be one of mutual affection and helpfulness. If at the time of his installation he has made a vow to be faithful to you, the member of his flock, you also have made an equally binding promise to be true to him. Has he not a clear right to your assistance, and just as strong a claim on your support, as you can have on him for pulpit instruction and pastoral oversight? Granting that you ought to help your pastor, how can you do it?

There are many ways in which you can strengthen his hands and cheer his heart. First of all, practise the "golden rule" towards him; do as you would be done by; put yourself in his place. He cannot always strike twelve in his sermons any more than you can always make a shrewd investment, or always finish a piece of work quite up to your promise. You do not like to be unreasonably censured; neither does he; and when you are scolding a good pastor, you are discrediting a servant of the Lord, and obstructing his work. Supposing him to be conscientious and doing his best, he has a right to your generous appreciation. If you have just ground for criticisms, take them to his study, and not to your neighbours' houses. You may really help him by the first method, provided that you go in a frank, fraternal spirit. A sensible minister will welcome a sensible criticism.

2. For a more pleasant purpose than for criticisms you may freely visit him, or ask him to your own house—and that is to devise plans for doing good. Partners in business consult together often: you are a spiritual partner with your minister. It is your church as much as it is his; it really belongs to Him who owns you both. Just as clearly is it your duty to labour for the Master as it is your pastor's duty. Put your heads and hearts together, and devise plans of usefulness and the best methods to make them successful. If he sets on foot a feasible plan for quickening church-life, aiding the Sabbath-school or the Society of Christian Endeavour, increasing the prayer-meetings, or reaching the unconverted, then back him up heartily.

3. A minister who is worthy of the name can stand an empty purse better than an empty pew or an empty prayer-meeting. It is a disgrace to a church that failure to pay an honest salary should straiten a pastor's purse; but the spiritual emptiness afflicts his heart the most keenly. Perhaps your pastor is wondering what has become of you on the evenings of the devotional meetings. The better man or woman you are, the more you are missed; the worse you are, the more you need to go. It may be that your pastor is disheartened by the emptiness of your pew on the Sabbath. He has carefully prepared a discourse for your benefit; you have lost it; both he and you suffer from that absence. For one, I am ready to confess that I have never made any converts to the Truth in an empty pew, and never have delivered a sermon loud enough to awaken a parishioner who was dozing at home, or strolled off to some other church. If a good reason keeps you at home, try to send a substitute; invite some friend who seldom hears the Gospel, to go and occupy your seat; your minister gets a hearer, and the hearer may get what will save his soul. Church-members sometimes complain that their minister does not "draw" a larger congregation; yet they do nothing to draw outsiders to the house of God by a cordial invitation to come. Help your pastor to fill the house.

4. Follow up the invitations, appeals, and counsels of the pulpit with your own efforts for the conversion of sinners. The pastor is trying to draw souls to Jesus; pray don't draw the other way. If one of your family, or one of your Sabbath-school class, comes home from the sanctuary thoughtful and tender, then aim to deepen that impression. Draw with your minister, follow up his efforts with your own. But the downward pull of your trifling talk, or your unkind criticisms, or your inconsistent conduct, may be an overmatch for the upward lift of his faithful discourse. Co-operate with Christ's ambassador in the grandest work that man or angel can covet—the work of saving immortal souls. Who doubts that if all our church-members preached Christ as faithfully in practice and in personal efforts as our average ministers preach Him in the pulpit, the spiritual droughts would give place to glorious harvests? "As ye go, preach," is a commission to the pew as well as to the pulpit.

5. A single sagacious and active helper is a rich blessing to a pastor. But several scores of them are still better. If he leans all the time on Aaron and Hur, then the rest of the flock are apt to grow lazy themselves, and censorious towards the two men who occupy the leading position; and what shall the minister do when Aaron is sick and Hur is absent from home? This is not a healthy church in which all the work, all the giving, and all the praying is done by a few individuals, even if the men are Calebs and the women are Tabithas. It is the pull of the whole church that brings the large blessing.

This touches the very core of the question "How shall I help my pastor?" Pray for him, pray with him, and practise as you pray. Peter's powerful discourse at the Pentecost was preceded by a power prayer-gathering. Saturday evening wrestlings with God in a certain church brought heart-moving sermons on the next morning, until a revival shook the whole congregation. What your minister wants is spiritual power. That is God's gift; help him to plead for it. The mightiest minister who ever trod this earth since Christ's ascension was not ashamed to say, "Brethren, pray for us."

"GOD & HOME & EVERY LAND."

Under this wide-spreading banner a great host of Christian women have been meeting in London this week for the furtherance of the temperance cause throughout the world. They have come for the annual rally of the British Women's Temperance Association, to which is added the biennial conference of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, so that the gatherings have been truly international. America has sent a delegation of some 150 ladies, all aflame with holy enthusiasm; while Australia, South Africa, and other distant countries, as well as nearer lands, have furnished representatives. The meetings extend from Sunday last to Sunday next inclusive.

The sessions had a splendid send off at the devotional gathering in the City Temple on Sunday afternoon, when the spacious sanctuary was packed with a cosmopolitan congregation the like of which is seldom seen, even in this great centre of memorable assemblies. The seat of honour in the presidential chair was of course accorded to Lady Henry Somerset, who is so deeply engraving her name in the annals of modern social and Christian reform. Round about her ladyship were such illustrious women as Miss Frances Willard, Miss Agnes Weston, Mother Stewart, from Ohio (so well remembered in connection with the Women's Whisky War), Mrs. Bottome, New York (president of the association known as the King's Daughters), Miss Jessie Ackerman, Mrs. Blaikie, of Edinburgh, Mdme. Antoinette Sterling, and many others whose devoted labours are known in all the churches.

The opening song was "Christ for the World," after which Mrs. Bottome led the assembly in prayer, full of elevation of soul and devout submission. Then a Canadian sister read from the famous "Crusade Bible" used in the whisky war, Psalm cxlvi., which was taken as the battle cry of that never-to-be-forgotten conflict with the powers of the evil liquor traffic. Through loss of voice, Miss Willard was not able fully to carry out her part in the programme, but the brief, heartfelt words she spoke were very powerful in their pathos and their appreciation of the needs of the time. She hailed the presence of so many young earnest recruits rising up to take the places of veterans who are beginning to grow weary in the war. The young American lady deputed, at short notice, to take a share in Miss Willard's duty was Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, a brilliant sample of Southern womanhood. She gained the ear and the sympathy of her audience at once, as she told how one great outcome of the present movement had been the development of comradeship in the hearts of women all the world over. She went on to describe the inception of the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union in America, an offshoot of the uprising of the older women. This section of the work has now in the States a membership of 40,000 of the flower of America's womanhood, and these expend their energies in manifold channels bearing on the welfare of the people and the purity and happiness of their homes. The speaker earnestly appealed to her English sisters to "step out from the bird cages of conservatism," and take their proper place in the ranks of those who are fighting for God and home and every land.

Mdme. Sterling having delighted everyone with her singing of two appropriate songs, the President followed with a short address. Having referred to the unique nature of the present gatherings, and some of its characteristic features, her ladyship made as the burden of her theme an appeal on behalf of the Farm Home about to be established in Surrey, as a place of retreat for those sisters who have fallen victims to the drink craving. It will be a place where all the holy influences of a true home and of loving Christian influence will be at the disposal of such as need it. A collection was made towards this scheme, and it yielded £50.

The last set speaker of the afternoon was Mother Stewart. She is a most venerable lady of eighty, but nevertheless has crossed the ocean at this time to show her zeal in the good cause. The reception accorded to her was of the warmest possible nature, and it spoke well for her powers of self-possession that she did not break down under the flood-tide of emotion. She praised the Lord that she had lived to see this day, and still more for the wonders He had wrought in the days gone by. Then came some graphic and realistic memories of the whisky war in Ohio, in which she bore a leading part; and in which God proved Himself to be indeed a hearer and answerer of prayer.

Before the interesting proceedings closed, Madame Sterling sang another solo, and addressed some ardent words to the enthusiastic and responsive audience.

THE COUNCIL MEETINGS

of the B.W.T.A. were held on Monday and Tuesday in the City Temple. At the opening session on Monday morning, Lady Henry Somerset gave her annual address as President of the Association. It dealt in most eloquent and comprehensive terms with the events of the past year; while it breathed a spirit of high hope and undaunted courage as to the immediate outlook in the warfare with the drink curse and cognate evils.

We must postpone any detailed reference to Miss Willard's presidential address to the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union delivered on Wednesday morning at Queen's Hall. It is a truly remarkable deliverance, and we wish it could be read and pondered in every Christian home. It is published from 33, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

IMMORTAL LIGHT.

Stream golden light, in quickening rays,
Where fall the blossoms of the spring;
Now may the riper summer days
A richer wealth of verdure bring.

They fade—the bright laburnum flowers,
The lilac and the may are spent;
We miss their mauve and yellow flowers,
We miss the fragrance of their scent.

The early joy, the early light,
The first-born love of spring is past,
The faint, fresh green, the blossoms white,
So fair, so frail, they could not last.

But summer doth its wealth bestow,
Ere scarce we know young spring is dead;
Dissolving in the dazzling glow
Of glorious autumn, ripe and red.

So come, so come, Immortal Light,
To us who feel life's spring is o'er;
Oh, source of pleasures infinite,
Thou still hast "better things" in store.

Immortal Light, we droop, we fade,
Our first-born freshness all is fled;
Uprise, uprise, dispel the shade,
With living beams revive the dead.

For Thou canst meet our utmost need,
Thy faithfulness shall calm our fears;
The latter days may still exceed
The glory of the former years.

For Thou canst fuller light reveal,
As we advance along our way
With richer grace each season seal
Until we gain "the perfect day."

THE SCOTCH DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE have issued a report recommending the compulsory detention of inebriates.

MR. GEORGE MÜLLER'S REMINISCENCES.*

IF we desire answers to prayer we must pray, first, according to the Word of God, and with the desire, on our part, that what we ask may be for his glory. Some may say we do not know what would be for the glory of God; then ask Him to teach you, and young Christians may also seek advice from elders.

Second.—We must believe that God is both able and willing to grant our requests.

Third.—If our prayers are to be answered we must not go on in any evil course. This does not mean that we are free from all failures, but, as the Psalmist says, "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me."

Answers to prayer may come while we are asking the Lord, or in an hour, a day, a month; or may be delayed for years. That had been the speaker's experience; but when he had long to wait, meanwhile God gave patient submission to his will. It is our business to wait God's time, and having done so, He will give special cause for praise when the answer comes. Thousands of times during nearly seventy years he had thus to praise God.

Continuing, he said:—For sixty-four years six months I have had no fixed income; but looking to the Lord He has invariably supplied all my needs. This has been no mere trifle, for during my long missionary tour my expenses were heavy, making it necessary to pay down sums of £100, £150, and at one time £250 at once. Yet for all these many years I have never told a single person (excepting my wife) of my needs, but only my Heavenly Father, and so literally have I carried out this solemn purpose with God that I have never given the least hint to anyone else for more than sixty-four years. There are many who say they trust in God; but if they really do so, they will keep to themselves that they are in need, telling God only, and only speaking to their fellow-men after the answer has been given.

Many years ago I saw that what was most needed in the Church of Christ was increase of faith. From lack of faith all kinds of artifices were used to get money for carrying on Christian work, and thus I saw God was dishonoured; it looked as if God was so poor that He could not pay for his own work. Therefore I determined to found what was then a very little institution, viz., the Scripture Knowledge Institution, on different principles. This was commenced March 5, 1834, with the object of giving to the world an example of what could be done by simple trust in God. Therefore there has been no asking for money to carry on the work, but every need of the Institution has been referred to the living God. As the needs increased, the supply of funds increased; and this little Institution has grown so large that we have needed £40,000 to £45,000 in a year, all of which has come in answer to prayer.

Someone may wish to ask, "How much have you received in answer to prayer?" £1,373,826, all simply in answer to prayer. I could challenge anyone in the wide world over to say I had ever given a hint of my needing money, much less asking for any. Expect great things, and great things you will have. Thus answers will come to prayer. While ready to praise the Lord when He inclined this or that one to send me 6d., 1s., or 2s. 6d., yet there was no limit to what He was able to do; and I have had, in like manner, to praise Him for gifts of £5000, £7000, £8000, and £12,200. All thanks to God for what He is not only able but willing to do. The great point is to have large expectations from God alone.

Now, what has been done with the large sum I have been entrusted with? 1. I have had 117 schools—day, Sunday, and adult schools—in which all the teachers are Christians, and 120,938 pupils have been taught in those schools, and I know that thousands of them have been brought to Christ as their Saviour. When 12,000 miles away from home I met with those who had been blessed in these schools—some in China, Japan, Australia, India, America, and other countries.

2. I have spent considerable sums in the circulation of the Scriptures, tracts, etc. I knew my bank in heaven could never be broken, and I expected handfuls of sovereigns, and the Lord gave me bowls full, so that I have been able to distribute 271,110 Bibles. While the Pope had power in Italy not a Bible could be sent there, specially to Rome, but since then I have sent thousands to Rome, other parts of Italy, and to Spain; also copies of the New Testament, 1,416,840 in various languages, besides Gospels (218,500) and Psalms (21,150). Again I say, expect great things, and great things you will have.

3. I have helped missionary labourers in various parts of the world. I asked, and God has given £250,000 for missions. Not a little sum, but my Heavenly Father delighted to give, and with joy Mr. Wright and I sit down and apportion £1000 at a time for missions.

4. My heart yearned for destitute orphans, and I felt how delighted I should be to care for such. I asked God to give me the means to do so, and took a house in Wilson-street, St. Paul's, Bristol, and fitted it up for thirty orphans. Six months later I added another house for thirty-six more, then a third house for thirty, and a fourth house for thirty more. Thus we had in the four houses in Wilson-street 126 orphans and eleven helpers.

As the applications for orphans to be received continued to increase, I was led to build the first of the five houses on Ashley Down for 300. I prayed for direction and for a site for thirteen weeks. Land meanwhile offered at £1000 per acre, but this I felt was far too much to give. At length I heard of land on Ashley Down which was for sale at £200 per acre. I went to the house of the owner, where I was informed that he had not come home from business. I therefore went to his office in the city, where I was informed that he had left for the day. It was then a question as to going back to his house or leaving my doing so till the following morning, and as I had been allowed to miss seeing him in my two efforts to do so, I decided to wait till the morning. When I called at the owner's house the next day, he said he knew what I had come about, for he had not been able to sleep the previous night, but had been lying awake for three or four hours, and God had told him that if I came again he must sell me the land at £120 per acre instead of £200. Thus I purchased the seven acres for £560 less than I should have done the evening before. It is precious to follow the leading of God's hand.

I then built No. 1 orphan house for 300 orphans, followed soon after with No. 2 for 400 ditto, then No. 3 for 450; but as I still had 900 more orphans waiting for admission, I asked my Heavenly Father what I should do; and the answer came, to build two more houses each for 450 orphans, costing £60,000. And thus God has blessed and supplied the means all in response to the prayer of faith. We have thus been enabled to take under our care 9416 orphans, some having been in the homes as much as seventeen years. Many of these are now preachers of the Gospel, some are converted grandparents having converted children who are parents, and very many occupying responsible positions in life. What joy and delight God has given me, all in answer to prayer, poor sinner as I am. Yet God, for Christ's sake, has allowed me to accomplish this. If any should be tempted to say, it is no use for me to expect answers to prayer, then remember how much He has given George Müller; and He is no respecter of persons. If you expect great things God will give on account of the worthiness of Christ. The crowning blessing I have received in answer to prayer is in the many thousands of souls saved through this work and my ministry all over the world. May many be stirred up to seek like blessing.

* Notes of an Address at Bethesda Chapel, Bristol.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, of 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W., has issued a summer plea, calling attention to the Tent meetings which have been held in hundreds of towns and villages. "In these tents—moved from place to place (during some summers twelve and even sixteen tents have been employed at the same time)—multitudes, utterly unattracted by ordinary religious services, have heard the Gospel of God; and not a few, brought to a saving knowledge of Christ thereby, have subsequently proved earnest workers for Him, and in some cases preachers in the very marquees in which they were converted. The season has now arrived again for sending forth these tent evangelists, but for this we require a considerable sum of money to cover expenses; while, alas, our exchequer is empty and in arrears, so that we are powerless to move at present. Meanwhile, the tents remain, packed ready for despatch, in our stores behind Kilburn Hall. Who will enable us to send them forth?"

ITALY AND THE PAPACY.

DR. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, of Venice, writing in the May issue of A Voice from Italy,* gives among other signs that the Italian nation has found out the Papacy, the following facts:—"Once upon a time Italians divided mankind into two classes—Christians and Protestants. By Christians they meant themselves, and they called themselves so, not because they were disciples of Christ, but because they happened to have the misfortune to be born within the pale of the Papal Church. By Protestants they meant all the world besides, who, no matter though 'they bore in their bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus,' were outside Popedom. The distinction was, of course, originated by the Papacy, and it was so instilled into the minds of the people that they used it without thinking what it implied. Now, however, Italians have changed their division of mankind, and their phraseology. It is no longer 'Christians and Protestants,' but it is 'Christians and Clericals.' The new distinction is found in the Press and in common conversation. By 'Christians,' they now mean Protestants and all who follow Christ, and by Clericals they mean priests and all who follow the Pope. The distinction is a right one. I do not mean to say that there may not be Papists who are Christians, but the system is radically anti-Christian, and in Italy, as I believe to a greater or lesser extent everywhere, it destroys Christian principle and Christian life. As I have heard it defined by Italians themselves, 'It is an arrangement between man and man for immunity in sin.' Christianity saves a man from sin, Popery saves a man in sin, or rather pretends to do so.

"Signor Giovanni Bovio, a professor in the University of Bari, and a member of the House of Deputies, has been reading the New Testament, and he has evidently come to the conclusion that if Christianity has anything to do with Christ, then the Papal Church is not Christian. He is accordingly writing a trilogy, consisting of three booklets in the form of plays, one on 'Christ at the Feast of Purim,' one on 'Saint Paul,' and one on 'The Millennium.' The first two have been published. In the first he brings out the true character of Jesus Christ, as full of love and human sympathy, and Christ Himself as our Saviour, delivering a man from self and sin, and not needing to be interceded with by his mother, nor by anyone else, and who saves independently of, or rather in spite of, Papal Church services. In the second he brings out the power of faith. St. Paul's strength lies in his faith. Signor Bovio places St. Paul in the Mamertine prison on the Capitol in Rome. This prison, as is well known, has for long been associated with St. Peter's imprisonment. Indeed, it is called S. Pietro in Carcere (St. Peter in Prison). Signor Bovio brushes all that aside as Papal fiction, created for the purposes of the Church. There St. Paul is made to dispute with Seneca the philosopher, with Lucanus the poet, and with Eleazar, representing Judaism. In contrast to the weakness of philosophy, of poetry, of ceremonial, and of imperial Rome, is brought out the power of faith in Jesus Christ. The Italians are not buyers of books, but upwards of 40,000 copies of each of these booklets have been sold.

"I have read 'St. Paul' twice with an Italian official in Venice, and he wants to read it a third time, for the oftener he reads it the better he likes it. The characters of Christ and St. Paul are revelations to the Italians, and the power of love and of faith captivates them. But such teaching does not suit the policy of giant Pope, and so the books have been put on the Index, and they and their author have been denounced from all the pulpits of the land. Happily giant Pope is a weak man now, at least in Italy. He wants the secular arm. Spiritual power departed from him long ago. And so Signor Bovio has replied to the Papal fulminations by saying that if he believed the Church had any power either to hurt or bless him he would not be able to eat his dinner or sleep at night. But he said, 'It is a rotten branch on the trunk of Christianity. It is a Church fuori di Cristo (outside Christ). It is a Church with no faith. Therefore it is powerless.' Then he added, 'There may be a revival of religion in Italy, but it will be one in which the Church of Rome will have no part.'"

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 23.—1 JOHN I.

The Word of Life (1-4).—As the aged Apostle wrote these words, his mind must have travelled back to many an episode in the past, when he enjoyed the personal contact with Jesus to which he here refers. He heard the voice, saw the person, and touched with his hands the very body, in which the of Deity tabernacled. The life of God was manifested in that body born of the Virgin, and it may also be through each of us, when yielded to the Holy Spirit. (3) When we have acquired some new conception of truth, let us pass it on, that others may have partnership in its blessing. (4) Tongue can never tell all that is involved in this blessed fellowship. It is really a partnership, we share in the power and grace and resources of God. Surely here is room for joy.

A Message from God (5-10).—No impurity or insincerity is possible to God, or to those who walk with Him. We may talk as we will about fellowship, but clearly we have no part or lot in the matter, if there is known impurity or insincerity. (7) The one aim of each believer should be to maintain a walk that shall not grieve the Holy Spirit; then the fellowship is unbroken. And if there be still sins of ignorance, of which we are not aware, the blood of Jesus will cleanse them away. (8) There is a difference between sin and sins. The one the root, the other fruit. (9) Directly David said I have sinned, Nathan said, the Lord hath put away thy sin. God does not only forgive, He cleanses. He is faithful to his promises, and just to his Son. Notice the ifs of these verses, which form a compendium of doctrine according to godliness.

MONDAY, JUNE 24.—1 JOHN II.

That we may not sin (1-6).—It is evidently possible to be kept from known or presumptuous sin. Tempted we shall be, it is inevitable, and yet we may be perfectly kept by the grace of the indwelling Spirit. But if we are overtaken by some sudden inrush of temptation, let us not despair, our Advocate ever maketh intercession for us. (3) The evidence of a saving knowledge of Jesus is obtained not from the memory of a rapturous experience, but because for his sake we do things we should not otherwise do. (5) We all desire to be full of love; probably we shall get it best by continuing with patient obedience to do his will as it is unfolded to us. (6) We not only know Him, but we are in Him, and the evidence of this is the daily walk, the endeavour on our part to repeat, as far as we may, his blessed life.

That we may love (7-11).—Light involves love. If you do not love, you are certainly not in the light. And if you are dark, it is not because there is no light, but because you are blinded to it.

That we may do God's will (12-17).—There are gradations in spiritual life and growth, as also in experience. Let us ask ourselves how many of these clauses, introduced by because, are real to us. Let the love of God expel that of the world. That alone can give permanent satisfaction and peace. To do the will of Jesus this is best.

That we may abide (18-29).—His anointing had evidently taken place at a definite point in the past. But its effects were abiding, and especially in opening the eyes to see and the heart to know. (24) It is very necessary to live in the power of the indwelling Spirit, by whom we are enabled to dwell in the Son and the Father. (27) Thus, even in this world, we taste eternal life. (28) The supreme result which the Holy Ghost can communicate is to secure an abiding union with Jesus. The sum of religion is the perpetual and conscious union of the soul with God.

TUESDAY, JUNE 25.—1 JOHN III.

The Father's Love (1-12).—We can never understand why God has so loved us, but there is no doubt that He has done so.

Such we are (R.V.).—If we are children now, what may not the future unfold, when we have entered upon our inheritance? But the thought of seeing Jesus will make us almost careless of what happens to us. To see Him will be to resemble Him. (3) "He is pure"—that is a sinful man's verdict on Christ. It is also the verdict of the holy Apostle, who had lived in close fellowship with Him. We cannot think of our present and eternal union with Him, and not long to be as pure. Ask Him to be in thee a fountain of purity. (6) Obviously this refers to premeditated and presumptuous courses of sin. (8) He will destroy the devil's works out of the universe, and in thy soul. (9) The Divine part in us is not capable of sin; we sin when we desert this and live in the self-life. (10) Lovelessness and unrighteousness are closely akin. Do right, and you will come to feel right.

The Brother's Love (13-24).—Love to the brethren is a sign that we have been born into the family. If we love, we live; if we live, love will be as a blossom on the tree. (16) Love is not measured by the expression of our lips, but by the amount of sacrifice we are prepared to make. (19) The heart is sometimes afraid to say that it loves, so unworthy and fluctuating are its best moods, but God knows and reads the inarticulate yearning. (22) Mark this double condition of successful prayer. (23) It is absurd, therefore, for men to say that they cannot believe. God commands them to believe, and if they are willing, He enables them to do so. "Give what Thou commandest, and command what Thou wilt."

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26.—1 JOHN IV.

The Spirit of Antichrist (1-6).—In those days the intense ferment of men's minds wrought many delusions and heresies which were full of temptation to young converts, and the Apostle was eager to give indications to determine which voice spoke from God. The confession of Jesus Christ as the Incarnate Word, the spirit of love and gentleness, the willingness to be taught by the Apostles, were signs that those who spoke had been commissioned by the Master. When the Spirit of God is in the simple and childlike, they can instantly detect and overcome the spirit of falsehood and error. Wouldst thou overcome the world? Let Christ into thy heart. He is greater than the world?

The Perfect Love of God (7-21).—There is only one source for pure, unselfish love, and wherever that is present you know that the heart within is a child of God, whilst those who boast their religious life, but are unloving, neither know God nor are born of Him. (9) The love of God gives its best. (10) And loves the unloving, putting away their sin, and bringing them into union with Himself. (12) The love of God is perfected in those who are willing to be the channels through which it may flow to others. As we give out we are conscious that God is within. (14) Through Christ we know the Father, and as we know the Father we know the Son. (16) Do you know and believe God's love? We first venture on it, and then come to understand it. We understand it best when we practise it. The sponge is in the ocean, and the ocean in the sponge. A life of love is a life in God. (17) By union with Christ we become levelled to his standing, so that as He is before the throne we are in this world, and for us the future has no terror, because we shall always have Christ in all the time that is to be. Judgment itself will have no alarm for those to whom Christ is all. (20) Would you have this love, then be willing to love, believing that through the channel of your will the flood-tide will come to men.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27.—1 JOHN V.

Water and Blood (1-12).—The begotten children of God are constantly referred to in this epistle; the word indicates the impartation of the Divine nature, the first evidence of which is love. This love is not a weak sentimentality, but strong vigorous obedience to the Divine love. (4) The Divine life manifests itself also in faith, that realises the other world, and so overcomes this. Let your faith entwine around the risen Son of God, and it will wean you from this transient scene. (6) We need not only the water of repentance, but the blood of propitiation, and in co-operation with these two the Spirit bears witness to the soul. (9) God is ever speaking in the world, saying, as on the Mount of Transfiguration, "Hear ye Him." (11) Eternity begins for the soul which answers the summons; to have the Son in loving daily faith—this is to have the life of God, and the God of life.

Boldness towards God (13-17).—We know that we have eternal life. We know that God hears us if we comply with the conditions of true prayer. We know that we can get life for men from Him. And so, through his grace, we may unhesitatingly and boldly stand before Him, having power with God and man.

Eternal Life (18-21).—The Only Begotten keeps the begotten. Evil can no more reach them than blight could touch the bush in the wilderness around which the Divine fire burnt. (19) What a marvellous contrast! Who would go back to the world! (20) Enumerate and press to the heart these four items of positive knowledge. (21) But watch and pray lest what is perfectly innocent and natural may take the place of God and become an idol.

FRIDAY, JUNE 28.—2 JOHN.

To the Elect Lady (1-13).—This exquisite letter, a model of the old-world correspondence, was written when St. John was probably the guest of the nephews of the lady whom he addresses. His epistle revolves around the two words, love and truth, as though in his old age these two became the pivot of his life. Mark some of the beautiful touches. (2) That truth is in us because Christ abides within who is the truth; that the horizon does not bound our vision, which reaches out to the for-ever. (3) The soul is sure that grace, mercy, and truth will always be with it, as long as it walks in peace and love. (5) The repetition of the Saviour's new commandment, which is here attributed also to the Father. (6) The definition of love, that it is obedience. (8) The pastor's eager anxiety that they should not lose the things which he had so carefully wrought, or miss any of their reward. (9) The necessity of going on in the teaching of Christ, as the condition of abiding in it; the secret of having God in having his words. (10) The stern puritan spirit. (12) The yearning of human affection, which is not extirpated, but deepened and enhanced by the love of God. The sense left by the whole of the tenderness, purity and strength of the early Curch. All these rays flash in this exquisite jewel, without which the canon of Scripture would have been incomplete. Let us see to it that all our letters contain words which our correspondents would be unwilling to let die.

SATURDAY, JUNE 29.—3 JOHN.

To Gaius (1-14).—Again we meet the repetition of the words love and truth. Probably transparency of speech and life is more important than we have thought, to soul-health. (2) It would not be possible to express this wish to all our friends, lest, if their bodies represented the state of their souls, they should suddenly fall into ill-health, and be scarred by disease. (4) Are we walking in the truth? In the old legend the mirrors showed a mist when any entered the chamber who were not in perfect harmony with truth. (6) The Christian man has always to act worthily of God, especially in his dealings towards strangers. Children must keep up the honour of the family name. (7) "For the sake of the Name" reminds us of the frequent reference to it in the early Church. The name of Jesus was the watchword in those great, simple days. The early missionaries of the Church seem to have taken an honest pride in not receiving maintenance from the world; hence the greater need that Christians should care for them. (8) Such hospitality makes us fellow-workers with the truth. (10) Something of the spirit that suggested calling fire from heaven still burnt in the heart of John, but refined and purified. (12) Live a life that may have this threefold witness borne to it. (13) We can never say all we would on paper. The play of the expression and tone cannot be transferred. Face-to-face fellowship is the choice of those who love. What will it not be when the dimness of earth's converse is exchanged for the face-to-face intercourse of eternity!

A PASTOR'S DYING MESSAGE.

We have received the following touching letter from a dear Christian pastor, whom the Chief Shepherd is calling home:—

Dear Friend,—Since leaving the field last April, I have been very ill, and am now in a consumption, my life ebbing gradually but surely away. Looking back on my past life, in which I have been mixed up with you in different enterprises, the Moody and Sankey movement, etc., I feel more than ever convinced of the value of the Personal Appeal Society, which a letter you published in The Christian did much to help forward.

Before leaving for the better land, I send you the rules again, for if someone would take up the work great good might oft be done:—

That we will ask the Lord for opportunities to speak or write personally to the unsaved.

That we will look out for such opportunities.

That we will meet once a month for prayer and consultation.

In these, my dying days, Jesus is if anything more precious than ever.—Yours in Him,

R. Tutin Thomas.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 30.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Heb. xii. 2.

THE whole of this series of lessons is included in the brief period of about six or seven weeks. The Triumphal Entry—the first of the series—took place on the Sunday preceding our Lord's passion, and the Ascension, which closes the series, was only forty days after the resurrection. No similar period of the world's history has ever been crowded with events so momentous.

Very few notes are needed to assist in such a review. Present as vividly as possible, some of the prominent scenes introduced, beginning with a triumphal procession, with Jesus as the chief of the people's enthusiasm, and show the jealousy excited in the priests and elders. That is the rumbling of thunder that tells of the coming storm.

Next scene, in lesson iv., is in an upper room, after the celebration of the Paschal supper. Another feast is being instituted, intended to keep in perpetual remembrance the death which awaits Jesus, and to show forth the blessing which that death procures for his people. It appropriately displaces the Old Testament feast, which was not only a reminder of deliverance past, but a prophecy of a greater deliverance to come.

The scene again changes to the garden (lesson v.), where three men sleep, while One spends the night in earnest and importunate prayer. It is impossible to recall that incident without having a deeper hatred to sin, and an intenser love to the Saviour.

Lesson vi. presents our Lord as a prisoner before the high priest, falsely accused, condemned to death, and basely insulted. And the next lesson finds Him before the bar of Pilate, a weak vacillating man, in whom conscience and self-interest are at strife. Here, on a totally different charge, sentence of death is passed upon Him. Pilate, through fear of man, has done violence to his own conscience, and has written against himself a crime which he can never erase.

The next lesson (viii.) finds Jesus as a malefactor enduring the death of the Cross. Apparently his enemies have triumphed, and He has suffered defeat. But it is not so. The Golden Text of this lesson explains the true significance of his death.

The resurrection, which is prominent in the remaining lessons of the series, turns the triumph of his enemies into ignominious defeat, gives assurance of God's perfect acceptance of his atoning work, and becomes the pledge and pattern for the future resurrection of his people.

Among the lessons suggested by the series, the first is the perfect security of those who trust such a Saviour. God is satisfied with the work Jesus did in our behalf, we may be satisfied too. (See Rom. viii. 34.)

The remarkable fulfilment of prophecy suggests another lesson. The riding into Jerusalem; the time of his death; the betrayal; the manner of his death; the incidents connected with his death; and the triumph that followed—all were foretold. Our Lord lays special emphasis upon this lesson (Luke xxiv. 27, 44-46).

Very practical lessons are suggested by the persons brought into connection with Jesus. They are types of men living to-day, and suggest various ways in which we may treat Jesus. The people chose a murderer in place of Jesus; Herod only made sport of Him; Judas sold Him for gain; Pilate hesitated and vacillated, but finally yielded to the wishes of the people, though his conscience rebelled; the disciples, though they wavered, still were true to Him. How do we treat Him now.

RESCUE WORK IN EDINBURGH.

COMPARED with other large cities the streets of Edinburgh are pure. Through the vigilance of Captain Henderson, chief of the police, importuning is strictly forbidden, and offenders summarily dealt with. The reports of various homes speak of good work done—the Magdalene Asylum, Alnwick Hill and St. John's Hill, Park House, and Joppa Home, not to speak of lesser homes, each filling its useful corner. The Episcopal Church is on the field, the Salvation Army have opened a shelter, and latterly the Roman Catholics have done the same.

Taking the work as a whole, there is more to encourage than to discourage. Many girls have gone to situations, where they are visited from time to time by one of the assistant matrons, in some instances remaining in the same place from periods of one to six years. Others have returned to home and friends, while others have married. One girl, who died in the Magdalene last year, gave "most decided testimony that she was resting simply and solely on Christ for salvation; and this light, shining so clear out of the darkness, has kindled in many a heart a love to the same Saviour." For the Young.

THIEVES IN THE BIBLE.

IT is Sabbath; and the happy evening hour has come when the children gather round their father's knee to receive simple, yet wise, instruction from God's Holy Word. Five merry children—three boys and two girls—gladdened the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hastings. Their names were Jack, Walter, and Douglas, Jessie and Nellie, and just now they form a pretty group, the bright intelligent look upon each face showing that this is a welcome, pleasant time to them.

Mr. Hastings never allowed anything to interfere with his all-important duty of trying to create a love of knowledge in the hearts of his children. He was rewarded by seeing the interest each one, from the oldest to the youngest, took in trying to answer his questions correctly.

After the simple lesson, came a story, which was always a source of immense delight to the young folks. On this particular Sabbath, their minister had preached from the beautiful story the Lord Jesus told about the "good Samaritan," and the children had listened with rapt attention. Jack, the eldest boy, was usually the most forward in answering his father's questions; but to-night he was almost silent. A cloud rested upon his handsome face as he heard his younger brothers and sisters giving their account of the sermon. Observing his unhappy look, Mr. Hastings asked, kindly, "What's wrong with you, to-night, Jack, that you are telling us so little about the interesting sermon we have heard to-day?"

"I am very sorry, papa," replied Jack, "but no sooner had Mr. Duncan began to speak of the poor man who set out unprotected on the dangerous road from Jerusalem to Jericho, than off my thoughts went to the story I had been reading, called 'Adventures Among Robbers.' During the greater part of the service I was imagining myself fighting in a thick forest with fierce men. But I remember the golden text, and something that the minister said about it," continued Jack, more brightly.

Mr. Hastings looked grave and sad as he listened to his son's confession; but knowing he was of an impetuous nature, and that, boy as he was, he possessed a vivid imagination, he refrained from reproving him severely, and simply said, "Let us hear what you do remember, then." Thereupon Jack repeated, "'Who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of that which is good?' Mr. Duncan said that it is better far to trust in God's protecting care than to the use of the best weapons of defence. I know what he said must be right; yet I like the idea of doing something in self-defence, and should love to have a revolver of my very own."

Seeing that the conversation had taken this unexpected turn, Mr. Hastings said, "I'm afraid you've been paying too much heed to that book of yours, Jack. Have you ever read what the Bible says about thieves and robbers?" "The Bible, papa!" exclaimed Douglas and Nellie in chorus. "Yes, the Bible," repeated Mr. Hastings. "In other books bad men often pass for being great, and nice, and clever; but in the Bible they appear in their true characters. The most glorious truth in the whole Bible is God's great love to sinners, but He also tells us about both good and bad people, so that we may know whom to trust, and whose company to avoid. In his Word we are made acquainted with all classes of mankind, from kings and princes down to humble fishermen and tent-makers; while mention is also made of all the various trades and professions. Besides these, there are numerous stories of adventure, in which we read of many brave men and women, all written in the truest manner, so that you have no difficulty in knowing which party is in the right and which in the wrong, for you know God is only on the side of those who do right.

"This being so, it is not at all strange that we read about thieves in the Bible. The Lord Jesus tells us what a thief's work is when he says, 'A thief cometh not but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy.' In Joel ii. 9 we read in what way a thief sometimes enters dwellings: 'He enters in at the windows.' If you turn to Jer. ii. 26 you will find whether or not the thief is happy when caught at his work."

"How can anyone be happy, papa, when he knows he is doing wrong?" queried Nellie.

Before Mr. Hastings had time to reply, Jack had found the place and read aloud: "The thief is ashamed when he is found."

"Then why do people steal at all?" asked Douglas with a puzzled look.

"We must not answer this question too hastily," replied Mr. Hastings, "because we do not know how much some people are tempted. While many bad men spend their lives indulging in this sin, there are many others who when in sore straits foolishly think they must steal in order to get out of their difficulties, instead of asking God to send them relief, and believing He will do it. It is never God's fault that any of his creatures break the eighth commandment; for He has promised to make a 'way of escape' to all who trust in Him.

"Now all this information about thieves is given as a warning to us. We must neither keep company with such nor follow their example. King Solomon truly says, 'Whoso is partner with a thief, hateth his own soul.' But though we may never in all our lives have an encounter with robbers, we may at any time be attacked by robbers called Bad Temper, Selfishness, and Falsehood, which steal happiness, love, and peace out of our hearts." BY THE SEASHORE.

A plea for the seaside and country holidays for the crippled and otherwise afflicted children of the poor of London.

O YE who fly from the Babel roar,
Of the busy town away,
To the smiling fields or the glad seashore,
Where the sparkling wavelets play;

Who wander free in the winding lanes,
Or roam midst the waving corn,
Or poppied stubble where harvest wains
Piled high with their sheaves are borne;

Who climb where the mountain breezes blow,
Or glide o'er the lake's calm breast,
Midst shady woodlands or valleys low,
In the cloisters of nature rest.

Rejoice in the beauty that round you lies
In release from toil and care,
Above all in Him, who has made the skies,
The sea, and the earth so fair.

But remember this, whilst your darlings smile
Around you, as flowers bright,
There are human blossoms that fade the while,
Drooping, and frail, and white.

Rejoice in joy, but in restful ease,
Forget not the Christ King's pain,
He suffers still in his least of these,
Let Him seek not your aid in vain.

BAREILLY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

IT is now over thirty years since the Theological Seminary was opened at Bareilly, N.W.P., and it has sent out five hundred trained preachers and workers into the harvest-field in India. At the beginning of the present year sixty approved candidates were presented for entrance, but only half could be received.

The Seminary is connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church. It requires enlargement, and stands in need of support that shall increase of the tutorial staff and the reception of more students. The opening for Christian work in North India is phenomenal, and this fact imposes a serious responsibility upon the Christians of Great Britain, upon whom the millions of the great dependency have peculiar claims. Full particulars regarding the work may be had from Rev. F. L. Neeld, treasurer, at the Seminary.

CHINA.

SHEO-YANG MISSION, NORTH CHINA.

Now that the attention of so many is being drawn by the recent war to the Mission field in China, it seems a good time to seek the fellowship of God's people in his work here by that increase of prayer and interest which so often bears precious fruit among the heathen, both in the strengthening of the hands of the workers and in the salvation of souls. May I, with this object, be allowed to tell something of the work in Sheo-yang, its needs and present prospects?

Some twelve years ago my attention was first drawn hither by our late beloved fellow-worker, Dr. Harold Schofield, and I believe the present effort to be the fruit of his earnest prayers. Five years passed since he had been laid to rest; then on a journey with my wife and child, to open up the Western Chili district, being delayed two days here, we were much struck by the need and earnest solicitations of the people. Other claims, however, called us forward, and Sheo-yang, with its bitter need and lonely darkness, remained only as a sad memory. But our God had not forgotten his servant's prayers; and in May, 1892, we found his hand unmistakably leading us here and his sea of blessing on our coming. Since then, in spite of much hindrance from officials, and prejudice, and quiet opposition from the people, the work has gone on steadily.

During the first year Dr. Millar Wilson was here studying the language, and has since gone on to P'ing-yang-fu. Miss Kerr and Miss Stirling worked very earnestly here for about nine months, and were then obliged to leave by medical advice. Our main object is to carry the Gospel of Christ to a large and very needy mountain district lying around us, which is thickly studded with villages and groups of houses, hidden quaintly in the nooks and crannies of these strangely-furrowed loess hills. We do not trench on the work of others, for the nearest missionaries live two days' journey to the west of us (at T'a-yüen-fu), while on the east for 100 miles, and to the north and south for twice that distance, the ground is unoccupied. In Sheo-yang district alone there are 30,000 families and several times this number in neighbouring hsiens.

Steeped in moral vice, opium and gambling, the murder of baby-girls and the degradation of woman abound, so that there is deep, deep need; and yet there are already some true and steadfast souls, plucked as brands from the burning, who are the earnest and pledge of good things to come.

We greatly needed more workers to enter the many open doors and spread the Word. These the Lord has given us in Mr. McNair and Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Johnston. Mr. McNair hopes soon to rejoin us, accompanied by his young wife. Mr. Johnston, with his family, is now at home for rest, after working in Mid-China for some years. He is hoping to come to us next autumn, and in the interval will be happy to accept calls to tell of the Lord's work in this land, as he is desirous of getting into touch with as many of God's people at home as possible.*

Our effort is undenominational, as we have many in various sections of God's church who uphold us by prayer; and while our practice most nearly coincides with that of our Baptist brethren, we seek the fellowship of all who are thoroughly evangelical and who honour the Scriptures as "the Word from the mouth of God," by which men live. Our work consists of: First, continuous visits to fairs and villages, which has mostly been carried on through the past season by Mr. McNair and our Chinese helper, Mr. Sung, who was once a violent and quarrelsome drunkard, but is now a true servant of the Lord. Second, the treating of the sick and the cure of opium-smokers, the receiving and teaching of inquirers as well as of the many visitors who frequent the mission premises. Third, work amongst the women, carried on by Mrs. Pigott and Miss E. K. Brown. Fourth, work amongst the schoolboys, of whom we now have nine.

The first-fruits of street-preaching have lately rejoiced us much. Li-pai, a man of about forty, was a wine-drinker and quarrelsome, but of a sturdy, independent character. On my first visit in 1892, he stood among a large crowd to listen; all feared the foreigner, and one struck a child to make it keep away from me lest it should be bewitched. This roused Li-pai's indignation, and made him purchase the Gospel of St. Luke and Acts. Two years passed as he fed his large flock of sheep (he is the village shepherd of Ho-yen), and found him often pondering over the stranger's words and the wonderful Book, until those who knew him saw the wine and quarrelling given up and his dislike to idols increasing. Meantime, we had settled here, but he was shy of coming, and his large flock kept him very occupied, till on one bright morning Mrs. Pigott and I started to visit the aunt of one of those who desired to own the Lord in baptism, a Mrs. Kong, lately restored to sight under my wife's treatment.

A little lamb in Li-pai's flock had died, and he had to tramp five miles to report its death to its owner, Mrs. Kong. He came in just as we did, and soon told of his treasured Luke and the wonderful Jesus of whom it told, adding that he had ceased to worship idols. Since then he has grown bold and earnest, bringing in his comrades to the services, preaching in the houses of his employers, and bearing many a hard word for his Lord.

Miao, the innkeeper, came twice to break off opium. The first time he was much touched, but only as far as to let his little son, Heh-go, come to school. God blessed the bright lad, who would tell the story to father and mother, and protest against the idols, till at length his father came the second time to be cured of his opium habit, bringing five comrades for the same purpose. He and his friend Wang were then desirous of confessing the Lord, and only two days' since Mr. Sung came with glowing face to tell how his inn was cleared of idols, and his customers all stirred up by his testimony, some to persecute and some to hear the Word.

Mrs. Tou, the mother of my dispensary boy, was brought into contact with us on our first visit in 1888, when Mrs. Pigott went to her house to treat her sick cousin. Soon after our settling here she was again met with, and has been a regular hearer ever since. Now, with her husband, she has owned Christ in baptism, and, with Mrs. Touh, of Ni-ho, who is the first-fruit of the villages, she bears consistent testimony and helps among those who come.

The medical work amongst the women has opened many doors, but the women here are much secluded, and rarely allowed to come to the services, hence the work amongst them goes on but slowly.

With thankfulness of heart we conclude our first formal report of the work, commending it to our gracious God that He may use it for his own glory.

CENTRAL CHINA TRACT SOCIETY.

The report for last year of the Central China Religious Tract Society is a record of devoted effort, attended by much blessing. Among the new publications is one of special interest, on "Opium, Gambling, and Foot-binding," of which Dr. Griffith John says:—"It is the work of a native scholar, and perhaps the first tract produced in China by a man who had himself been converted by reading tracts. The first time I met him I found him a remarkably enlightened man; although up to that time he had never been to a Christian service, or spoken to a missionary. Since his baptism, he has attested his sincerity by the persecution he has endured. His employer objected to his Christianity, and told him he must either give it up or leave his situation, so he gave up the latter at once, although it was bringing him in 200 dollars a year."

The republication of the Society's tracts in distant places is an encouraging feature. Recently, this has been done in Corea. It has often been stated that Christian books are devoted to the soles of Chinese shoes, or consigned to the furnaces specially set up for burning lettered paper; but Dr. John speaks of books which have had quite a different history. Not long ago, in the Kingshan district, he baptized sixty-six persons, and two of those presented him with volumes which he regarded with peculiar interest. One was a set of the four Gospels, which the owner purchased twelve years previously, and the other was a New Testament which had been bought sixteen years ago. All these had been carefully preserved, and showed signs of having been well read. The presence of the books in the village opened the way to the reception of the Gospel from the colporteur-evangelist.

The Society has made steady and sure progress. In 1876, the year it was started, the tracts circulated numbered 9000; in 1883, the total was 340,000; in 1889, it exceeded a million, at which high level it has since remained. From the headquarters at Hankow, during the past six years, there have been sent forth upwards of seven millions of Christian publications—the work of the Bible Society being included. Last year the issues of the Bible and Tract Societies together were close on 1,300,000.

SOWING AND REAPING IN CHINA.

Writing from Hsing-i-fu in the Kwei-cheo Province, West China, Mr. Cecil G. Smith, of the China Inland Mission, says:—

"This city, Hsing-i-fu, is a prefectural city, in the S.W. corner of Kwei-Cheo province, and is one day's journey (twenty English miles) from the Kwang Li border. Mr. B. C. Waters came here over three years ago, and has done good work in the district, preaching and book selling. For some time he has wished to be free for work in Kwang Li, so the council appointed me after marriage to take over the Hsing-i work. My wife and I have already been here about a month; no foreign lady has ever been here, so the women come in good numbers in the evenings to the meetings, and afterwards bear the the Gospel from her lips. Hsing-i is not a big city, the population is between 10,000 and 20,000. The district, however, is large, and contains five cities and any number of markets and villages, all under the Hsing-i prefect. At present Mr. C. H. Laight is living with us; he will later on join Mr. Waters in Kwang Li. Besides ourselves there are no other Protestant missionaries in the whole district. In fact, in all Kwei-Cheo there are at present only fourteen Protestant missionaries, two of whom are ladies just arrived in Kwei-Yang, all being members of the C.I.M.

"Our little church numbers four, including native evangelist, wife and son, and Bible-woman. There is one inquirer, a soldier in the Brigadier-General's Ya-mên, and several others often come to the meetings. We hope some are getting interested. Very few of the people do not smoke opium. The General, Chen-Fai, broke off the habit some two years ago, but has gone back to it again. He is a very earnest Buddhist. Alas! his Buddha cannot save him. It makes me very sad when I read of ministers, and even missionaries, putting Buddha on a level with the Lord Jesus. I say missionaries, for they are sent out by missionary societies, but I really think they had far better stay at home. I glory in the fact that while multitudes who are under the power of sin seek deliverance in vain from their idols, there are throughout China—and Kwei-Cheo has some fine examples—many who have sought and found all they need in the living Christ. I believe God is going to use us for his glory in Hsing-i. Mr. Watson has faithfully sown the seed; now we, while still sowing, trust in God to give some reaping.

"You will perhaps like to hear of a plan I have adopted to get the natives to read their Bible systematically. They are expected to read about ten verses a day, all reading the same appointed portion, and we have this portion at morning prayers, and all repeat from memory two or more verses. We foreigners repeat as well as the natives. This makes them interested, and I find it is so far quite a success. The idea of repeating verses I learnt at Ch'ong K'ing. Some cannot read themselves, so they get others to read to them and teach them their verses to repeat.

"I have completed my fourth year in China. There have been and are many difficulties in the work, and much to try one's patience, but, thank God, He gives one such joy in Himself and in his service. As the time goes on I am more and more glad to be in China. Thank God the people are friendly, though they seem to know that China is getting beaten by Japan.

"May I say that when friends kindly send books to missionaries, expository books are often most valued? I mean such as Moule's 'Romans,' 'Philippians,' 'Outlines of Christian Doctrine,' etc., or any of Adolph Saphir's books."

Mr. Smith's postal address is C.I.M., Hankow, China.

TRAVELLERS TO AND FROM AMERICA will be glad to know that the boat trains from Euston now run direct to the Liverpool landing-stage; the river having been deepened, the largest Cunard liners receive and discharge passengers at the quay-side. This avoids the inconvenience hitherto experienced of a cab-ride across the city with luggage, and joining and leaving the steamers by means of a tender.

Miss Whigham, Edinburgh.

CHRISTIAN WORKER AND PHILANTHROPIST.

This lady, born at Edinburgh in 1820, has long been esteemed in her native city as one of the best and most useful of its citizens; her gentle manner and guileless, loving nature have found for her a way into innumerable hearts.

From her childhood to the present day the cause of humanity has been dear to Eliza Whigham, and her steady aim has been to bring the healing influence of Christ to bear on the wronged, the stricken, the erring, and the suffering. Without possessing eminent gifts of leadership, she has proved a trustworthy and unwearied worker in many a good cause, and her influence has been felt not only in her manifold personal labours, but in the genial atmosphere she has helped to create among her fellow-workers, who have always felt the better for her charity, her serenity, and her faith.

Her family, members of the Society of Friends, were connected with the North of England; early in the century her father and a cousin began business in Edinburgh, and became interested there in all matters of public concern. One of them gave much attention to prison reform; he was a member of the Prison Board of Scotland, and at an early period exerted himself in favour of the change which sent young criminals to reformatories instead of prisons. The whole family connection was imbued with the principles of the Society of Friends—belief in the love of God, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the regenerating grace and indwelling of the Holy Ghost. In 1830 Miss Whigham lost her godly mother, but her stepmother brought into the family circle a warm sympathy with all the objects that claimed their interest, and proved a faithful servant in all the work that fell to her share, till memory failed a few years before her death at the age of eighty-seven. Under the influences that surrounded her, Miss Whigham was led to Christ almost imperceptibly, and philanthropic Christian work was the natural outcome. Her family were remarkably united in principles and aims. Originally eight, the number was reduced to the four that still remain—herself and two brothers and a sister, who have long lived in Dublin.

The first great cause that specially took hold of her heart was the Anti-Slavery movement. She remembers the visit of the Rev. William Knibb, of Jamaica, and the touching description he gave of the sufferings of the negroes. Then came the proposal of gradual emancipation—a proposal scornfully rejected at a great public meeting in the Assembly Rooms in Edinburgh, at which the eloquence of Dr. Andrew Thomson, of St. George's, gained a signal triumph, especially when he threw back the taunt that emancipation might be followed by a hurricane—'Then give me the hurricane rather than the pestilence"! The spark went forth, receiving fresh force and fire from time to time; twenty millions were voted to the slave-holders; the memorable 1st August arrived, hailed by many of the slaves on bended knees, but the grace of the concession was marred by the four years' apprenticeship arrangement, against which another strong effort was needed. Miss Whigham's family were among the promoters of a great memorial to our Young Queen Victoria, which was not without influence on the final result.

The struggle for the abolition of British slavery was hardly more interesting than that which followed on behalf of the slaves of America. That, too, was a stirring and enthusiastic time, and many a heart was roused like Miss Whigham's, not only by the words of the Abolitionist leaders, but by personal intercourse also with such orators as George Thompson, William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, and Frederick Douglass. In the protection of slaves the heroism of Maria Watson Chapman, Prudena Crandall, Sarah and Angelina Grimké, and many others was another element of excitement and influence. The martyrdoms of Lovejoy, Dickard Dillingham, and many more fired young hearts, and roused to new enthusiasm. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" gave the finishing stroke to the process of excitement and conviction, and at length, during the war between North and South, came the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln, by which four millions of slaves were at once set free Much had to be done for them in their new and untried position, and Miss Whigham and her friends were ready with their help. She was not personally acquainted with the earlier abolitionists of England, Clarkson, Wilberforce, or Sir Fowell Buxton; but with Thomas Garrett, who helped to liberate 2000 slaves by means of the "Underground Railway," and Levi Coffin, who could show a similar record, she was on terms of intimacy. Joseph John Gurney and his sister, Elizabeth Fry, were also among her friends; the latter she often met at the yearly gatherings of the Society in London; her beautiful and dignified presence and earnest spiritual exercises made a deep impression.

With Mrs. Fry she had intercourse likewise on occasion of her visits to Scotland in the interest of the reforming of our prisons and similar institutions. This led to her becoming a visitor in St. Cuthbert's Workhouse, and continuing to be so for twenty or thirty years, till the Workhouse was removed to the country, too far for her to be able to go. It soon became apparent that the services of women were much needed on parochial and other boards, and for a number of years Miss Whigham acted in this capacity on the Parochial Board. Then there came up the wider question of woman suffrage, and the rights of women generally. In all such matters Miss Whigham has always had her part among the most advanced and courageous reformers. Nor has she attempted to escape the responsibility of such questions either on the plea that woman's sphere is entirely domestic, or that religion has nothing to do with politics. To care for the public interests of women was really to advance the welfare of the home; for, if woman be partially deprived of her just rights, how could she efficiently fulfil her domestic mission? And why should religion be dissociated from politics? Did not the State require religious influences to guide her as well as the home? And was it not the very object of politics to consider the relations of the State to the people, and of the people to the State, and of States to one another? And would not the happiness and welfare of the world be immensely increased if governments should be conducted on Christian principles? Had not great good arisen from the substitution of arbitration for war in cases where this had taken place? And what untold misery and waste of national resources would have been avoided if International difficulties had ever seen brought to the tribunal of Mind in place of the sword!

In the temperance warfare, likewise, Miss Whigham has taken an active part. She was one of the original members of the Scottish Christian Union, which represents, north of the border, the British Women's Temperance Association. But even before the institution of that society, and while the cause was far less popular than it is now, she was a member of a veteran "Ladies' Total Abstinence Society," one of the very earliest temperance organisations of the country, and at that time she was associated with some of the early pioneers of the cause. Many a hearty address has she given on temperance, chiefly at women's meetings and mission meetings; but when occasion required, she has not hesitated to encounter licensing courts and town councils, and offer her mild but earnest pleading against the multiplication of public houses.

Among her quieter labours may be mentioned a Mothers' Meeting in Causewayside, near her own house; this was begun in 1862, and continues in vigour to this day. The Penny Bank connected with it shows about 10,000 transactions in the year, and a turnover of about £800.

Our notice has necessarily been of Miss Whigham's public labours; if we were to attempt a record of individual cases in which she has taken an interest, and been the means of blessing, we know not where we should end. When the eye sees her it blesses her; and when the ear hears her, it bears witness unto her; the blessing of those that were ready to perish comes upon her, and she makes the widow's heart to leap for joy.

THE SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY helps to the colonies eligible labouring men who can be recommended by responsible persons. During last year there was a considerable falling-off in emigration. The Society sent out a fair proportion of workers, the total number being 354, of whom 318 went to various parts of Canada. The total number of emigrants sent out by the Society since its foundation in 1884 is 4905. The secretary is Mr. E. Wilson Gates, 39, Memorial Hall Buildings, Farringdon-street, E.C.

HOW THE POOR LIVE AND STARVE in St. George's-in-the-East is shown in last week's London. There are seven weekly budgets given, ranging from 9s. 0¾d., the expenses of a mother and her boy, to 23s., on which a man, his wife, and five children are passing rich. Meat in the case of the poorest accounts for a third of the weekly outgoings. Bread is the staple food, with a scraping of margarine or a bit of haddock for "relish." These budgets are piteous documents. In the country the money would bring in some kind of subsistence; in London it simply means slow starvation.—Daily Chronicle.

The Evangelist.

IN THE CORNFIELD.

It was a delightful day in summer. Soft, fleecy clouds rested against an azure sky; the hedges were full of life; the birds, as they cleft the air, filled it with song; and from morning till night, showers of inspiring melody fell, so it seemed, from under the lark's wing; soaring, skimming, cleaving the highest air, and carrying his praise into the very unseen, he sang continually his song of God.

All nature was full of hope, of the highest impulse, of the golden promise of the heart of God to man: "I will be with thee." A young man, with free heart and unfettered hopes, sat him down in the shade of one of the hedges about a cornfield:—"Ah!" said he, "This might be the gate of heaven. My Father is in this place. Surely, this is the very spot for me in which to receive my first sermon."

In the silence of the shadow, he knelt to pray, all round him the young, waving corn, not yet in the ear, the summer air, the promise of life—just God and himself.

You know what he asked. He was a young minister, who was to preach his first sermon, and the thought of waiting, weary hearts, of the vastness of the office, of the insignificance of the minister, of the marvels he had to tell of the love of God in Christ Jesus, overcame him, and he nearly swooned at the sight of all that this meant to him—he, so unworthy, to be the chosen vessel to receive and to give forth to others the message of deliverance, the story of the everlasting love of God for his children! "O God, my Father," he prayed, "I can do nothing—nothing without Thee! Empty me of all self, fill me with *thy*self, and pity me." Then he took a little note-book from his pocket, and after a few moments he put down a thought; then another and another, as they were given to him, until these words from the Book filled up the measure of his thoughts, and all he had to say:—

"The love of Christ, which passeth knowledge" (Eph. iii. 19).

He found the place in his worn pocket Bible, and then sat meditating for some minutes. Presently, his face shining with the light of the gift within him, he rose from the ground, and looking up, as if he would seek guidance from the eye of his Master, he preached to birds of the air, as he thought, his first, long-dreamed-of sermon.

I have seen it and heard it, but I cannot give it here. In a simple way, without a halting note or an "if," and with all the enthusiasm of a young soul filled with the loving ardour of his Saviour's Spirit, he poured forth the story of the life of Christ. How He came from the bosom of the Father to dwell among men, that they, seeing God, might desire to be like Him; how He sought and taught them, giving them visions of the possible brightness of their own hearts, and ever pointing to God as the Father of all who, broken in heart and contrite in spirit, would yield themselves to Him through Christ.

"There is not one," cried the young preacher "not one who comes to Him sin-tossed, sick of self and sorry because of his sin, desiring to be forgiven, through the mediation of Christ, and longing to become one of the sons of God, whom He will not receive. Not one! You have never known, will never know, one so black, so sad, so steeped in sin, so far from God, so unlike Christ, so full of self, so empty of all good, who, turning at last from himself to the Saviour, shall not be restored, made whole—yea, even whiter than snow—by the sacrifice and the all-conquering love of the Divine and eternal Son of God, the sinner's eternal Saviour."

A startled cry, that was partly a sob and partly a sigh of the most wonderful relief, here broke upon the young preacher's ears. He paused, with uplifted hand, but all was still. He looked around, but the thick hedge encircled him, and overhead a noisy crow cawed on his way to a belt of elms, where he had his nest. But the sound had been very real and very human.

"It sounded like someone in distress," the preacher soliloquised; "or was it, may be, the echo of my voice, to which I am not yet accustomed?"

"Oh, no, no; it was I, and I am terribly sorry to have disturbed you in your sermon," said a young man, making his way round the hedge, which commenced some three feet above the roadway.

"Pray forgive me, but I have heard all, and I thank God I have, for surely, surely, it was put into your heart for me!"

The two young men faced each other—the one excited, worn, and torn by a hard struggle; the other calm, almost afraid to gather in this early harvest, by reason of his own unworthiness, but glad of heart and full of praise. He immediately uncovered, and bending his fair young head, he commended the stranger to God. Then he held out his hand, and drawing the other down with him, they were soon seated on the bank under the hedge in the cornfield. The stranger briefly told his story. It was a very common one, and, therefore, to the servant of Christ all the more pitiful, all the more needing brotherly help and sympathy.

He was the son of a praying mother, and left home for a public school life, fortified with the noblest intentions, and followed by the prayers of his mother. Before he left school finally he fell. In his heart he felt he had lost his manhood, but after a time this prick of conscience ceased, and he went deeper into sin. Gradually all the tender emotions of his soul seemed to be obliterated, and the very thought of his mother's religion and prayers irritated and annoyed him. He finished his life at his university in disgrace, and left it without having gained an honour or raised a hope. His mother drooped, for she had so hoped in him, and at last, unable to witness her silent sorrow any longer, he left home, and from that time his fall had been rapid and sure. He was at the end of all his resources. "I was just on the way to the railway line to end it all under the 4.45 express, when your voice arrested me. I silently scaled the bank, and, looking through the hedge, saw you were a young man, like myself. I saw, too, that you believed and meant all you said. My God, my God! Can it be true for me?" he cried, a sudden remembrance of all his sins overwhelming him.

The young preacher just pressed his heated hand; he had no words now—he saw God alone could finish this man's salvation. "So black, so steeped in sin!" cried the other, "and yet He will receive me! Oh, that I could undo all the past, and offer Him a blameless life!"

"Christ came into the world to save sinners; He can make you whole," said the young preacher, as he opened his Bible, and, pointing to marked passages, read the words of salvation and hope, so needed by the sinner.

God gave him that soul, in a cornfield; it was the seal to the Divine acceptance of his ministry, and he never lost sight of it. When he restored the first-fruits of that first sermon to his praying mother, he bowed his head in humility as he heard her say:—

"Thank God for a young man who is not afraid to preach a whole Christ! After this, how well you and I will understand the meaning of his words: 'This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.'"

THE BRIGHTON OPEN-AIR AND CHRISTIAN MISSION exists (1) to urge the claims of the Gospel of Christ on all, but especially on those who attend no place of worship; and (2) to promote the word of God among the masses. The Mission has entered upon its thirty-fifth year of work on Brighton beach, and Mr. Thomas Thwaites, the genial superintendent, has received intimations of cordial co-operation during the current season. The workers have been privileged, from to time to time, to hear of much blessing attending their labours. Copies of the new report may be had from Mr. Thwaites, 47, Upper North-street, Brighton.

THE SHAFTESBURY INSTITUTE.

Miss Meredith Brown has, during the past week or two, had to meet fresh attacks upon her work; the sanitary arrangements of the Women's Shelter being specially called in question. To the most rigid and careful examination into the actual state of affairs she and her helpers have no objection whatever, but feel that they are unfairly treated when newspapers circulate sensational statements without taking the trouble to verify their facts. At the annual meeting of the Shaftesbury Institute, held last week in Grosvenor House, these allegations were dealt with both by chairman and speakers.

The Duke of Fife, who presided, declared the charges unfounded, and testified to the excellence of the work. He had visited the Institute two days ago and was much impressed by its cleanliness, neatness, and good order. An air of homely comfort pervaded the whole establishment. Miss Meredith Brown and her fellow-workers were making good citizens and good Christians. He knew something of Miss Meredith Brown as well as of her work, and could say that the charges brought against her were as ridiculous as they were false. The work began in 1888 as a home for factory workers, but it now included a free training home for domestic servants, a day nursery for infants, a shelter for poor women, and a labour home for men and lads. All this cost £2600, or, after deducting profit on work, £1800 a year. He strongly commended the splendid work of the Institute, and wished it could be carried on upon a larger scale. Among other letters of apology for absence read by the secretary, was one from Sir Donald Currie, who enclosed £20 as a token of his disbelief in the charges made against the Institute.

Lord Kinnaird said that while taking an active interest in the men's part of the work, the Council had been in the habit of leaving the women's department in the able hands of the ladies. Now, however, in view of the charges publicly made, he and other gentlemen had spent three hours in a thorough inspection and examination of the entire internal arrangements, and he could come to no other conclusion than that the charges had been made by people who had not visited the place. They found everything scrupulously clean, with plenty of water and other appliances. All he wished was that officials and others would come and see for themselves. There were, of course, some who objected in toto to the principle of Shelters, and who would refuse any help to any sufferer save that provided in the casual ward and workhouse; but he maintained that there are exceptional cases, which must be provided for by Christian kindness, and who cannot be forced into the union.

Miss Meredith Brown, who followed, left her defence in other hands, and contented herself with giving an epitome of the Report, dealing with the work of the Evening Home for Factory Girls, the Girls' Training Home, the Women's Night Shelter, the Women's Labour Home, the Day Nursery, the Institute and Labour Home for Men, and other operations of the Institute, and showing the urgent need for larger and more liberal aid.

Mr. J. A. Campbell, M.P., Canon Duckworth, and others also warmly supported the claims of the Institute.

We have received from Miss Meredith Brown an interesting communication, bearing specially on the work of the Women's Shelter; for this we hope to find space in our next issue.

THE BAND OF HOPE MOVEMENT makes steady progress throughout the country, as is evident from the reports of the various unions and associations. The South Essex Union combines 125 societies, all with the exception of nine connected with Sunday-schools. The aggregate membership of these societies is 13,836, and 828 adult workers have a part in conducting them. During last year 5450 meetings were held, 108 of the societies assembling weekly, and the others less frequently. The report describes many efforts to influence the young morally and intellectually, and in conclusion says:—"The child who receives his knowledge and inspiration from the reiterated teachings of the Band of Hope is not only well armed against temptation, but trained for future usefulness in the home, the church, and the state; and our charter for this undying enterprise in his behalf is found in the inspired precept of the wise man: 'Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it.'" The secretary of the South Essex Union is Mr. E. G. Burbidge, 24, Salisbury-road, Margery Park-road, Forest Gate, E.

MISSIONARY COLLEGE, MADRID.

A STORY OF GOD'S LEADING.

IN 1868 Spain, the land of the Inquisition, was suddenly thrown open. God, by the persecution of Ruet in 1855, and that of Matamoros and his companions in 1862, awakened the Christians of Europe to the duty laid before them of bringing the Gospel into Spain. Colporteurs went through the country; from Great Britain, Ireland, America, Switzerland, Germany, came fellow-workers. Two things were apparent. First, the field was large, but the labourers few; we ought to prepare labourers for the work. Second, Spain must be evangelised by Spanish preachers and teachers, colporteurs, and evangelists. Hence the necessity for a training college.

In the midst of many difficulties we began such work, and it was accompanied by Divine blessing, so that nearly all our Spanish fellow-labourers have been trained for ourselves. But the inner development demands a corresponding outward appearance. Our rooms in Calatrava-street are not only too small, but so poor that we cannot expect Spanish families of the better class to send their children to them. Many liberal-minded parents in Spain are anxious to have for their children a good education, and would take advantage of the higher schools we have founded. So the necessity for a suitable building for our training college became peremptory.

But who was to give us a house, or even a site to build on? The Lord has done it, and it is marvellous in our eyes. First, the porter or the concierge of the house in which we rent the second floor, who for years had been quite spiteful and unfriendly, could not resist our continued friendliness, and became friendly himself. Then, the administration of the Madrid register of property was transferred to the first floor of the same house; these two things had to work together for good. Three people from Santander inherited ground belonging to an old aunt. They came to Madrid, got the ground properly registered, and wanted to sell it. They were standing on the floor of the house, speaking to our now friendly porter, when I happened to pass, in order to attend a meeting of the Religious Tract Society. The man, who a few weeks before would not have saluted me, said, "Don Federico, do you want to buy a site?" I looked at the plan, and said, "I do not know this part of the city." "You might go there at once with these gentlemen." "Impossible; my time is already engaged." At this moment a messenger arrived with a letter from the secretary of the Tract Society, saying the meeting had to be postponed. If this servant had come five minutes sooner, as he should have done, he would have met me upstairs, and I never would have gone down and seen the ground.

GOD COUNTS THE MINUTES

in the life of his children. Now I could go with the men and see the site, in the highest part of Madrid, beautiful situation, 180,000 square feet. The price which they asked, after the usual bargaining, was very cheap, £1800.

I had not this money, but by another providence of God I had £1000. We had gathered a fund for the widows and orphans of our Spanish preachers and teachers, and laid it out in Spain. To our great sorrow—for we are short-sighted men—a short time before, £1000, which had been placed on good security, were returned to us. How could we know that that was all in God's plan? When I offered this sum the people laughed me to scorn. "Well," said I, "only a rascal offers more than he has got; and, mark, my offer holds good only until the end of March (it was then Feb. 2). In the next quarter I have to invest money in another way." The people did not come back to me, to the great grief of my wife, whom I had taken once with me, and who in her thoughts had already erected there several chicken-houses! On March 31 the owners appeared; they had found no one who made an offer at all; they must go back to their home in Santander. So they sold it to me for £1000. As if God would show me that it was He who gave me the ground, a fortnight later a man appeared, who was very sorry that he did not know this site had been for sale. He offered me £1800 for it, but I declined; I knew now God had given it for his work.

This site did not extend to the principal street, and so I took various steps to procure a small piece of ground which connected ours with that street. But all my efforts were in vain. This was the only step I took on my own account to get land for our building, and it was a complete failure. To God alone should be the glory. Henceforth I left the matter entirely in his hands.

A year later an unknown man presented himself to me, offering another piece of ground, that, without his knowing it, brought the mission property in direct connection, not with the high road, but with a back street. As it was cheap, I paid £250 for it, and was glad to think that our property was not quite shut up. Some months later the same man came again, and said, "The site which is between your ground and the principal street, and which was sold by the State fifteen years ago, is not paid for; the owner paid only the two first instalments. Within a fortnight the State can claim the ground again. So you can have it still if you are prepared to pay at once the present owner and also the money due to the State with the interest." The sum was about £1500. I had again, by the providential care of God, £600 at my disposal. Perhaps I could have raised the rest on the security of this valuable property; but the responsibility was too great. I must be quite sure that it was God's will. Sometimes it comes that you, like Gideon, must lay out the fleece in order to see if the dew of heaven will descend on it.

Therefore I went to my Spanish banker, and without speaking a word about the property for which I wanted the money, I said, "Don José, next week I need much money, £900; can you give it to me?" How my heart beat as I asked this question you can well imagine. "As much as you want," was the quiet reply.

THIS WAS MY "AMEN,"

from God. I bought the property, paid for it at once, and gradually paid it off to the banker. Several years later, when I told the banker how his words had impressed me and helped me to buy this property (which certainly now could not be got for £10,000), he said, smiling, "You are mistaken; it is not my custom to be so generous with my credit." In fact, he had to convince himself, by reference to his books, that such had been indeed the case. When the Lord of hosts has purposed a thing, who shall disannul it? When his hand is stretched out, who shall turn it back?

But why did I not succeed in my first efforts to buy a small piece of ground in connection with the principal street? Had I succeeded, I would never have thought of buying the second site for £250, which brought me into connection with a back street. But God wanted to give that piece to me. For, some years later, the Government required the greater part of this ground for a water depôt, and paid, at its own valuation, £3000 for it; so that God has given me the whole remaining site for nothing, and even added some money beyond it.

My father is rich in houses and lands,
He holdeth the wealth of the world in his hands.

I must not enlarge the article by telling how God has given us the plan of the building, and now, in spite of all Romish opposition, the permission to build it. We are doing so actually, and we are sure that God will grant us the means for the building, which we still want, £5000. One unknown giver has given £50, another followed with the same sum, another gave £100. We leave it in the hands of the Lord, who has helped so wonderfully until now. And we promise our readers, who have rejoiced with us in these marvellous providences of God, to let them know some day what He has done. For we are sure, "He will not be in rest, until He have finished the thing."

ANTI-VIVISECTION.—The supporters of the Victoria-street and International Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection assembled in large numbers last week on the occasion of the annual meeting, which was held at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross. Mr. S. Smith, M.P., chairman, remarked that just now there appeared to be a perfect mania for diabolical experiments on animals, which were constantly being subjected to the greatest tortures in the name of science, but in the name of humanity he protested against the brutality which so frequently characterised the system so largely upheld by the "professional medical conscience." A resolution was afterwards adopted to the effect, "That this meeting being convinced that vivisection is unjustifiable on any ground, and as a method of search iniquitous, persists in demanding the prohibition of the practice."

A MISSION OF MERCY.

UNDER this title Mr. Wintle has issued his annual report of the work of the Undenominational Mission, Pontymoile, concerning which Lady Henry Somerset writes:—"It is with real pleasure that I add my testimony once more to the great work accomplished by the Superintendent of the Undenominational Mission. Mr. Wintle has the rare combination of enthusiasm and common sense, and the secret of his success lies in the fact that he has grasped the spirit of the teaching of the Master who never ignored on earth the want, weariness, hunger, and thirst of men and women, but who gave us an example which we should do well to follow in dealing with the needs of humanity. I feel sure that many will be awakened to a renewed sense of their responsibility towards those who labour to bring the necessaries of life to their door as they read the pages of this little book."

The relief work during the sad, dreary winter, with the tinplate and steel works still closed, some of the collieries suspended, and hundreds out of employment, is accorded a prominent part in the report, and the details are of the most heart-rending character, which must win the sympathy of thousands. Winter has passed, but alas! the need remains, though every effort is being made to find the people permanent employment elsewhere.

Then comes a pitiful account of the ruin wrought by the explosion at Cilfynydd in June last year—one of the most disastrous ever known in the Principality. The utmost possible was done in the way of helping and cheering the bereaved women and children.

Details follow of evangelistic and mission labour at Pontymoile, Pontnewydd, Cwmffwrdoer, Pontypool and Dowlais; also temperance effort, service among the children, rescue and preventive work; and the need for larger premises is clearly shown. There is no provision in the whole of South Wales for dealing with preventive cases, and week by week Mr. Wintle receives letters from different parts of South Wales asking him to help in such cases, but he is powerless from want of accommodation. The Baptist College at Pontypool is still vacant and in the market. It could now be acquired for considerably less than was at first asked. Fifteen hundred pounds would secure it and fit it up with accommodation for fifty girls. Mr. Wintle now makes an urgent appeal to those who have the means to aid in providing this Home.

All the various aggressive operations, open air, Bible carriage, and so on, are noticed; while the writer concludes with a pointed plea which should reach many hearts. This Mission of Mercy is doing a work of the greatest importance, which has been greatly used of God in winning souls. The superintendent is Mr. T. M. Wintle, The Christian Institute, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon.

I spent an evening last week with Mr. Wintle, and had the melancholy pleasure of speaking to about a hundred and twenty of the poor out-of-workmen and their wives. They were having an evening meal, and would have nothing more until the following evening. Mr. Wintle's work has saved the lives of scores, if not hundreds, of men, women, and children, during the past eighteen months; and many have, in this time of sorrow, been led to the Saviour. No after-meetings are held, lest it should seem that a temptation was put in their way to make a profession for the sake of food.

RACECOURSE PREACHING.

MR. JOSIAH NIX announces the intention of the Racecourse Mission to visit Doncaster races this year, and invites the co-operation of Christians, especially in Yorkshire and Lancashire, to encourage the workers in this new effort. Speaking of the visit to Epsom this year he says:—

"We had about fifty men from different parts of England, and loyal and true everyone of them proved to be. About 5000 Gospels and Testaments, and nearly a quarter of a million tracts were distributed. Many persons were spoken to individually, apart from meetings, several being brought to Christ. If those in favour of thorough-going aggressive Christianity could only witness the many striking incidents that take place, and the courageous stand taken by the workers, they would see to it that the 'banner of the Cross' was unfurled on every racecourse in the country."

EVANGELISM IN GLASGOW.

The work carried on every night without intermission for nearly twelve years by Cowcaddens Free Church has recently entered upon some new developments. Among the many agencies which have been found specially adapted to the needs of the most destitute localities, none has surpassed in interest and results what is called the "Pioneer" Movement.

Five years ago, at the suggestion of Mr. John Galloway, of Kilmeny, the first "Pioneer" Mission was opened. During its existence it has proved an unspeakable blessing to the district where it is located. The two Christian women who are now settled in the "Kilmeny" Mission are able to influence for good from 120 to 140 families. Such was the blessing attending the work that nearly three years ago the office bearers determined, if it were at all possible, to open a second branch in a most destitute locality in the immediate neighbourhood. On the suggestion of Lord Overtoun ground was broken and the work commenced in the late autumn of 1892. The two Christian women who devoted their life and labours to this district found many tokens of encouragement in the midst of almost inconceivable obstacles.

The first of these was Miss Jessie Scott, a native of New Machar, Aberdeenshire. I met her several years ago when conducting evangelistic services in the University city of St. Andrews, and after several interviews found that she was disposed to give her life to Christian work. She had not long to wait for a call to service, and in the "Overtoun" Mission, for nearly three years, she was the constant friend and earnest worker in many families to whom the Lord made her a blessing. She had for many years suffered from a heart affection, which in the severity of last January threatened very serious consequences. The utmost that medical skill and attention could do for her failed to arrest the progress of what proved to be a fatal malady.

After her return home in March she continued to improve, but under an attack of pleurisy she gradually sank till the end came. It was verily "light" in the valley for her. She was able to bear a clear testimony to the glory of her Saviour in the presence of death, as she had done for so long a time in her life work. The same words which proved such a strength to her in entering on the work was also her stay and comfort in death. "Fear not, for I am with thee. Be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I, thy Redeemer, will help thee, and the Holy one of Israel, thy Saviour." She was enabled to do a noble work during her short life, and many souls owe, under God, their salvation and their future hope to her earnest and devoted labours. Although taken away at the early age of thirty-two, she was privileged to do a larger work than many whose race has run the allotted span of three score years and ten.

Recently it was determined to extend the work, and, at the suggestion of a gentleman deeply interested in the results already achieved, it was determined to open a third branch in Garscube-road. The locality is one of the most destitute in the district, and requires exactly such an agency as a Pioneer Mission supplies. A few weeks ago two Christian women entered on this field of labour. They feel that they have put their hand to a very arduous task, and they need and expect to receive the prayers and support of Christian people. The work has been undertaken in faith, and we feel sure their labours will be crowned with blessing.

The latter end of spring and the beginning of summer is always a trying time for aggressive workers. The days have lengthened, so that a good part of the work has to be done in the open air, and those who are poorly clad do not care to come even to the open-air work. This year, however, we determined to make a special effort at this time, and we were not disappointed. Mr. Matthew Burnett came for a fortnight's mission. Signs of blessing appeared from the very first, and during the fortnight for which he was engaged some of the saddest cases conceivable were brought into the hands of the workers. A torchlight procession, arranged for at the suggestion of Mr. Burnett, was successful in bringing many within reach of the Gospel that could not otherwise be got at. The interest in and absolute need for the work were such that his fortnight's labours were extended to four weeks, during which time a large number were led to take the pledge, and were brought into personal conversation regarding the way of salvation through Jesus Christ. Mr. Burnett's experience in revival work in Australia proved to be to him an unfailing source of fact and illustration, and during the progress of his mission many of these thrilling experiences formed the subject of address. The results of an open-air mission last year, as well as of Mr. Burnett's mission this year, have encouraged the workers to repeat the same this summer again.

The third week of this special effort is now in progress, and there have been already abundant and blessed results. May I ask the earnest prayers of the readers of The Christian on behalf of the work?

BRIDGE OF ALLAN CONVENTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The annual meetings of this National Convention opened in the tent at Bridge of Allan on Monday evening with a large gathering, and the meetings will be continued every day and evening till Saturday forenoon.

The Convention this year is likely to prove of more than ordinary interest. Several things contribute to this. First of all, it is notable that there has been a considerable addition to the volume of spiritual life in Scotland during the past year. The Christian Endeavour Movement has largely extended its operations, and has acquired such hold that it is now certain to become national. It is already giving form and expression to the spiritual life of the young, while it has given a perceptible increase to the number of young believers. All of these are now becoming interested in the unfolding and development of their own spiritual life. Many of these cannot readily get the teaching they need in the most favourable circumstances within reach of their own homes. Those who can afford to travel will be certain, therefore, to find their way to Bridge of Allan and similiar conventions.

At the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church, as well as at the Free Church General Assembly, there were definite tidings of revival from some twenty to thirty different centres throughout Scotland. This has led many to cherish a spirit of hopefulness in regard to a coming national awakening. There is also a marked increase in the number of prayer unions, specially for a Revival. All these things tend to show that the gatherings of this year are likely to be notable. The speakers also are men who have made their mark in former years, and whom the Christian people of all denominations hear with gladness. Among these are Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, now of London, and formerly of Aberdeen, Rev. C. G. Moore, of London, Rev. Charles Inwood, of Dublin. To these have to be added the well-known names of Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, and Rev. William D. Moffat, of Edinburgh. Among the notable men who have come to the front during recent years none have been more cordially welcomed or hold a higher place than Professor Laidlaw, D.D. of the Free Church College, Edinburgh. He has already acquired great influence as a spiritual force among the students of the College. To the present movement he brings careful preparation—accuracy of Scripture statement—a breadth of treatment and a caution that have made his accession a great strength to the Convention.

There are thousands in Scotland who have long desired to see and hear Rev. Andrew Murray, of South Africa. His books on the various aspects of Christian life have given him a world-wide reputation, and to-day he must have considerably over one million of readers. His books have had a remarkable welcome from Christians everywhere, and notably in Scotland. It is not often that books of so high a class and of so spiritual a character acquire such an extended perusal. Mr. Murray appears already to be well known, although never seen by the thousands who are interested in him. His presence at the Convention is sure to command more than ordinary interest. Those who look for what is great, or startling, or novel may be disappointed in the man, for his bodily presence, like that of the Apostle, is weak, but those who delight in spiritual power and in simplicity and clearness of utterance will find very precious teaching. Last of all, there has been much prayer for blessing of a very definite and extensive kind on this annual gathering, and friends at a distance who cannot be present will doubtless keep it in mind every day this week.

The Convention promises to be one of the largest and most influential yet held on Scottish ground.

DILIGENCE.

Not slothful in business.—Rom. xii. 11.

Work as if thou hadst to live for aye;
Worship as if thou wert to die to-day.
—Tuscan Proverb.

The Christian is "not slothful in business." He faithfully attends to his temporal interests, though eternal concerns have a foremost place in his heart. "Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure" (2 Peter i. 10).

There is no warrant in Scripture for the idea that a man must retire from the world in order to live a holy life. Moses and the Prophets, Jesus and the Apostles, acted a part in public life, and Christ enjoins his disciples not to withdraw from the world, but to go about doing good; not to wrap up their talent in a napkin, but to improve it by their industry; not to put their light under a bushel, but to let it shine before men, so that by their good deeds the name of God may be glorified.

Let every man be occupied, and occupied in the highest employment of which his nature is capable, and die with the consciousness that he has done his best.—Sydney Smith.

The life of man is made up of action and endurance, and life is faithful in the ratio in which it is laid out in noble action or in patient perseverance. But the physical workers are not the only true workers. The lives of thought do not lie outside this division, for true thought is undemonstrative action. . . . . To pass life in indolence, in a state of moral coma, is degrading, for life is only ennobled by work.—Rev. Canon Liddon.

Undoubtedly man was intended by his benevolent Creator for society. All the powers of his frame, the faculties of his mind, and the qualities of his heart lead him to the social state as the state of his nature. But though man was made for action, it is well for us to remember that he was also made for contemplation and meditation.

There is a time when solitude has a charm for the soul; when, weary of the world, its follies and its cares, we love to be alone and in silence to commune with our heart. Such a retirement, when devoted to pious purposes, is highly useful to mankind and most acceptable to God. At such times, "the heart knoweth his own bitterness, and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy" (Prov. xiv. 10). The retreat, however, which the Bible recommends is temporary, and not total. It is not the retreat of a monk to his cell, or a hermit to his cave, but of men living in the world of toil and care going out of it for a little time to meditate on the things of God, in order to return again to their daily callings, sanctified and qualified, by the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit, for the faithful and diligent discharge of every duty. "The hand of the diligent maketh rich" (Prov. x. 4). "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men" (Prov. xxii. 29). "If everybody improved the minutes with the zeal that a hen puts into her work while making a surreptitious five minutes' call in a flower garden, what a world this would be!"

O worker of the world, to whose young arm
The brute earth yields, and wrong, as to a charm;
Young seaman, soldier, student, toiler at the plough,
Or loom, or forge, or mine, a kingly growth art thou.
Where'er thou art, though earthy oft and coarse,
Thou bearest with thee hidden springs of force,
Creative power, the flower, the fruitful strife,
The germ, the potency of life.
—The Ode of Life.

If we are weighed down with a sense of our unworthiness and of our inability to achieve great things in the service of Christ, let us not be discouraged, but diligently labour for the Good Husbandman in the part of the vineyard He has allotted to us, seeing we have the blessed assurance that in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

God tries the faith He means to bless,
To patient toil He grants success—
Work on.
Faith's path is often edged by fears,
The cheek of love oft wet with tears—
Work on.
The labourer's field is oft forlorn,
His crowning joy of winter born—
Work on, work on.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. xv. 58).

Put thou thy trust in God,
On duty's path go on;
Fix on his Word thy steadfast eye,
So shall thy work be done.
—Luther.

OPPOSITION IN MEXICO.

Mr. Eglon Harris, of Orizaba, Mexico, acknowledging some illustrated Spanish Gospels from the Scripture Gift Mission, says:—

"We think them just what is needed, and hope to receive more. Nothing is better for distribution than the Gospels, if only the people can be induced to read them. These seem more likely to be read than anything I have before seen."

Referring to the opposition of the priests at Nogales, about eight miles distant from Orizaba, Mr. Harris writes:—"In spite of all, a baker and his wife remained true to Christ, though continually being persecuted. One Lord's Day morning they came into the meetings, but our sister was feeling very ill. With difficulty her husband got her home again to Nogales. After a short illness, she departed to be with Christ. Friends and neighbours had begged her to call the priest, but she would not hear of it, saying, 'I have confessed all to Jesus, and He has forgiven me. What more can I want?' Not long before she fell asleep, she said to her husband, 'Get my Bible and read me one of those precious Psalms.' This done, she said, 'Now I want you to bury my precious Book with me.' This was accordingly done. Sweet testimony to the value which she set upon the Word of God which so many of that village had yielded up to the Jesuits to be burned.

"The men employed to dig the grave worked so slowly that, by the time we should be returning to Orizaba from the funeral they had only got to half the depth required by law. Thinking that all was going on well, we bade 'good-bye' to our brother, and started to get home before nightful. As soon as we were gone, the priest commanded the grave-diggers to desist working. Our brother sought others, but found the whole village prepared to refuse. His own parents and the parents of his departed wife were as bitter as the rest. So he had to finish digging his wife's grave all alone, working nearly all night. He got two boys to help him to lower the coffin, and then in the morning returned to the sad task of filling in the grave.

"The following day he went to his work at the bakery, but the master told him he dare not employ him any longer. At the shops all refused to sell him anything, so he had to come into Orizaba to get his food. The day after the funeral the priest called the people together, and said that if anyone should in any way help the heretic they would be taken ill, and then if they sent for him to confess, he would not come, so they would die and go to hell. 'As for the woman who has died,' said he, 'her body was not allowed to remain in the grave, for the devil had come to take it away.' What wonder that so few confess Christ in these villages!"

Mr. Harris's correspondent in England is Mr. John Mercer, 143, Dickenson-road, Rusholme, Manchester.

INDIANS OF CENTRAL AMERICA.

The well-known friend of Missions, Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, has authorised the Central American Mission to undertake explorations with the view of determining the location, number, and condition of every Indian tribe in Central America. It is astonishing how little is known of these Indians, even by the governments under which they nominally live. Enough is known, however, to warrant the statement that at least 1,000,000 pagan Indians are living in the five republics of Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras, San Salvador, and Costa Rica. Some of them are in some degree Romanized, but the greater part are free from this blinding superstition.

The work of systematic exploration has been put in charge of Rev. H. C. Dillon. It is hoped that two competent missionaries may be ready to enter each tribe which Mr. Dillon visits. He is now among the Talamancas.

The work of exploration proves to be exceedingly laborious, as most of the travel must be on foot in almost impenetrable tropical forests and precipitous mountains, and dangerous as well. The forests swarm with wild beasts, and poisonous reptiles and insects.

DR. TORRANCE, of Tiberias, Palestine, says that there, where there is no alcohol in the bodies of the patients, operative surgical work is comparatively easy. He has treated cases of excision of the elbow as out-patients.

FROM ANAKAPALLE, INDIA.

Up to the present no land has been secured on which we should feel justified in spending money to erect a permanent missionary bungalow. A small piece was bought in November, 1893, close to the town of Anakapalle, on which we decided to erect a combined Gospel-hall and school-house, and use it for residence till the way was made clear for a more suitable bungalow. We have good reason to believe to-day that this was God's planning, as it has proved every way to have been the best thing to do.

In October, just before the monsoon season set in, we received an earnest request from Rangoon to go over and preach the Gospel in a chapel there which was temporarily without a pastor, and therefore in great straits. After due consideration we decided to spend the monsoon season in Burmah. It proved that God had work for us to do in Rangoon, and we stayed there, working in the Eurasian Chapel till the end of February, when we returned to our work in Anakapalle with all the better spirit for the change, and quite convinced that it had been of God that we went to Rangoon. During our absence, native-preacher Chittiah kept at work, taking care of the house, and daily preaching the Gospel in Anakapalle and surrounding villages. His wife Martha works with my wife as Bible-woman, reading to them in their homes, and talking to them of Christ as opportunities are given.

The annual feast of Nookalama has recently taken place here, and we have scattered many hundreds of Bible tracts, Scripture portions, etc., among the masses who visited the temple, and preached the Gospel to hundreds more. They carry the seed to many far distant, and in some cases, perhaps, almost inaccessible villages, and we believe that God is able to take care of it, and make it bring forth fruit to Himself, though we may not be permitted to see it. We ask readers to join us in prayer that we may see the work of God's Spirit in Anakapalle leading to thorough conversion to God.

AN INDIAN WEDDING.

On April 4 a quiet little wedding took place in the George Bowen Memorial Chapel, Bombay, which will be interesting to some readers. The bridegroom was Samuel Subha Rao, the bride Rokia Bi, the adopted daughter of Miss Reade, of Panruti. It may be remembered that about twelve years ago Subha Rao was baptized at Cuddalore, S. Arcot, and that his relatives brought a suit against Miss Reade, involving her in a long and troublesome trial. He received his theological education in the Basel Mission in Tellechery and Mangalore. Returning to Miss Reade after his ordination, he became her valuable assistant in the affairs of her mission station and in preaching the Gospel throughout the district.

In the meanwhile Rokia Bi had been carefully educated both in Hindustani and English, with an especial view to mission service. When, a few months ago, Samuel asked that the adoptive sister might be entrusted to his care, the thing was felt to be from the Lord. As the Brahmin bridegroom and Mohammedan bride were united in Christian marriage in the presence of the little company, including Christians who had come out from various races and castes, one realised how true it is that "in Christ Jesus" we are all one. Samuel S. Rao hopes to take his bride to visit his father and mother, who, after long years of lamentation over a lost son, now realise that he is worthy of esteem.

In coming into the inheritance of the Kingdom of Heaven Samuel, of course, lost his rights and privileges as the eldest son, they passing to his little brother, while in his present marriage he has withstood most tempting offers, preferring a "woman who feareth the Lord" to worldly advantages with one who lacks this. This young couple, early dedicated to the service of the Lord, may have a thorny path to tread, but we know that He who has said to them, "Follow Me, and I will make you to become fishers of men," will be with them every step of the way, as they are willing to submit to his constraining and restraining hands.

Miss Reade sends the following P.S.:—"I may be allowed to add a few lines to the foregoing sent to me for publication by Miss Frankland, missionary of the Friends' Mission, Central Provinces, and for some time my fellow-worker. In reference to Samuel, it will, I am sure, interest friends to hear that we are looking forward to five or six baptisms soon, these being chiefly seals to his ministry here, two of them attributing their conversion to the influence of his life. Last year's baptisms, too, were in great measure the fruit of his reaping." Any help for Miss Reade's work, "The South Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission," will be received by Miss C. M. S. Lowe, 8, Childebert-road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

A WEST INDIAN INSTITUTE.

Dear Sir,—A Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute is being started in this island. The garrison is composed of both British and West Indian troops, but it is expected that the Institute will be chiefly used by the latter. About seventy men have given in their names to become members, paying a subscription of 1s. a month. Many of the officers will also contribute, but further help is required for furnishing the rooms. In the town of Castries there are many rum-shops, but no place of quiet, wholesome recreation. The Institute is intended to supply this by means of reading and game rooms, and a coffee bar; but it will also have a good room set apart for Bible classes, and devotional, temperance, and other meetings. Little local support can be expected, as the island is chiefly Roman Catholic.

Every winter the British North American Squadron and the Training Squadron visit the port, and usually stay some days, during which time the sailors are much on shore. The island will become the headquarters for both military and naval purposes in the southern West Indies, as soon as the additional barracks, etc., which are in progress, are completed. In the West Indian Regiment there are many very true-hearted Christians; and when we remember that these men serve alternately in the West Indies and on the West Coast of Africa, we see how the work done amongst them here may in years to come bear fruit in the midst of African darkness.—Yours faithfully,

E. R. Kenyon,
Major, Royal Engineers.

TURKISH ARMENIA.

We learn, on the authority of a well-informed correspondent, that it is a time still of much anxiety in these parts, and with so much fanaticism about it is impossible to tell as to the future. One great question at the present time is—What can be done to save further loss of life, not, it is to be hoped, by the terrible misrule of the ill-fated regions, but from the distress in which refugees are left? Some friends have been dealing out help to the hundreds that come to them from two or three days' distance. Their rehearsals are heart-rending, the tears often coursing down their cheeks as they tell the story of how many of their kindred have fared. Not a little of it is too sickening and revolting to enter public print. The situation is still such that it is hardly prudent for natives to engage in such distribution.

It is hoped, adds our correspondent, that the time may be nearing when manhood as such will stand up and feel that it has rights which others are bound to respect. Then it may be possible to go right into the dangerous region and seek to gather the poor, scattered, half-crazed ones together once more among their native hills. Should any desire to contribute towards this object it would be most timely. Those who escaped saw their houses burnt, and property carried off, while their clothing was stripped from them; so they need everything. A good plan would be to supply them with a few yoke of oxen for each province, farming utensils, etc., perhaps help them a little in putting up a few rather large sort of common huts, with some repairing of a few of their demolished churches, supply them with some millet for seed that may be sown five weeks hence, so they may have something to do, and at least a little harvest to gather. An official statement from the Moush region, signed by five leading prelates, gives a list of sixty-five men, women, and children who have died from hunger, and exposure, and hardship, with no houses; but not a few clinging to their region and subsisting largely on roots and greens!

FORWARD WORK IN WALES.

At a meeting in Exeter Hall last week, in connection with the General Assembly of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, Rev. John Pugh, superintendent of the Connexional Forward Movement, gave a graphic description of the work accomplished, especially in Cardiff. They had long since succeeded in evangelising the rural districts of Wales, but the great problem with which they were confronted was the evangelisation of the populous towns and mining districts of Glamorganshire. For this purpose they had to abandon the old methods and adapt themselves to the newer tactics of the enemy. His first connection in Cardiff had been with a church in an aristocratic neighbourhood. He believed in the salvation of swells, and was a great swell himself until Christ came and took all the swell out of him. But when he realised the destitute condition of vast communities of the masses in Cardiff, and found that neither the Church of England nor the Nonconformists were coping with the work, his heart became filled with anxiety and dismay, and at once entered upon the Forward Movement, which had now become so great a success.

Without committees and without funds, he and Mr. Seth Joshua started in a tent on the East Moors. They had no money to pay for the erection of the tent, and he and Seth Joshua did the work themselves, and so gained the sympathy of the roughs, who afterwards crowded the tent. It was most appropriate that the Calvinistic Methodists should have undertaken this work, for they were the only natives of the soil, the only Church born in Wales, and, as the old 23rd Regiment, they should be in front of all the regiments in the fight. After tents came temporary halls, and the work was going on gloriously. Working men who objected to priestcraft and ecclesiasticism came and crowded these halls Sunday after Sunday. There were churches in Cardiff dying from religious starch, but in the halls starch was conspicuously absent. The results so far had more than justified the step taken, and he strongly appealed to the audience to help on the work.

Mr. Pugh's is a striking testimony to the great usefulness of mission halls in aggressive Christian work. In all parts of the country there are evangelists who could bear a similar testimony.

WELSH IN EAST LONDON.

In a communication sent to us, Lady Osborne Morgan, of 59, Green-street, Grosvenor-square, W., earnestly invites Christian friends to assist the Welsh missionary for the East-end to secure the Welsh Wesleyan Chapel, Duff-street, East India-road, Poplar, as a mission centre for the Dock district. The chapel is now for sale, and can be secured for the small sum of £50. It is the only Welsh place of worship near the Docks, and within reach of Welsh sailors who come and go from East and West India and Victoria Docks. There are also a considerable number of resident Welsh poor in the district. If the chapel is closed they will be deprived of religious services in their native language.

Welsh services have been held in the neighbourhood for the last twenty years, but not on unsectarian lines. The work will be carried out as a mission to the poor, and there is every prospect of making the place a source of blessing to many people by earnest and continual visitation.

Miss Rees, 3, Carthusian-street, London, E.C., will gladly give fuller details, and will receive donations. Lady Osborne Morgan kindly offers £5 towards the sum needed.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.—The first anniversary of the "MacGregor House" for Working Boys' Christian Endeavour was held on the evening of June 13. Mr. W. T. Paton presided, and gave a very stirring address. The Home is composed of thirty-two boys employed in the City at various trades.

OPEN-AIR WORKERS.—The North London Evangelical Preachers' Association have formed an Open-Air Workers' Union for purposes of fellowship, exchange of preachers, soloists, etc., and of organising open-air services at new stations. The inaugural meeting was held last Saturday evening, at Finsbury Park Congregational Church, Mr. J. E. Kirby in the chair. Hymns and solos were sung, and a number of brief addresses were given. Particulars may be had from Mr. H. Worrall, Lancaster Villa, Nightingale-lane, Wood Green.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN IRELAND.

The violent opposition which the open-air preachers met with from a section of the people, in the cities of Cork, Galway, and Athlone, in their first attempt to proclaim the Gospel to their fellow-countrymen in the open-air, will be still in the recollection of your readers. All this is now changed, and a different feeling exists towards the workers. This summer the open-air work has been continued with much success in the towns of Cork, Galway, and Athlone, and has also been extended to Fullamore and Portarlington. The opposition in the three former towns has now entirely disappeared, whilst in Fullamore and Portarlington no opposition of any kind has been offered.

Letters have been received from Roman Catholics and others, thanking God for having sent the Open-air Mission to the towns where they lived, in the South and West of Ireland. One writes:—"Being a Roman Catholic from my childhood, with no opportunity of hearing the Gospel, I was leading a drunken and reckless life, but now I can say, as I have proved for the past three months, that Christ does satisfy and save the most wretched sinner who trusts Him."

Another writes:—"I was bitterly opposed to the Open-Air Mission, and wrote against it, but when I saw how much you and your friends had to suffer it made me think there must be something real behind the preaching. I was drawn to listen to you, and was quickly convinced that I was lost, and that I had never been born again. I only found peace when I threw myself entirely on the Lord Jesus. I need not tell you that I have many things to try me because I have turned from the Church to the Lord." Other deeply interesting cases might be quoted.

Help is needed, and it is hoped that many new friends may be raised up to assist the mission, which seeks by means of open-air work to reach all classes in Ireland. Capt. R. W. Thompson is hon. sec., and the offices of the mission are at 13, D'Olier-street, Dublin.

HOME OF REST, LITTLEHAMPTON.

On Wednesday last week the eighth anniversary of this Home was celebrated in Hinde Street Chapel. Meetings, conducted by Rev. F. Paynter, rector of Stoke-on-Guildford, and Dr. Richardson, were held morning, afternoon, and evening. The gatherings were more numerous than heretofore; as in previous years the chief aim of every speaker was to lead his hearers into an attitude of surrender and trust for fuller equipment in Christian service.

At the morning meeting Prof. Rendel Harris gave an address, never to be forgotten for its freshness and spiritual power, on the awaking of the arm of the Lord to the power of the ancient days. He was followed by Rev. Andrew Murray, whose gracious words touched all hearts. The subsequent meetings were addressed by Mr. and Mrs. Reader Harris, Dr. Montague Miller, Dr. Woods Smyth, Revs. E. R. Gibbens, and John Brash.

Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, the founder of the Home, asked for £300, explaining that it would be devoted mainly to the providing of free entertainment for tired and sick Christians, ministerial and lay, who needed rest and change, but were unable to afford it from their own resources, the touching and grateful acknowledgments he had already received of restored health and renewed spiritual vigour under the Christian influences of the Home having increased his desire to extend its benefits in this direction. To this request there was a very generous response.

SWITZERLAND. — Tent meetings are being arranged for by Commissioner Booth-Clibborn (in French) in the Jura, and open-air meetings (in German) in the Bernese Oberland, also holiness meetings (in English) at various Swiss resorts. Particulars may be had from Mr. Booth-Clibborn, Saint Aubin, Neuchatel.

CLAPTON MEDICAL MISSION.—The past year has been one of encouraging success in connection with the Medical Branch of our Mission. The extent of service it has rendered to the poor of Clapton, Homerton, and Hoxton has been much greater than we anticipated, as 9000 cases have been attended by our medical officer. We have a strong desire to help a large number of those who need a few days' rest and change of air in order to regain their health. Some of these are among the Lord's poor saints. Thomas Jackson, 8, Rushmore-road, Clapton, N.E.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

That 300 Jews and Jewesses should accept the hospitality of a Mission which exists for the purpose of winning this very people for Christ, is truly a remarkable sign of the times, and this is what actually took place on Tuesday, 11th inst., when, by the kind permission of Col. Morton, the Mildmay Mission to the Jews entertained the above number of persons in the grounds of the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. The weather was delightful, and the guests thoroughly enjoyed their treat. Before tea a good open-air meeting was held, under the leadership of Mr. Redwood, and earnest conversations were held by the missionaries with groups of Jews formed here and there in the grounds. When the people had enjoyed a good meal, they assembled again under the trees, and Mr. Wilkinson presided over a prolonged Gospel meeting. Brief, loving addresses in English were delivered by the Revs. George Everard, J. D. Kilburn (from St. Petersburg), and Mrs. Wathen. Rev. J. Adler read a portion of Scripture in Hebrew, and gave a brief address in German. The addresses were interspersed with singing and prayer. Many handshakes and expressions of gratitude were received by the workers at the close of the day.

On the following afternoon the annual treat for the children of the Mission Night School took place, and a right happy and inspiring gathering it proved to be. Great was the delight of the little ones, eighty-five in number, as they marched into the grounds, and had balls and skipping ropes distributed among them. The weather was again pleasantly cool, and teachers and scholars romped away without fatigue. After tea a happy meeting was held under the trees, Mr. Wilkinson again presiding. Loving words were spoken by the Chairman and Dr. Dixon, the children listening most attentively. They then repeated from memory Psalm ciii, Mrs. Warren directing. Having sung "The world looks very beautiful," they repeated very creditably Matthew v., Miss Thornley Smith leading them. Miss Cornwall not only teaches them of "Jesus and his love," but is also their music teacher and leader; and the singing of her little pupils gave much pleasure. All were thrilled when, under Miss Maddick's direction, they repeated from memory texts on the love of God. More lady workers are sadly needed in the department of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S ORPHANAGES.

A drawing-room meeting on behalf of Deacon Abraham's Nestorian Orphanages was held at Argyll Lodge, Campden Hill, W., on Tuesday, June 11. The beautiful room was well filled when, about 5 p.m., the meeting was opened with earnest prayer by Rev. Dr. MacLeod for the Lord's blessing on the work. He subsequently gave a most interesting sketch of the Orphanage from its commencement at the time of the terrible famine. Simon, from the Orphanage, followed with an earnest address, dwelling on the needs of the Nestorians and the work the deacon is doing.

The closing address was given by the hon. sec., Mr. Henry Tasker, of Brookside, Andover, who dwelt on the difficulties of the work, and suggested various plans for consolidating and extending it. Between the addresses illustrations of Oriental manners and customs were given in costume by Simon, Lazar, and David, from Oroomiah, and the meeting was closed with the Benediction, the interest having been thoroughly maintained to the end. A large portion of the audience lingered on the widespreading lawn, to see further illustrations of Eastern customs after the meeting was over.

MOON'S TYPE FOR THE BLIND.—The forty-seventh annual report has been published of Moon's Society for embossing and circulating the Holy Scriptures and other useful books for the blind. It gives a brief memoir of the late Dr. Moon, and some details of the work during last year. The publications in Moon's type are now numerous, comprising 566 volumes in English, and 231 in foreign languages. Including the books sent out during 1894, the total number of volumes issued by the Society is 208,965; and 51,967 stereotyped plates have been prepared. The Lord's Prayer, or some other portion of Scripture, in 476 languages and dialects, is also embossed for the use of missionaries. Full particulars of the work may be had on application to Miss Moon, hon. treasurer, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

THE annual meeting of this Mission, particularly in connection with the work in aid of discharged prisoners, friendless juvenile and first offenders, was held in the Mansion House on Monday afternoon, the Lord Mayor presiding.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN made a statement, as treasurer of the Mission, regarding its work among the classes mentioned as well as the wives and children of prisoners.

It is well known that the St. Giles's Christian Mission has for many years past carried on evangelistic work in St. Giles's; that it has been of great benefit to the very poor in that chronically poverty-stricken district; and that it annually sends some hundreds of sickly little children to its Holiday Homes. I wish, however, to direct attention to the Mission's operations in connection with (a) discharged prisoners, (b) friendless juvenile offenders, and (c) the wives and children of prisoners. Underground work is not pleasant, under the most favourable circumstances, but if the point aimed at is one of public benefit, and that point is reached, then the "underground workers" are worthy of public support and sympathy. The very nature of the work carried on by this Mission is such that it has to be done quietly. We cannot bring to you here samples of the wretched, outcast, uninviting men, women, and boys who had our free breakfast this morning, immediately they were released from "durance vile." During the history of this Mission it has entertained very considerably over a quarter of a million such guests with a free breakfast.

Then we assist some 6000 discharged prisoners in various ways. It should be kept in mind also that we annually receive several hundred convicts on their liberation from penal servitude, and do all we can, by advice and influence, to get them to become law-abiding and useful members of society. The work carried on among boys (first offenders) is of far-reaching importance. They stand hesitating upon the very verge of crime and a criminal career, and left alone they will soon swell the ranks of the already too large criminal class. About 500 such lads are taken into our Boys' Homes annually, and the results attending our efforts are most beneficial. The past winter has been one of exceptional severity, consequently the distress has been of exceptional severity too; and the strain upon our resources has been enormous. I therefore very earnestly trust that one result of this meeting will be that needed funds are sent in, so that this many-sided and widespreading work may be as effectually carried on as ever.

The LORD MAYOR spoke of his own actual experience and observation of the work of this Mission on behalf of boys who had done wrong. This is one of the most perplexing problems which beset a magistrate, who knows the lads deserve punishment, while to send them to prison means contamination, and they are likely to emerge as confirmed criminals. Hence the peculiar value of the work done with so singular devotion by Mr. Wheatley and his helpers, who are doing a work of immense national importance, and deserve the most liberal support. In helping this Mission, we are saving larger demands certain to be made, if these boys and men are left unaided.

Mr. W. WHEATLEY gave an outline of a morning's work at Holloway, Pentonville, and Wandsworth prisons, and of the subsequent effort made for the reclamation of those who prove anxious to escape from a life of crime. He also gave an account of the work among the boys, illustrating his remarks by the case of a lad got hold of that morning. Closing with an indication of the straits to which poor women and children are often reduced when the bread-winner is in prison, he made a very earnest appeal for funds.

Addresses followed by Mr. M. H. Crackenthorpe, Q.C., Alderman Treloar, Mr. James Judd, J.P., Mr. T. H. Baylis, Q.C., Alderman Morgan, Mr. Ernest Baggallay (magistrate), and Mr. Robert Scott, who told of his long acquaintance with the work, which aims not at recreation, but at the re-creation by God of those who have been undone by the enemy of souls. Looking at this and kindred missions, one could not but recall the late Earl of Shaftesbury's words: "What would this great city be without such self-denying workers?"

SWEDEN AND MISSIONS.

A SWEDISH pastor, M. Holmgren, of Stockholm, recently gave a brief testimony at the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting, with respect to Swedish interest in missions. About thirteen years ago, when residing in England, he was led to take a deep interest in China and its millions. When he returned to Sweden he gave testimony in towns and country districts about China; the people were deeply interested. One young man manifested a special interest in the matter, and expressed his desire to know more about it, and eventually to go to China himself as a preacher of the Gospel. He came to London and put himself in communication with the China Inland Mission.

One day when attending the Saturday prayer-meeting, a lady present read a letter from a friend, who, as a thank-offering for recovery from sickness, desired to pay the expenses of a missionary to China. As the letter was read the young Swede thought in his heart, "Oh, that I were the happy man for whom this money might be applied." His joy was intense, when at the close of the meeting, the lady who had read the letter advanced to him and said, "You are the young man whose expenses are to be defrayed by my friend."

For a short time he joined Pastor Holmgren in testifying in Sweden about the needs of China and the results already achieved in that interesting country. Most earnestly they prayed together for God's blessing on their testimony. They prayed by agreement for six months, after the young missionary had departed for his sphere, that God would guide as to the desirability of forming a society and committee to take charge of a special mission for China. All this prepared the way in God's providence for the visit to Sweden by Mr. Hudson Taylor. That honoured missionary suggested that Scandinavia should have a share in the work of evangelising China, and expressed his opinion that one hundred missionaries should be forthcoming—sixty from Sweden, twenty from Norway, and twenty from Denmark. The Swedish friends proceeded to form their committee, money gifts poured in, and prayer was earnestly and widely offered. The Lord has done exceeding abundantly above all his people asked or thought. Instead of sixty Swedish missionaries proposed, there are now more than a hundred and fifty in China, working in affiliation with the China Inland Mission. All the support for these devoted missionaries has been raised in their Fatherland.

MR. VARLEY IN SAN FRANCISCO.

INCESSANT service has been consuming the whole of my time. Having held more than one hundred preaching and teaching services the past eight weeks, mainly to large audiences in various parts of the city, I have now and then scarcely had time to eat.

I have been in many cities, but this is the most extraordinary I have ever visited. It is honeycombed through and through with every rostrum under heaven. Every man appears to be a law unto himself—one might almost say lawlessness reigns. The tides of wickedness run with degrading violence.

The daily press is of the lowest type I have ever seen; it abounds in coarse and low sensationalism. Murders and horrors largely occupy the columns. To see little boys and "hoodlums" hawking these wretched sheets about with the cry of a "fresh murder" or some "horrible crime" upon their lips is a pitiable and terrible training. The San Francisco Press is distinctly injurious, morally considered. "Not worse than others," they say. By the way, have you noticed how this phrase "not worse than others" is everywhere used as an excuse for tolerated iniquities to the ends of the earth. "Ah! well, we are not worse than Paris," said the Mayor of Melbourne to me some years since, when made acquainted with abominable wickednesses being winked at by the police. It is high time this associated plea for the tolerance of depravity was everywhere challenged and cast out.

The religions of this coast are legion. There seems to be no room for new and fresh gods. The stock must be exhausted surely. Never were more seen in fulfilment our Lord's warning words, "There shall arise false Christs and false prophets," and shall show great signs and wonders. Romanism, Unitarianism, Socialism, Spiritualism, Theosophy, Buddhism, Christian Science (falsely so called), Palmistry, Astrology, Materialism, and Socinianism—all are represented here.

To hear some of these modern thinkers, you would really imagine that truth was still in a condition of flux, and that it has remained for the astute intellects of the latest decade of the nineteenth century to precipitate it. Like poor vacillating Pilate, who asked, "What is truth?" wilfully blind to the fact that before him stood "the truth" in all the splendour and perfection which inheres in Christ Jesus. Pilate's following has been a continuous succession until now. What a grand change takes place when the form of the inquiry, "What is truth?" is altered thus, "WHO is truth?" and we get away from the drifts of speculative inquiry into the settled rest and sure anchorage of the magnificent personality of Christ Jesus the Lord.

Never have I felt as since the time I reached this city the vast importance of the knowledge of the Scriptures. Their adequacy against all phases of error, the ever-present defence which they yield when intelligently known, and their marvellous efficiency as "the sword of the Spirit" in the exhibition and advance of the Christ are constant cause for praise. Verily "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds."

"Satan's seat" may indeed be described as found in San Francisco, and I could not allow the widespread infidelity here concerning his very existence to pass any longer unchallenged. I have, therefore, written a pamphlet entitled "Is there a personal Devil?" which I intend scattering over a wide area—20,000 at least, if I can. If any of your readers can aid me in this service it will be well. I have already printed here more than 50,000 of various pamphlets. I am determined, by free distribution and sales both, to leave behind a printed testimony to the truths which belong to the Gospel of Christ. I expect to stay here some weeks yet.

HENRY VARLEY.

IS THY HEART AT REST?

BROTHER, is thy heart at rest?
Dost thou love the Lord?
Dost thou own Him as thy guest?
Canst thou trust his word?
Loving, trusting, thou shalt find
Joy at heart and peace of mind.

Sister, is thy heart at rest?
Free from anxious care?
With the Saviour's presence blest,
Joyful oft in prayer?
Praying, trusting, thou shalt find
Joy at heart and peace of mind.

Neighbour, is thy heart at rest
From all bondage free?
Hark! a voice within thy breast
Whispers, "Follow Me!"
Following, trusting, thou shalt find
Joy at heart and peace of mind.

Stranger, is thy heart at rest,
Trusting Christ alone?
Every hidden sin confessed,
Blood-bought victory won?
Trusting Jesus, thou shalt find
Joy at heart and peace of mind.

Sinner, thou canst never rest
Burdened with thy sin!
Jesus knows and loves thee best,
Wilt thou let Him in?
Yielding, trusting, thou shalt find
Joy at heart and peace of mind.

Comrades all, with hearts at rest,
Time will soon be gone.
Will ye not, thus richly blest,
Pass the message on?
So the world around shall find,
Joy at heart and peace of mind.

Brothers, by the Lord forgiven,
Through the joyful days
Of your pilgrimage to heaven,
Utter forth his praise!
Thus at sunset shall ye find,
Joy at heart and peace of mind.

CONVENTION OF HISTORICISTS.

Dear Sir,—Arrangements have been made to hold the preliminary private meeting of Historicists at Harley House, Bow, on or about July 16 (D.V.). Dr. Grattan Guinness most generously offers hospitality for the night to all who respond to the invitations which will be sent in due course. This card of invitation must be produced at the meeting. If any Evangelical Protestants of the Historical School desire to attend, they are requested to let me know early.—Yours sincerely,

Alfred Porcelli.

THE INTERPRETATION OF PROPHECY.

Dear Sir,—I am truly sorry that I should have given occasion to Mr. Pember to complain of my having "publicly defamed" him, in supposing him responsible for words which were not his, but those of The Morning Star. I might perhaps plead in excuse that, some months having passed without any disavowal on his part of what was really a public defamation of his prophetic teaching, I was fairly entitled to regard the language as his, but I would rather accept, as deserved, the reproof that I ought first to have communicated with him.

I cannot, however, regret one result, which is that my letter has been the means of calling his attention to a public connection of his name with words which he rightly repudiates as inconsistent with the amenities of Christian controversy, and which he publicly disowns. This will be a satisfaction to many who admire, as I do truly, the learning and ability and Christian spirit of Mr. Pember's books on prophecy, though unable to accept all his conclusions.

However, we must bear with one another as to these differences of opinion, and, as Mr. Pember well says, "prophetic differences should not be allowed to separate real believers in the Lord Jesus."

I trust that this correspondence may not hinder, but rather help, the attainment of this desirable issue.—Yours very sincerely,

Henry E. Brooke.

THE IRISH REVIVAL OF '59.

Dear Sir,—While I read Bessie Howieson's story of the Irish Revival of '59, my thoughts went back to what I saw of that blessed time, and my heart rejoiced in the memory. It would take too long to tell of experiences in the first three months; how people became prostrated in mind and body; of worship suspended while one after another was carried out of meetings, being stricken with conviction, and overwhelmed with the power of the Holy Ghost. In like manner young women fell at their looms, until the work had to be stopped. I saw one morning seventeen girls laid as dead, in a row, and then one after another coming to consciousness with praises to God, in language that astonished all who heard. Strong men looked on and smiled, calling it excitement. Very soon, however, the power came on them, also rending their very hearts with sorrow for their neglect of God, until they, in turn, were brought low at the feet of Christ.

Ministers experienced the like precious anointing, many confessing that till then they had never known the saving power of God. At an early morning meeting one whole congregation of about five hundred rose at the same instant with one agonising cry, agonising indeed—such a cry as those who heard could never forget. All day long, and far into the night, songs of praise went up to the Father in heaven. We did not think of rest. Call after call would come in the night, "Such an one is stricken; will you come and pray with us?" Whole families would be converted almost at once. In town and country, in their own homes, without any outward influence being brought to bear on the individual, suddenly a cry for mercy would be uttered.

Many were brought to Christ without the prostration. It was a time of great joy. Rich and poor, employer and employed, met together, and found the Lord was the Redeemer of both. After all the years that are gone by, I often now feel my heart melt at the recollection of those days, gaining inspiration thereby for the work of to-day.

I do thoroughly emphasize Bessie Howieson's thought in reference to our churches being closed all day. How I longed last winter, during the bitter frost, that our chapels and churches (or even the schoolrooms) might be thrown open to shelter the poor, half-starved men who were hanging around, hoping for the work that did not come. The best consecration would be to fill our places of worship with such as Christ ordered to be brought in, warming and feeding, comforting and blessing, not with what we can just spare, but with what we ought to share.

May God send us such another outpouring, so that the young men and women of to-day may know something of the blessedness. Is it not a want of faith that hinders? Matt. vii. 7 to 13. Let all who wish for, hasten the coming joyful day.

Elizabeth C. Hobson.

The Book World.

SERMONS AND LECTURES.

Broken Ideals, and other Sermons. By Rev. James Thew, Leicester. (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.) These are living discourses on practical themes. Only in an indirect sense could they be called doctrinal; they are trumpet-calls to faith, to duty, and to endurance. The sermons are more suggestive than exhaustive, and their comparative brevity will secure readers.

Lectures on Preaching. By the late Bishop Phillips Brooks. (5s. H. R. Allenson.) The publication of a new edition of this work should ensure many more readers for its wise and helpful pages. Originally delivered before the Divinity School of Yale College, the lectures are pre-eminently manly, and calculated to influence for good such preachers as will read them carefully and prayerfully.

A Lent in London. (5s. Longmans, Green & Co.) These sermons on social subjects by more than twenty representative preachers of the Anglican Church embody a large amount of practical and timely teaching on the uppermost social questions of the time. There are some views of a Sacerdotal kind that we cannot receive, but these are only flies in the ointment. On the whole the addresses are earnest efforts at weighing matters social and national in the balances of the Sanctuary.

The Influence of Jesus. By the late Bishop Phillips Brooks. (5s. H. R. Allenson.) This is a new edition of the "Bohlen Lecture" delivered by the great Boston divine in 1879. It is an unfolding of the personal influence which Jesus Christ has exercised on human life in its different aspects, by his manifestation of the Divine character and attitude towards the race. We find here much lofty and noble argument closely knit, and much light thrown on life's mysterious problems; but the author's treatment of his third theme—the influence of Jesus on the emotional life of man—in our view is painfully inadequate to satisfy the deepest needs of the soul.

Bunyan Characters. By Dr. Alexander Whyte (Third series, 2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) In this series of his famous Sunday evening lectures, the eloquent Scottish preacher takes his hearers away from the well-beaten track of the "Pilgrim's Progress" into the less frequented fields of "The Holy War." Once more he proves how well qualified he is to be an interpreter of Puritan teachings. The more serious aspect of the Christian life, with its inward struggles and outward conflicts, is that which seems the most real to him, and it is a side of truth that is not too commonly proclaimed from the modern pulpit. The perusal of these powerful lectures ought to send the reader to Bunyan's book itself, and to that still deeper fount of inspiration to holy warfare—the Pauline Epistles.

A Short History of The Stundists. By a Stundist Lady. (Banks & Son. 2d.) Many who hear with sorrow of the persecuted Stundists will welcome this booklet, by one of them, telling who and what they are, and what they believe. Much of it has already been given in our own pages, but none the less will it be of real service to many.

Woman's Work in the Home. By Dean Farrar. (1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) This little book ought to prove an antidote to much of the pestilent stuff that is published nowadays about "the new woman." The eloquent author fortifies his own view by many citations and illustrations from history and literature, showing the high place in the social economy that is filled by woman as the true daughter, wife, or mother.

Church Association Tracts, Vol. IV. (14, Buckingham-street, Strand. 1s.) Another sheaf of well-pointed arrows directed against the fallacies, follies, and mischievous claims of Sacerdotalists. The weighty words of many eminent writers and scholars are collected to prove that every soul must approach God through Christ alone, and that all systems or instructors that teach otherwise are not only contrary to Church of England teaching, but unscriptural.

The Antichrist: His Character and History, as Gathered from Holy Scripture. By Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas. (7½d., post free. From the Author, Douglas Support, Coatbridge, N.B.) This paper, which was read at a prophetical conference, has been published by request, and in the hope that it may enable God's children to avoid even the appearance in themselves of the spirit of Antichrist. The views are specifically Futurist, and very clearly expressed. An appendix gives extracts from Gibbon and the writings of the Early Fathers, proving the belief o the Primitive Church in the doctrine of the Millenf nium and a personal Antichrist.

Dr. Dale's Legacy to Christendom is a pamphlet containing an address by George Kendrick on Dr. Dale's book "Christian Doctrine." (3d.) J. L. Allday, Edmund-street, Birmingham.

A Month of Thoughts for Invalids, by A. F. F. Two booklets of this series have been issued, the firs dealing with subjects suggested by the letter A, and the second with those beginning with B. (2d. each. Partridge.)

Our old friend, Mr. Cheyne Brady, whom most of our readers know as a writer of Gospel tracts, has published a new series of twelve, entitled Saving Words, which as to outward form are in good readable type, and as to their matter, evangelically sound and striking.

A Chartered Time-Table; or, Lois Emerson's Gospel of Guidance, by E. S. Elliott. A choice booklet on the Christian life, scriptural and practical, instructive and stimulating, from the pen of a well-known lady, formerly of Brighton, and long engaged in work at Mildmay. (Partridge.)

Euodias and Syntyche; or, A Woman's Plea for Preaching the Gospel of Christ. By Ellen Moorhouse. (Jarrold & Sons.) The contents of this little brochure, as indicated by its title, have for consideration an important subject which, in the form of a dialogue, is treated in an interesting and useful form.

The Curse Prevented; and the Labour Problem Solved by the Word of God, as explained by John Jack, late schoolmaster, Belhelvie, Aberdeenshire. (6d. post free. J. R. Smith, Aberdeen.) The author denounces the fashion of wearing gold or other ornaments. In The Labour Problem Solved, a section of the work (1d., same publisher), the author gives an outline of his views, maintaining that until jewellery is put away labour will not have its due reward.

A ZENANA BREAKFAST.

The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission gave a breakfast on Tuesday morning, at the Cannon-street Hotel, to welcome home Miss Haskew, M.D., of the Lady Kinnaird Memorial Hospital, Lucknow. Lord and Lady Kinnaird acted as hosts, and, after breakfast, his lordship spoke on Zenana Missions in their Christian and medical aspect, and on the constant necessity for reminding officials that India is still governed by a Christian power.

Miss Haskew, M.D., who has just arrived home, spoke of hospital experiences, the deplorable medical neglect of the natives, and the remarkable influence of Medical Missions as commending the Gospel.

Lord Reay followed with a weighty address based on intimate knowledge of India and of mission work. He bore strong testimony to the widespread results of the labours of the zenana ladies among the suffering women and children.

An address on consecration followed by Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe. Dr. Stanley Boyd, speaking as one familiar with Lucknow, bore encouraging testimony to the usefulness of Miss Haskew's work. Rev. Dr. Pentecost concluded the proceedings by an address on the outlook in India.

MADAGASCAR.—A Madagascar correspondent of the Aberdeen Free Press gives a doleful account of the existing situation in that island. The Malagasy authorities do not seem equal to the task imposed upon them, and the writer fears "that it is really all over with Madagascar as an independent nation." We notice with some interest that while the secular papers are kept back by the French from European residents in the interior, The Christian is among the religious papers and serials that are duly forwarded.

A GREAT BONFIRE was built at Fultonville, N.Y., on April 19, as a result of evangelistic services held there. One of the converts was a saloon-keeper named Firth, whose place was one of the most notorious in the town. He determined after his conversion to quit the business. By his invitation the meeting adjourned to his saloon, and the entire stock, worth £120, was brought out and emptied into the gutter, and a bonfire was made of the barrels and fixtures. The evangelist preached from the top of an empty whisky barrel to the crowd that assembled.

Large Hall, 7 p.m., "Our Lord Jesus Christ, the approaching manifestation of God's Perfect King," Lord Polwarth and others.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A NOTABLE feature of the work at Seymour House, Portland-place, Lower Clapton, is a special and successful effort of the members to induce their own circle of friends to become abstainers.

The Y.W.C.A. has a small Home of Rest at Sevenoaks for young women in business, who can stay there at 10s. a week. There is accommodation for about twenty visitors, and it is desirable to found two or three free beds, for cases of illness or great poverty. Information may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., 52, London-road, Sevenoaks; to whom subscriptions and gifts may be sent.

A large number of friends and members of the Reigate Branch of the Y.W.C.A. met at Somerset House on the occasion of the reopening of the Home for the summer. Lady Henry Somerset was present, and Mrs. Hatt Noble, Miss Parker, and Miss Barclay (from China), gave addresses. The branch supports its own missionaries in China, and Biblewomen in India. The work is spreading in the neighbouring villages. Another meeting was held in the evening, when Mrs. Hatt Noble spoke from 1 Chron. xii., on "Helpers to the War."

A meeting of superintendents of London Institutes and others was held on Saturday last at 22, Portman-square, by invitation of the Viscountess Portman. About eighty were present. Lady Portman being too unwell to attend, Mr. W. T. Paton presided. Miss Barter spoke on work amongst juniors. A new scheme for enabling Y.W.C.A. workers to secure an old-age pension was explained by Misses Keep and A. R. Habershon. Practical suggestions for lantern talks and lectures in the autumn were made by Misses Graham and Morley. The Hon. E. Kinnaird and Mr. Paton also spoke.

THE Y.M.C.A.

THE twenty-fifth annual Scottish conference will be held at Saltcoats from September 10 to 12 next.

The Countess of Warwick opened the other day a fête and sale of work for the Leicester Y.M.C.A., and expressed her great interest in the Association.

The committee of the Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, have welcomed back from a collecting tour in England their secretary, Mr. Herbert E. Kingsley.

In making mention, in our last issue, of the Keswick party being formed at special fares by the Bayswater Association, we gave, by error, the return fare as 23s.—it should have been 43s. Particulars may be had of Mr. Wild, 172, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

His Majesty the King of Sweden laid the foundation stone on Friday of the fine building in course of erection for the Stockholm Young Men's Christian Association. Congratulatory telegrams were sent by Sir George Williams and others on behalf of the workers in this country.

Mr. Zachary Arathun, secretary of the Association at Julfa (Persia), reports that the membership now stands at fifty. It was established in 1885, by Dr. Bruce, and is doing good work, but would be materially helped if it could secure a building in which to carry on its varied operations.

Mr. J. Hughes, general secretary of the French National Council, is in England for a few days, and letters may be addressed to the care of Sir George Williams, 13, Russell-square. The work of the Association in France shows that this special mission of young men to young men is exerting a powerful influence over the French people.

The Sunderland Y.M.C.A. organ says:—"It is a pleasure to note the increased and marked activity in the spiritual agencies and Bible-classes of the Association. The Monday class for workers and the Sunday young men's meeting have been the means of leading many out of the darkness of sin into the light and liberty of the children of God.

A special sermon was preached on behalf of the Hackney Association at the Clapton Presbyterian Church on Sunday evening by Rev. W. Johnston, on "Muscular Christianity." This Association is organising holiday trips to North Wales and the Norfolk Broads. The latter offers a capital opportunity to those desirous of engaging in village mission work, as open-air meetings will be held whenever practicable. Apply to F. L. Porter, Secretary, 275, Mare-street.

An interesting young men's missionary meeting was held at the Priory Y.M.C.A. on Thursday last. The chair was occupied by Mr. H. W. Fry. Short accounts were given by Mr. Geo. Lampard, Clapton, of his son's work among the Gonds of the jungles of Central India, the facts of which were most telling. Miss Lampard, who acts as home secretary for her brother, also gave a further account of his self-denying work, as did also Mrs. O'Brien, a returned missionary from India. The Islington Y.M.C.A. is all alive for foreign missions, having no less than six men in the field, as follow:—One in the Australian Bush, one Central Africa, two China, one India, one Singapore.

The half-yearly meetings of the National Council were held on the 12th inst., in the premises of the Central Association at Bristol. Sir George Williams presided. There was a good attendance of members from various parts of the country, and much business of interest was transacted. Mr. Frank Clark, late hon. sec. at Bombay, gave an account of the needs of the educated natives of India. Another interesting part of the proceedings was the acceptance by Mr. Robinson Souttar, of Oxford, of the position of hon. travelling representative of the council. Mr. Souttar has lately visited many of the larger centres of work, to the great benefit and enjoyment of the young men gathered to hear him, and the prospect of his taking a more active and prominent part in the work will be hailed with much satisfaction in all parts of the country.

In Hawaii the Y.M.C.A is in a satisfactory condition. The central work is that in Honolulu, the capital of the Islands. Additions are being made to the Association of a gymnasium, baths, and class-rooms. When completed, Honolulu will have a splendidly-equipped building for the work of young men. The average daily attendance at the reading room is 155. The educational classes have an aggregate attendance of 107 students. The religious meetings are the main feature of the Association's work, and these are largely attended. They are not confined to the Association itself, but are of an aggressive charactive. A service is held in the barracks, and also in the City prison. The aggregate attendance at religious meetings per year numbers from 14,000 to 15,000. The Association has also a regular organised system of visitation of the vessels in the harbour, and no ship of any nationality sails away that does not carry tracts and reading material, the gift of the Association to the sailors. The Association has also work for the Chinese and Japanese with separate organisations.

Under the title of "For His Sake," the Belfast Association has issued an attractive booklet on the extent of the work and the pressing need for new buildings—at present the rooms are fairly crushed out. The Belfast Y.M.C.A. Bulletin says:—"The great Ulster Hall Sunday afternoon meetings have continued to be held later on in the season than in former years, and great congregations assemble. Since last September 47,000 have attended the meetings and heard a true Gospel faithfully preached. The services have now been in operation for six months in each year for the past four years, and during that period a total of 180,000 persons were present; or, in other words, within 20,000 of the entire Protestant population of the city were present during the past four comparatively short seasons. What the results spiritually have been we cannot, dare not, attempt to chronicle. The result to the Association has been exceedingly gratifying. The Bible classes continue to furnish cause for profound thankfulness. The Sunday morning class maintains its splendid attendance, while the afternoon conversational class, under Mr. James Pyper, affords abundant reason for congratulation."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE Queen opened the new Crathie Parish Church on Tuesday last. The Royal household have gifted to the church a granite pulpit.

At the recent Free Church Assembly a new mission to miners in Scotland was launched. Dr. J. H. Wilson, the Moderator, is endeavouring to raise a fund of £15,000 to £20,000 for the purpose, and some friends have given large donations.

Our Afghan visitor, the Shahzada, might teach our own princes a lesson in fidelity to religious belief. One day last week he devoted the forenoon to prayer, it being the Afghan Sunday, and the Paisley community were deprived of an expected visit from the Prince.

The Aberdeen Free Church Presbytery, while declining to commend the Gothenburg system of liquor licensing, have, by a majority, favoured further consideration of the scheme; at the same time they desire the passing of the Local Veto Bill.

The late Mr. John Hope, of Edinburgh, having left large sums for promotion of the temperance cause and the anti-Popery movement, his relatives contested the will, on the ground of hallucination. In the Court of Session last week Lord Kincairney dismissed the objections, and upheld the will.

An aggressive evangelistic and temperance work is constantly maintained in connection with Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, under the inspiring pastorate of Rev. Wm. Ross. His assistant of the last four years, Rev. Hugh Sanderson, has left to be assistant-pastor at Holyrood Free Church, Edinburgh. See article on page 20.

The Dundee Mission to the outdoor blind has done a good work during the past year. It is said to be reducing the ratio of blindness with the population, and blind vagrancy and mendicancy are being diminished. These afflicted persons are being helped to help themselves, and their lives inspired with a new hope.

THE METROPOLITAN ASYLUMS BOARD has, by a majority of thirty-four to fifteen, resolved to discontinue the supply of beer to the imbecile patients in their asylums. One of the members stated that of 16,000 patients in asylums 75 per cent. were there directly and indirectly through drink.

THE INEBRIATES BILL, introduced into the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor, seeks to strengthen the Acts of 1879 and 1888. The chief proposal is that an application may be made to the High Court or to the County Court by the husband, wife, parent, brother, or sister of an inebriate, or, with the leave of the court, by any other person; and the Court, on being satisfied by sworn evidence, may commit the patient to a retreat for not less than six months, and not more than two years.

STUNDIST EXILES are apparently about to enjoy the privilege of emigration. A circular issued by the Minister of the Interior to the Military Governor of the Province of Kutais, Caucasus, states that in consequence of the overcrowding of Caucasia by banished sectarians, and the difficulty of finding dwellings and providing surveillance, it has been decided to sanction emigration where desired, and to grant passports for doing so on condition that the emigrants declare their intention never again to return to Russia.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A great demonstration has been held in Bermondsey in support of the Local Veto Bill.

The United Kingdom Band of Hope Union will hold their autumnal meetings this year at Grimsby.

The Temperance Fête at the Crystal Palace on July 2 promises to be more than usually successful. There will be two concerts by 10,000 abstainers.

The Bishop of Western Africa has sent home a protest against the importation of spirits into the region covered by his diocese. The natives have taken to gin-drinking, with the most disastrous results.

A man who had previously been a teetotaler committed suicide after a drinking bout in connection with an East London working-man's club. The jury attributed the man's downfall to his membership of the club.

To counteract the evil influence of the publichouse upon servants attending hiring fairs, Lady Lawson and other ladies for some time past have hired rooms in northern towns where masters and those desiring service can meet.

The first of a series of "Park Meetings for Children" was held by the Hull and District Band of Hope and Temperance League in Pearson's Park on Wednesday week, when an address was given by Mr. Geo. Hunter on "Work and Drink."

At the annual breakfast of the Church of Scotland Temperance Society, Rev. James D. E. Paton, Glasgow, presided. There was a very large attendance. Addresses were given by representative speakers belonging to various denominations.

Rev. James Christie, addressing a cabmen's tempeance meeting in Carlisle, said he had been speaking to Mr. Gully, who assured him that since becoming Speaker he had never tasted intoxicating liquor, and found that total abstinence had done him much good.

Mr. R. D. Philips, of the Exeter Total Abstinence Society, has during the past fortnight been conducting successful temperance meetings in the recreation tent at the camp of the 4th Battalion Devon Regiment at Exeter. Thirty-six pledges have been taken.

The New Hampshire Railroad Commissioners report that 90 per cent. of the deaths caused by railroads last year were due to intoxicating liquors. On ten of the twenty-four persons killed were found bottles of liquor, while many of the others bore marks of drinking, and were likely intoxicated at the time of death.

Mr. Bryce, M.P., speaking at Aberdeen, said he thought it was a good sign that the drink question had got a hold on the consciences and thoughts of so many people of both sexes. Of all the evils that afflicted the country, this was probably the greatest, and its effects were such that they were bound to ask what steps they could take to reduce the drinking of the country.

The United Kingdom Alliance announce that they are not opposed to a clause being inserted in the Veto Bill enabling publicans to compensate one another by a system of high licence. Such a proposal would, however, not be put forward by temperance reformers. The council of the Church of England Temperance Society have resolved to favour the second reading of the Bill.

Alcoholism is making sad ravages in France. Recently, in the Chamber of Deputies, the matter was discussed at great length, and it was shown that some parts of the country are covered with illicit distilleries, and workmen are paid partly in money and partly in drinks fraudulently manufactured. In an address of remarkable force, M. Lannelongue attributed to alcoholism frightful evils, hygienic and moral; it fills the lunatic asylums and prisons, it absorbs one-third of the wages of working men, and is the principal factor in pauperism. A drunken race has drunken descendants, and he confidently said that only sober peoples can survive. The very species is threatened, and sobriety must speak out. The President of the Council urged the duty of action, and measures are under consideration.

Readers of The Times who experienced an unpleasant shock on finding in its columns Sir Gilbert Carter's defence of the West African drink traffic must have felt reassured when on Friday week The Times examined in a leading article the very singular views upon commerce and Christianity put forward by the Governor of Lagos. Due emphasis is given to the views agreed upon at the Brussels Conference, to the effect that the drink traffic strangles other trade amongst native races, and to the utter futility of attempting to defend it as in any case a convenient source of revenue. Sir Gilbert Carter's sojourn upon the West Coast had not allowed him to gauge popular feeling upon this subject, but he may be enlightened by the decisive statement of The Times that "the moral sense of the community will not long submit to be outraged by a continuance of the present state of affairs."

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Dr. Gritton, minister of Trinity Chapel, Hackney, has been plunged into deep grief by the death of his wife. Mrs. Gritton died suddenly on Tuesday week, and was buried on Saturday.

Mr. E. J. Glaves, one of Mr. H. M. Stanley's junior officers in his African explorations, recently died at the mission station, Underhill, on the Congo. He had crossed Africa from Zanzibar to the Congo, visiting Livingstone's grave on the way. It is stated that during his journey he helped to suppress a great amount of slave trading.

Mrs. Bill, of the Qua Iboe Mission, has been peremptorily ordered home. The doctor at Old Calabar, after careful examination, decided that this was the only way by which her health may be restored. It will be a hard blow to Mr. and Mrs. Bill, who will be glad of earnest prayer that all things may be overruled for his glory, and that in his own good time Mrs. Bill may recover strength for her loved work.

Rev. Richard Govett, M.A., is the subject of an interesting note in last week's Baptist. For more than fifty years he has resided in Norwich, and for the greater part of that time been pastor of the Surrey-road Baptist Church. Though he is now in his eighty-third year, he preaches every Lord's day, and is still busy with his pen. The list of his publications is a little book in itself. "A wonderful man is Mr. Govett, a man of very remarkable gifts, a great teacher on the best of all subjects, a fine Greek and Hebrew scholar, but, better than all, a man who lives to glorify his Lord."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Henry Thorne has recently visited Hastings, and conducted Gospel services in the Pier Pavilion and the Central Wesleyan Chapel. In each of the services there was a harvest of precious souls.

Mr. William Day has been holding tent meetings in the villages of Sandhurst, Hartley, and Finchampstead, with encouraging numbers, and hearty help from the resident ministers. The various churches here are uniting.

Helensburgh, N.B.—A most interesting series of meetings have been held on the esplanade here by Mr. and Mrs. Powers and their daughter, Miss Powers, from Hull. The Gospel was faithfully preached and sung to young and old.

Major Cole recently closed a great work at Denison, Texas. Thousands of professed Christians were renewed in ardour and confirmed in spiritual strength. Hundreds were won over to paths of peace by accepting Christ crucified and proclaiming to the world their intention of leading better lives.

Ireland.—A tent mission has been held at Bluestone, co. Armagh, by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist evangelist, and others. A nine days' open-air mission has been held in Londonderry by Mr. S. Miller, of Belfast. Hundreds of persons of all creeds and classes gathered at the various centres to listen to the evangelist's pointed addresses.

Mr. Newton Jones has concluded a six days' mission at Ryecroft Congregational Church, Walsall. The chief work has been done among the scholars of the Sunday-school. The meetings were exceedingly well attended, and the inquiry-room thronged with young people. A Christian Endeavour Society will be one of the outcomes of this effort.

Mr. J. Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded on Sunday a seventeen days' tent mission at Broadley Common, Essex. Deep interest has been taken in all the meetings, and the attendance has been very good considering the size of the village. Much blessing has attended the mission. Mr. Greenwood commenced another mission at Moreton yesterday (Wednesday).

Mr. Gerald Coultas commenced on June 8, with open-air services, a mission in Brynmawr which has been graciously helped of God. The Fair being held in the town drew many sightseers, and gave grand opportunity for reaching the great mass of non-church goers. Crowds have listened eagerly all through the week to the Gospel. On Sunday evening the boxing saloon was lent by the proprietor, and the novelty of having a service in this place brought many to the scene. The mission is being continued this week, and prayer is asked that many souls may be saved.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—On behalf of Gospel work in the villages of Ayrshire during the summer months.—For a special mission for the young in Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood, by Rev. John Mitchell.—For blessing on the troops stationed in London.

A Holiday Resort.—Rev. D. Cooper Hunt, curate of St. Matthews, Surbiton (Middlecot, Hook-road, Surbiton), writes extolling the advantages of St. Nicolas, in the valley of Zermatt, as a quiet, bracing, economical place of holiday resort. He will be glad to give fuller particulars.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES THOMPSON, KENDAL.

Many will recall the famous "Sharpe v. Wakefield" licensing case, which has so greatly influenced magisterial action since the decision was given. Mr. Thompson, who has now passed away, was one of the magistrates who refused the licence. He was a leading Christian and millowner in Kendal, and was also the proprietor of the far-famed Filberthwaite slate quarries. He was twice Mayor of Kendal, and a prominent member of the Society of Friends. His death is much regretted throughout the district.

MRS. F. HERMANS, SALT LAKE CITY.

The death is announced of the wife of Rev. Francis Hermans, Secretary of the West Norwegian and Danish Mission Conference, Salt Lake City, Utah, U.S.A. In a letter to a friend in England, Mr. Hermans says:—"The doctor, a Christian man, said he had never seen such a glorious death, such peace and confidence in the Saviour whom she had known and served from her youth. She was a good wife; I thank God that He is sufficient even at this time, and in doing his work I find some healing balm for my wounded spirit." Many of our readers remember Mr. Hermans as a former worker in connection with the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway.

MRS. SHARLAND, JAPAN.

At Chofu, Shimonoseki Straits, Japan, there died lately, of paralysis, Mrs. Ellen Sharland, formerly of Bideford, Devonshire, in her seventieth year. She was buried in a native cemetery in Chofu, beside a foundling whom she had helped to rescue. Her life was a blessing to her own people, and to the Japanese, whom she dearly loved. The Lord blessed her life and work exceedingly, giving her the privilege of leading souls to Him up to the last month of her life. She leaves fifteen orphan waifs, whom she and one other had been entrusted with by the Lord. As these children have no home, it is desired to erect for them to her memory a building to be known as "The Sharland Memorial." Already Japanese have brought offerings for some memorial of her. This orphanage is entirely a work of faith, without guarantee of support from any mission society. Mrs. Sharland spent a year or two in mission work in Burmah, six years in China, and eight and a-half in Japan.

MISS DE BROEN'S PARIS MISSION.

On a bright Sunday afternoon, at the end of May, there met, as usual, in the Iron Room a congregation of working-men and women. The hymns were sung with heart and animation, and several strangers passing along the road entered, doubtless attracted by the melody. After prayer M. Ami read the striking story of Elijah's sacrifice (1 Kings xviii.), and then applied with earnestness the question of the prophet: "Why halt ye between two opinions?" pleading with all who had heard the Gospel call no longer to linger, but to decide now for Christ. Dr. E. G. Masterman, medical missionary from the Holy Land, who was present as a visitor, also delivered a brief address.

Finding that my help was not needed at the Sunday-school, I walked across the Park to visit a good woman whom I have long known. The Park of the Buttes Chaumont was crowded with people enjoying the fine air and bright sunshine; but before reaching the large gate on the north side I found myself unexpectedly in the midst of a noisy fair. I came first upon a little theatre, then another show, which I cannot describe, but it made me so indignant that I told a woman who was carelessly looking on that I was astonished they allowed such a performance. Did they wish their children to be accustomed to such sights? She said: "Why, madame, have you never seen this before? Where have you lived? There is nothing illegal done here, it is for the amusement of the young people." "What do you wish?" said, an elderly man. "C'est la vie!" This is indeed sad. Do they call this life?

I was intending to make my way home, when my eye rested on a strange little stage, draped in sombre black, with the words La Mort, printed in large letters in white. I was afterwards told that the act of dying was represented, and the body put into a coffin; then, in the dim light, a deep voice sang part of the funeral service of the Romish Church.

My heart was filled with sorrow for the people, many of them looking so weary. I thought what are Christians doing to let these pleasure seekers know of the true heart satisfying gladness. French Gospels and tracts, as well as other support, will be welcomed by Miss de Broen.

SAVING WORDS.

"Words whereby thou, and all thy house shall be saved."

"Mr. Brady's style is quite to our heart. He is direct as a dart, clear as a sunbeam. Earnestness throbs in every line; and withal a power of keen thrusting too seldom possessed. He knows the sins of the human heart, and the Saviour who can work their cure."—C. H. SPURGEON.

Poor Jewish Children in Whitechapel, Stepney, and Mile End.

The Jewish Missionaries of the London City Mission wish to give 1000 poor Jewish Children a Day in the Country. The cost will be about £50. In addition, if funds permit, it is desired to send away, for one or two weeks, many of the sick and ailing Jewish children. But for the efforts of the Missionaries these little ones will get no change from the dreary courts and alleys of East London.

For 10s. a child can be sent to the country for two weeks.

Will Readers of THE CHRISTIAN give these little ones a sight of the beautiful country?

Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, or by the Secretary, Mr. G. R. COLE, 8, Bridewell-place, E.C. c5221

MRS. SETON ADAMSON, The Vicarage, Wright's Road, Old Ford, London, E., earnestly solicits sums, however small, to give a Fortnight, among Fields and Flowers, to Sick and Sunday-school little ones in our East London Parish. Population over 11,000 poor; no middle class. Help will also be gratefully acknowledged towards a Day at the Seaside in connection with the three sets of Sunday Schools, two Mothers' Meetings, and Factory Girls' Institute belonging to the parish. c5230

DAY IN THE COUNTRY for adults and children. Also fortnight for the weak and suffering out of St. Luke's and Clerkenwell. Pastor Philip Gast, of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road, 12, Noel-street, Islington. For over a quarter of a century help has been sent. c5233

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec.

Notes and Comments.

ANOTHER volume from the pen of Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., entitled "Christ in Isaiah," and forming one of Messrs. Morgan and Scott's "Scripture Expository Series," will be published on July 1.

The many friends of Dr. Barnardo's work will be interested to know that Thursday next, July 4, which is the date of his jubilee, will be observed at Stepney Causeway as "Founder's Day." This gathering will take the place to some extent, it is hoped, of the annual meeting in Albert Hall, which had to be relinquished on account of Dr. Barnardo's breakdown in health. He expects to return to London in time for this meeting. Tickets of admission, 1s. each, can be had from the secretary, 18, Stepney Causeway, E.

The World's Women's Christian Temperance Union has, by its international convention, undoubtedly attracted a great deal of attention both to itself and to the cause it represents. The mere display of numbers and of influence has made an impression, and evoked respectful acknowledgment of the great and beneficent object which all temperance workers have in view. Some waves of holy influence must go forth to every shore. England, in whose vast metropolis the Convention met, ought to be the chief gainer. Unhappily the fall of the Government has thrown back, for a time at any rate, any legislation providing for Local Veto; but the meetings of last week will serve, we trust, to advance the cause throughout the country, and so pave the way for future legislative reform.

The eyes of the world were last week upon the brilliant scenes at the opening of the Baltic Canal, and even the German Emperor must have had his love of the imposing and surprising gratified to the last degree. He spoke at the banquet at Hamburg with more dignity and self-control than is his wont, his words on peace having a specially welcome ring :—

We have cast a glance on the eternal sea. Let us now direct our looks to the sea of peoples. The hearts of all nations uplift themselves to us here to-day with questioning looks. They need and desire peace. In peace alone can the world's commerce expand, in peace alone can it thrive. And peace we shall and will uphold. In this peace may the trade of Hamburg, too, prosper and flourish. The protection of the Imperial Eagle shall ever follow it whithersoever it may pursue its way over the globe.

We earnestly hope these assertions of Peace may not, as on previous memorable occasions, be the precursors of war.

Japan is not reaping from her victorious campaign much of the harvest she counted upon, and is therefore in a very sullen mood. The correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs :—

Business is practically suspended, and some fear that the unusual calm will be followed by an internal commotion as sudden and as violent as the seismic disturbances which so frequently wreak destruction and death in different parts of the country. I doubt it. I am more inclined to think the present feeling of rage will give way to an implacable desire for revenge. In that case Japan will one day prove a thorn in the side of more than one European Power. Political changes are pending, and Count Ito will probably shortly resign. When he steps out militarism will succeed, and an era of gigantic armaments will be inaugurated.

Amid all these strivings Christians have to go on with their work. War or peace, whichever it be, we have to do the will of Christ.

A valued correspondent, signing himself "Ten Years in China," writes emphasizing some important factors in missionary enterprise. Anything akin to going into debt to sustain God's work would be uncalled for, if Christians generally realised that :—

The secret of liberality in God's work is found in real consecration. Deepen the spiritual life, and God-given generosity, as well as other graces, will be manifested. Whole-hearted consecration is needed among God's saints—missionaries, ministers, and congregations. Why do funds get low; why does spiritual life decline? Simply because we are not practical—in other words, not true in our consecration to the divinest and most glorious service.

With regard to missionary administration, our correspondent has some useful suggestions. The home council or committee should manage exclusively home affairs, and maintain home interest in the work; but on the field the missionaries should form a council among themselves for the direction of their special work. Finally, the churches at home should appoint the missionaries, support them financially, and intercede for them at the throne of grace, and in all possible ways sympathise with them in their anxieties and joys. These points are all worthy of careful and prayerful attention on the part of friends of missions.

Dr. Cave, of Hackney College, has been interviewed by a representative of The British Weekly, to whom he told the story of how he received an impulse to theological study. It is to the following effect, and well illustrates the value of a kind observation. One of Dr. Cave's deacons in his first church said to him one day, "Mr. Cave, you have only two subjects in your preaching, one is conversion, and that suits the young people; the other is providence, and that suits the old." The young minister felt that his deacon had touched a weak place. About that time a friend lent him "Martensen's Dogmatics." He began to read it about five in the evening, and he sat up all night and read to the end. Dr. Cave says that there has been a remarkable theological revival in his time in the colleges. This ought to augur well for an intelligent and powerful ministry, so far as the substance of the teaching is concerned, while recognising that the grace of the Spirit is an essential ever to be remembered.

Still, there are more young men offering themselves for ministerial work than there are places for them to fill. We spoke recently of two of the missionary societies as being over supplied, and now the Primitive Methodist Conference has had to face the same fact :—

Dr. Wood submitted a series of resolutions on ministerial candidates, of which there were this year forty-six, for whom no places could be found. Of these, twelve were placed on the reserve list, twenty were placed on the reserve list for the college, entitling them to enter next year, and the rest were informed that there was no hope of places being found for them. After a long discussion, a resolution was passed asking the circuits to exercise care in recommending men. A Congregational minister and a minister belonging to the Methodist Church of Canada applied for admission into the ministry, but the applications were not entertained.

It is all very well to exercise care in recommending men, but when that has been done, it is evident that there are more men than can find their way into missionary and ministerial service through the ordinary channels. Are all these men mistaken as to the meaning of the inner call of the Spirit? Some of them may be, hardly all. If not, what will these brethren do? Not quench the Spirit, we hope. If not, they must get out to service by other means. Will they go abroad as "irregulars"? or will they make congregations at home? The problem of "too many men," when the world has hardly been touched by Christian labour, is a very solemn one.

The three years' term of ministerial service among the Wesleyan Methodists is being eagerly discussed just now. Its denominational aspect does not concern us, but it is by no means being taken alone on any such narrow issue. Thus one correspondent of The Methodist Recorder wishes above all things to know whether the proposed alteration will make the ministers more spiritually minded and more zealous for the salvation of souls.

Moving about amongst earnest, intelligent young Methodists of our city, I am much struck with the expressions bearing on this which find utterance, and are somewhat as follows :—That as a Church we are not as earnest for the welfare of even the precious souls which comprise the ordinary congregations of our chapels as from our professions of faith and our past history as a Church we ought to be; that it is a remarkable fact that those chapels are fullest where the Truth is put the plainest and most pointedly, and where, as a consequence, most souls are being saved—where, in a word, the Church is most alive; that our people feel this is what they want, though there may be no articulate expression given to it; that many of our younger ministers are now working strongly on these lines, while not neglecting the more particularly social features of our work; that there is bound, sooner or later, to be a big swing back in our Church from the merely intellectual, as well as more popular, yet ephemeral, style of preaching which obtains too frequently amongst us, as in other churches, and, oftener than not, leaves the comfortably-off sinner comfortably in his sins; that this awakening of interest in vital religion is being observed in other churches, and that as a church we must not, we dare not, take any steps which will make a return to this method of work on our part less likely to take place.

If the proposal brings such views as these to the front, a great deal of good is sure to be done, no matter what the settlement of the immediate question involved may be. The movers of the proposal may be doing more good than they ever dreamt of.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has lately been assailed on the ground of a certain inability to fraternise with Unitarians; he is willing to co-operate with them in social and political matters, but he cannot unite with them in spiritual and religious work which draws its life and power from the devout recognition of the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ. He says that Unitarians could not join with him and others "in praying to Christ as God, and yet that kind of prayer is the very essence of our worship and the inspiration of our religious life."

Upon this declaration one of our contemporaries remarks that Mr. Hughes is like the apostle who forbade the casting out of devils by one who followed not with Jesus and his disciples; and that "a great many beside Unitarians could," they imagine, "be shut out from Mr. Hughes's religious fellowship if direct prayer to Christ were made a sine quâ non of it." We are glad that Mr. Hughes made his stand. Unitarianism would chill to the bone the other Nonconformist bodies who attempted to do spiritual work in its fellowship.

If President Shurman, who writes in the Philosophical Review, correctly reads the signs of the time, Agnosticism is already on the wane, and is destined to pass away. He says:—

Reason cannot escape from its three fundamental ideas—nature, self, God—and the development of reason consists in enriching the content of each, and adjusting them harmoniously to one another. It cannot, therefore, be doubtful—and the history of human thought confirms the expectation—that reason's next step will be to modify or re-interpret the idea of God, so as to inform and harmonise it with the revelation which science has deciphered in the operations of nature and the life of humanity. Nay, has not reason already, to some extent, accomplished her task?

It is the old story—knowledge increases, perhaps a startling discovery is made, its niche in the theory of the universe is not at first seen, its relation to the old beliefs is not understood, therefore throw the old beliefs overboard; then comes a turn in the tide of thought and feeling; the old beliefs remain, and the new knowledge finds its proper place. Perhaps we shall not hear so much of Agnosticism now.

In General Pollock's War Office Survey, of all places, there is a reference to an event which comes as a curious confirmation of the story of the crossing of the Red Sea by the Israelites. What especially came under the Major-General's notice in the region through which it is supposed Moses marched to the Promised Land was the action of a gale of wind, which had stopped all survey work on the borders of Lake Menzahleh, in a few hours carrying the waters of the lake beyond the horizon, leaving all sailing vessels resting on the damp bed of the lake. Wherever the passage of the Israelites took place, the possibility of water being influenced by wind to so great an extent was demonstrated.

The evil of self-consciousness has spoiled many a good sermon, and crippled many a strong man. The Bishop of Ripon analyses it very skilfully in his Lectures on Preaching.

This self-consciousness hinders alike the man of intellectual and the man of emotional type. The man of intellectual type distrusts his emotions, his power of self-criticism makes him averse to any display of feeling. He hates to make a fool of himself. He restrains, curbs, and almost kills natural feeling. His self-consciousness takes the form of a pride of indifference. He thereby loses the aid which the strong emotions of earnestness might give him. Being proudly reticent he is not his real self. None the less does the emotional type of man become the victim of self-consciousness. He has no reticence; he yields too readily to his feelings; even when there is no adequate cause he is sentimental; his intellect exercises no guiding judgment. His very self-consciousness leads him into an exaggerated manifestation of the emotions which at first were genuine and natural, but which have at length become artificial and insincere. The remedy for both these evils is the same: the presence of a pure, simple love—the love of work, the love of God, the love of man.

If the sacerdotal clergy of the diocese of Exeter at all resemble their brethren in other parts, we fear that the admonitions and pleadings of Bishop Bickersteth will not have much weight with them. Some of them mix water with the wine in the presence of the congregation, use incense and peculiar vestments, observe Romish festivals, and celebrate the requiem for the dead:—

In his Master's name he solemnly and publicly charged any who did these things or such-like things to submit themselves to his godly judgment, and, in obedience to their ordination vows, henceforth to discontinue these acts, which were illegal. He had taken counsel on the matter with the archbishops and bishops of the Church, who all unanimously condemned such practices, and the teaching with which these observances were too often accompanied.

We do not remember that the archbishops and bishops of the Church have acted upon the view they are said to hold; if they did we should have a very different state of things to-day.

There is a note of warning sounded in the Yale Review, which we hope may reach many ears. Mr. George L. Fox, who writes on the work of the London County Council, and mostly in praise of it, calls attention to the attempt at the last election to put upon the Council seven representatives of the liquor trade.

Fortunately, only three of these were elected, and it is to be hoped in the future that the London nominating committees and constituencies will take warning by the experience of American cities, and always look upon a representative of the liquor interest as a persona non grata in the Council.

The same observation applies to all public bodies that have the handling of public monies; men should not be upon them who have trade interests of their own to serve, and especially interests which are injurious to public morals.

The dependence of Londoners on their hospitals is very strikingly shown by the fact that out of a population of 4,306,411, the population of the administrative county of London in 1893, no less than 1,717,187 received aid from them. In other words, one out of every two men went to the hospital for relief, one woman in every three, and nearly one child in every two. Ought this to be? In towns in the north they seem to help themselves a good deal more. This is a form of eleemosynary aid which carries no stigma with it, and to which many resort who surely ought to be above doing so. Or is this one of the features of city life to which we must submit as inevitable? Some time ago, Miss Octavia Hill compared the comfort of a country cottage in its possession of "things"—linen, etc.—with the poverty of a well-to-do artisan's house in the city; is this almost universal use of the hospital another sign of the way in which crowds lose their independence?

Who will lay it to heart? Dr. Walmsley remarks in a report to the Metropolitan Asylums Board, that:—

Of all diseases insanity is the most preventable, and in the present state of medical science one of the most incurable, yet we are mainly engaged in endeavouring to discover "cures" instead of carrying out preventable measures. We do not cure the insanities, for out of eleven cases of those who become insane nine ultimately die insane, and of the remaining two but one entirely recovers. The lunacy laws fill a big octavo volume, yet one clause forbidding the marriage of those in whom the taint exists, and another to prevent people driving themselves mad with drink, would be worth the whole volume.

Insanity is not the only disease, we believe, which it is easy, by living rightly, to prevent, but almost impossible to cure.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' MISSION.—Mr. E. Wright has issued a report of his relief work among street-corner loungers, desponding wanderers, forlorn park squatters, and hungry attendants upon the shop windows of bakers, cook-shops, and restaurants. Details are also given of open-air, Bible-carriage, and Gospel distribution. The office is Lebanon Villa, Greenhill Park, Harlesden, N.W.

Conditions of Revival.

Sir, — The letters and articles in The Christian on the need of Revival have made one long for it exceedingly, and the question arises, "How is a Revival to begin?" By prayer? Yes, but also by taking what already is ours and using it. "He that believeth on Me as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive" (John vii. 38, 39).

"Rivers of living water"! Is not this what we all feel is needed, both from our own land and unto the ends of the earth? God's Spirit flowing freely through us and watering those around.

Then why is it not so? Why are those around us parched and dry, dead for want of living water? We turn again to the text. What are the conditions? "He that believeth on Me." The promise is not to those who are very holy—have been Christians many years, or have passed through floods of sorrow. No! it is, "He that believeth on Me." If this means what it says, what is there to wait for? "Open thy mouth wide" to receive what has already been given.

In each of the four Gospels, and in almost identical words, we have a record of John's witness to our Saviour's mission in contrast to his own. "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost" (Matt. iii. 2; Mark i. 8; Luke iii. 17; John i. 33). The Book of Acts opens with almost the same words, but spoken by our Saviour Himself; and further on, He adds, "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto Me . . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth."

In Acts ii. this promise is fulfilled, and a wonderful result follows (41). This gift of the Holy Ghost was not for the apostles only, for in ch. ii. 38, 39, Peter says, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, into the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The following references in addition to those already given seem to me to show that more stress was laid on this baptism, or filling of the Spirit, than is now laid, and that it is connected very closely with conversion. (Acts v. 32; viii. 14-17; ix. 17; x. 44-47; xi. 15-17; xv. 8; xix. 2-6.)

Would not our pleading with sinners take more thoroughly Bible lines if the filling of the Holy Spirit were more spoken of as a gift which is for all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ? The wonderful gift which would abide with them for ever—to comfort (John xiv. 16), teach, and bring to remembrance (John xiv. 26), encourage (Rom. xv. 13), to mortify the deeds of the body (those sins which now enthral them) (Rom. viii. 13), and to fill with love, joy, peace, etc. (Gal. v. 22).

Would not some be induced to enter on the Christian life if such a guide and friend was insured to them from the very first? and would not the rising generation of Christians be more thorough-going for Christ if they had from the first realised and accepted this Divine helper? A gift not received understandingly is not much use. Money in the bank left unused does us no good.

Shall we not, therefore, take for ourselves this great gift and then tell others of it? Let it not be said to us by the Master in loving sorrow as to Jerusalem, "How often would I . . . . . and ye would not."

A. M. C. Wilson.

THE UNVEILING.—25.

THE SEVENTH TRUMPET.—THE THIRD WOE.—II.

The closing verses of the chapter (xi. 15-19) state very concisely that which is fully described in the succeeding portion of the book.

The four-and-twenty elders, representing the redeemed of all ages in their priestly capacity, worship God and give Him thanks that He has now taken his great power and has reigned. "And the nations were angry." The effect of the Gospel is to lead men to repentance or to make them angry. An innumerable multitude out of all nations come through and out of great tribulation, and wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb; but the nations as such remain impenitent, and become angry because Christ's witnesses torment them with the truth. Then God's anger comes, and the time to judge the dead and vindicate his servants; and to despoil them who despoil the earth, which the Covenant-Angel has redeemed, and set his foot upon, and claimed.

The chapter began with the command to measure the temple of God on earth, and those who worshipped therein; it closes with a vision of the temple of God opened in heaven, and of the ark of his covenant—the faithful worshippers below, the faithful covenant-keeping God above. As the prayers of the saints were answered by voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake (viii. 1-5), so here, when the temple in heaven was opened and the ark of the covenant seen, there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail. For "shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto Him, though He bear long with them? I tell you that He will avenge them speedily" (Luke xviii. 8). Cain and Abel, Joseph and his brethren, were typical men.

Abel's blood for vengeance
Pleaded to the skies;
But the blood of Jesus
For our pardon cries.

Yet if that cry is rejected by those who need the pardon, the curse of Cain must fall upon them. Perhaps the afflictions which have befallen Joseph's brethren throughout their history and will yet culminate in "the time of Jacob's trouble" (Jer. xxx. 7), may all be traced to the bitter envying which led them to cast Joseph into the pit and sell him to the Ishmaelites, and which culminated in their murder of the true Joseph and the imprecation of his blood upon themselves and their children. It may be traced still further back, to the envy of Cain, the sin of his parents, and the hate of the old Serpent.

Various episodical visions of important significance occupy chh. xii.-xiv., then the seven Bowls of wrath begin to be poured out. The main course of The Unveiling is resumed at xv. 5 from xi. 19, these passages being connected together by the mention of the opened temple of God in heaven.

Dean Vaughan in his "Lectures on the Revelation" (Macmillan) makes some valuable remarks and reflections, with which this paper may be appropriately closed:—

"The day of the recognition of the sons of God must be a fearful day for his enemies and their persecutors. 'A day of darkness and of gloominess,' a day of judgment too, and of confusion and contempt.

"And thus the curtain falls for the second time upon the great drama. The succession of the Seven Trumpets, like that of the Seven Seals, has brought us to the end of time, and if further disclosures are yet to be vouchsafed to us, they must take up the plot again at a point higher than the catastrophe.

"We pray day by day, 'Thy kingdom come'; have we ever stayed to think what it will be when God at last grants that prayer?

"We often speak of the ways in which we may promote God's Kingdom; by seeking his glory and obeying his will in our daily lives, or by aiding those machineries which are at work in the world for its improvement or evangelisation. Have we ever thought what it will be when God's Kingdom has come? What will be left then of this life, of this world, which is now so much to all of us, which is now all in all to many? In other words, How much of our present lives is entirely holy and heavenly? How much can survive the wreck of earth and be transferred into a world in which God is all?"

I am not without assurance that these papers have been helpful to some if not to all readers. Let me again say that they are not only in harmony with past, present, and future fulfilment, but they show that such fulfilment is inevitable. Given certain causes, certain effects will follow; given unseen forces in exercise, corresponding results will be made manifest. The Book of the Unveiling unveils the unseen forces, powers, and influences, good and evil, which have made history in the past, are making it now, and will make it in the future, until the mystery of iniquity and the mystery of God alike are finished.

I shall greatly value the readers' prayers that when these papers are resumed in a few weeks or months, it may be with increased light from the illuminating Spirit. M.

The Silver Lining.

Art thou encompassed by waves of affliction?
Lo, they are crested with God's benediction.
Dark though the clouds which are threatening to fall,
Mercy and faithfulness tower above all.

The little children were in the garden. They would cull a flower for mother. With loving hearts, but lack of wisdom, they pulled a large bud, enfolded in green, velvety leaves. Poor bud, untimely plucked from the parent stem, never to unfold as "a thing of beauty," only left to wither and die!

In the afternoon there came a card, with a black border and a silver lining! A little one had been taken away—the child of godly parents, and at the foot of the card was written:—

For ever with the Lord,
Amen, so let it be!

The thought came with wonderful sweetness, and we pass it on to comfort other sorrowing hearts—"God's flowers are always wisely pulled." He wants the buds as well as the blossoms, but he guides his hands "wittingly"! He makes no mistakes! That lovely flower, as dear to you as life itself, is not left to wither and die. It is but transplanted to a sunnier land, to the King's own palace-garden! Even the precious body has but fallen asleep in Christ. "Awaiting," as one said lately, "the spring wind of the first resurrection."

My little card had a silver lining; it might have been a golden; for the light from the Glory-land was shining on it. There can be no wrath in the removal of a dear one to heaven!

God will have all his own people there by-and-by, and so the detaching and the "attaching" is going on continually. Earth is becoming more "blank and comfortless;" our treasures are being sent on before. Soon we too shall cross the river into "love's own country."

This world is ours, and worlds to come;
Earth is our lodge, but heaven our home.

The great temptation for us is to doubt God's love. "He could help, but He will not. He loves not, He cares not." What a dark and cruel insinuation is this! Child of God, flee from the tempter and hide in thy Father's bosom. Prayer unanswered may be the best answer. (Every wise parent knows that.)

He watches the furnace with steadfast eye,
With a love that is strong and sure,
And our gold will not suffer a whit more heat
Than is needed to make it pure.

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

A well-known aged servant of God wrote to me recently:—"Could you not make an appeal through The Christian, for special prayer for Ireland? it is so sorely needed, so much neglected." We do well to help on mission work, and give our best energies towards the conversion of the heathen, but surely our own country has the first claim, and the spiritual darkness of some places in Ireland is awful in its depth.

Our women were once famed for their virtue, but alas! the contrary is fast becoming common; numbers of country girls are disgraced, and not ashamed. No effort is being made to reach these lapsed ones. Nominal Christians live in selfish comfort, while souls are perishing. Romanists are careful to provide a garment called a "habit," generally the cast-off robe of a priest or nun, to wear in the hour of death, and place their hope for salvation on the fact of having one arm at least thrust through the sleeve before the last breath is drawn. There is hardly one to be found who does not wear a charm hung round the neck from childhood. Many still believe in a priest's power to turn them into dogs or cats by his curse, and the late awful case of superstition in Tipperary proves the truth of what I say, as to the credulity of the lower orders.

Yet they will receive instruction; and our professing Protestants are much to blame in setting so poor an example. We live on far too low a level; thousands might honestly state, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost," as a gift bestowed upon God's children here and now. I asked a clergyman about the spiritual state of a certain woman; he replied warmly, "Oh, she is a fine Protestant; she would like to burn all the Roman Catholics in Ireland." Is this how we keep the "New Commandment?" (John xiii. 34; xv. 12; 1 John iii. 14; iv. 7-8). Another gentleman, speaking of a brother minister who was utterly unfit to have a cure of souls, said, "Oh, we all know what poor S—— is, but we must shut our eyes." (Ezekiel xxxiv.). A young lady made an effort to gather some ignorant countrywomen together for some charitable work—prayer and mutual help in the way of life. But the wife of the parish clergyman did her utmost to hinder the attempt, and, above all, objected to the Bible being read at such meetings.

The great Revival of 1859 was chiefly in the North of Ireland, and little of the blessing was received in certain parts of Leinster. We are praying, waiting, believing that the coming of the Lord is nigh. Will not all who know how the Holy Spirit can pour even through earthen vessels, the unsearchable riches of his grace, help us in this "most distressful country," which was once the "Isle of Saints"?

Missionaries went out from Ireland in early days to carry the Gospel into England, France, and Switzerland. Pray that the stream of blessing may return now, and water our parched grounds. "Now we beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with us in your prayers to God for us" (Rom. xv. 30). C. M. B.

CONSTRAINING LOVE.*

By Rev. ANDREW MURRAY.

The love of Christ constraineth us.—2 Cor. v. 12.

Let that be our consecration text. It will suggest to us whither Christ's love will lead us; it will suggest to us what the power Christ's love will be; it will suggest to us the way in which that love will prove itself. "The love of Christ"—you know that does not mean our love to Christ; but his love, the love of Christ shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost. If our love to Christ is to constrain us, I do not wonder we are often faint and feeble; but his love coming into us must constrain us. "The love of Christ." People ask, Does this mean the love of God coming into us? or his love for us? They are one. The Spirit of everlasting love comes into us, and dwells in us and works in us.

And now, if the love of Christ comes into my heart what will it teach me to love? Mary Lyon,† of sainted memory, said: "You cannot take Christ in your heart without taking the whole world." She was right, because the world belongs to Christ, and if you take Christ you take the world with Him; and so you are compelled to manifest his love as reaching out to the ends of the earth. My brother, have you understood that in taking Jesus you take Divine power reaching to the ends of the earth? Have you learned to say, "Lord Jesus, enlarge my heart that I may love every creature whom Thou lovest." Then shall we begin to ask, What is our love to God? What is our love to others? and what would He have us do? It is not enough to say that we want to belong to Him, we must ask, does his love constrain us—compel us? Does it so constrain us that his love, his consecration, becomes ours? Oh, friends, let us look on all around us, saying, in the name of Jesus, "I take all into my heart, as Thou hast taken it all. Lord, here I am, to be used by Thee wherever Thou wouldst have me."

And then, secondly, "the love of Christ constrains us"; that tells us of the power of God's love for us.

THERE IS NOTHING LIKE LOVE AS A POWER.

In illustration, I might speak of the love of a mother for a child, of the love of a patriot for his country, but let us rather think of that marvellous love of God—the love which gave his only-begotten, his well-beloved Son—the love which brought that Son down from heaven; that burning, longing love which animated Him all those thirty-three years; that all-sacrificing love which led Him to Gethsemane, to Calvary, that He might bear the iniquity of sinful, wretched, and lost men. If ever that love comes into my heart, kindles a flame of holy passion, dwells in me, grows and increases, and, becoming strong, takes possession of my being, then will come into my spirit the glad willingness to be and to do anything so that souls may be won to my Saviour.

There is a missionary in South Africa whom I heard say at a prayer meeting, "Ah, if it had been it could not have kept me in South Africa for twenty years. I could not have stood so much ingratitude, wretchedness, and disappointment; but I rejoice to bear it all, for the love of Christ constrains me." Many say, I am willing to give up all to be filled with the Spirit; I have claimed the promise, and I expect Him to fulfil it, and that the Spirit of burning love for souls and for the whole lost world will fill me. God grant it may be so. Do not say, I am not strong enough, or holy enough. Only yield to the love of Christ, and let that mighty power enable you to conquer and to bear.

Think of what it would mean were believers really filled with the overwhelming, constraining love of Him who died for them; so filled as to be ready to work or to die for Him, to go where He will so that He might be glorified. Two years ago at the ordination of a young missionary in South Africa, I saw three or four aged missionaries, who had grown grey in service in far away obscure corners, winning no praise from man and bearing much from the poor ignorant heathen; and as I saw them I said: Nothing but the love of God could do that; it is the love of Calvary burning in these beloved men and women. Dear brethren, let us yield to this love of Jesus, which can alone quicken and compel to holy service, and, if need be, suffering.

And now one more thought. The love of Christ proves itself in holy service; the love of Christ tells me what I am to do—nothing less than sacrifice myself wholly.

THAT IS ALWAYS LOVE'S WAY.

It is always what love does. The love of the mother delights to sacrifice itself for the child. The love of the patriot leads him to sacrifice himself for king and country. So the love of God led Him to give up his best and dearest. He spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all. And Christ Jesus loved not his own life but laid it down a ransom for many. Herein is love, his love. Do we want that love? Do we cry, "Fill me with the Spirit of Christ?" If we really want the Spirit of Christ, it must be the spirit of self-sacrifice to be and to do all He would have us. If you are indeed desirous of consecrating yourselves to God, look on Calvary; look on Jesus. See how He gave Himself to God in a great act of self-sacrifice and perfect consecration. And now what a wonderful privilege to stand alongside Jesus in the presence of the Father, and, surrendering all, to say, "Oh, my God, through the grace of Jesus Christ, I consecrate myself unreservedly to Thee." Is not that too much? No, it is not. God could have no pleasure in me save for the sake of Jesus Christ his beloved Son. We can do nothing pleasing to God except as we are accepted in the Beloved. But now being in Him we are accepted as well pleasing to God. Dare we then say, "With the consecration of Christ Jesus I consecrate myself"? We may in the Lord Jesus Christ. Dare you do it? Can you trust Him now? If you stop to cultivate your own love, to mourn over your own lack of love, to pray for more love, you will not be filled. You must yield. You must believe that He can fill you, can make his mighty love compel and constrain you. Let the Holy Spirit have his way. Let Him work in you as He will. He is working in you; yield to Him, and He will work more abundantly as you accept, and yield, and praise Him for it, till you reach the blessed life of deep simplicity and humility. I am nothing but a vessel into which his everlasting love may come, burning out all dross, setting me on fire with a holy glow, and compelling me to offer myself to be and to do everything my God would have me.

Dear friends, the love of Christ was love consecrated to the service of God and man, love ready for any self-sacrifice. Are you willing so to consecrate yourselves to Him, that the love of Jesus may come in and fill and constrain you as He will?

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

Two meetings for consecration and prayer were held at the Lower Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon and evening, June 17. The floor and gallery were filled by a large number of friends of the Mission and by many well-known representatives of Christian work in and around the metropolis.

The first meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Gelson Gregson, who has recently visited South Africa. Mr. Arthur Mercer, secretary, made a brief statement as to the present condition of the work, which he said was in immediate need of help. Rev. Andrew Murray said it was not the intention of those who convened these meetings that much should be said about the objects or work of the S.A.G.M., but he might observe that the Mission was seeking very definitely, not only to work among the heathen, but also to help the churches by stirring up believers to a life of holiness and consecration to God's service; he thanked God for the work the Mission had done in South Africa. Mr. Murray then proceeded to give a heart-stirring address on true consecration, taking for his theme the question of the Apostle Paul to the Lord Jesus, "What wilt Thou have me to do?"

The evening meeting was well attended and interesting. Mr. Murray prefaced his address by saying that there were now a very large number of Jews at Johannesburg, and that it was hoped the way might open for the S.A.G.M. to commence special work among them. Mr. Malbert, who had been on a mission tour to them in 1893-94, was very desirous to return and work among his Jewish brethren there, and was ready to go forth as soon as the needed means were received. Mr. Dudley Kidd and Mr. Frank Huskisson addressed the meeting upon the necessity of personal consecration to God in all the details of life. Mr. Kidd and Mr. Huskisson sailed for South Africa on Saturday last.

DEGENERATE AND REGENERATE.

In a sermon at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Sunday last, from the text "Ye must be born again," the Bishop of Ripon said:—

Degeneracy marks the order of the day. There is a gentle senility about the symptoms of society failing in enterprise, shirking its responsibilities, and tinged with a tender realisation of the inevitableness of old age in life. We neglect our responsibility to all that makes for vigour and manliness. We love to have our æstheticism with the slightest touch of immorality. In our literature we like the short story, with a dash of the dustbin to flavour it. Society is exhibiting the weakness, the paltriness, and—forgive the word—the "maudlinness" of old age. To become rich without industry is the sordid ideal; and, worst of all, we are reminded of the nameless sin which is the last sign of the decay of nations. Everywhere there are suggestions of decay and demoralisation. We look to be a race without a future—and, indeed, for the bulk of European nations there is no future. The nations are content to sit down on a policy of self-preservation. The age of vigorous truth and enterprise is no longer with us and the inevitable pessimism has set in. What, then? Is there no hope? Yes, for whenever exhausted civilisations reach this point there comes the message that we need regeneration. The nation which has no future is bound to go down. China has gone down before Japan because she lived in the past.

Regeneration is what we need—new life, new vigour, new enterprise, new ideals. For society there is a message in the words, "Ye, too, must be born again." We must have new ideals, new vigour. Give us the mind which is born from above. Give us the new life that we may begin again our tardy discipline of self-sacrifice and self-devotion. What we ask is that the message shall be for society just what it was in olden days for the individual. To get rid of the old self is to get hold of the new life. The dying multitudes must look to the regenerating Christ, to that life of self-sacrifice and devotion which found its culmination on the Cross, a life of consecration to the interests of humanity. The regeneration of society is to be accomplished by the regeneracy of individuals. If the fresh energy of God were to come and transfuse our souls, it must be with the old message of our ancestors.

A COTTAGE HOME FOR MEN.

On Wednesday of last week a company of friends and others gathered for praise and thanksgiving at the opening of a new Cottage Home for Men at Lancing-on-Sea, in connection with the North-East London Gospel Mission. The friends, after inspecting the rooms and arrangements, gathered in the men's sitting-room, where, after prayer and praise, Mr. Chorley (director) told of the Lord's goodness in meeting this fresh need for the many enfeebled men and fathers constantly met with in home visitation. While he could say they scarcely ever had a balance in hand, yet he had nothing but praise to offer for the whole twenty-five years during which his care of the work had extended. The history of the Mission had been one of steady, quiet progress, the last addition to which they witnessed that afternoon.

Not less assiduous than the temporal were the spiritual endeavours, and very many poor mothers in the older Home could speak to their personal salvation as an outcome of their stay at Lancing, while many a tried Christian had been cheered and strengthened to the race again. It was prayerfully sought that similar results may be realised in this new branch of the work.

It may be mentioned that there are a few needs remaining, including a small harmonium. Any communications should be addressed to Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, London, N.

FOX-COURT RAGGED SCHOOL.—A social meeting of the workers was held on Monday evening. Much interest was excited by the uncovering of a series of paintings on panels executed by Miss J. Keighley—pictures alternated with pithy proverbs from "John Ploughman's Salt Cellars," and these decorations serve to brighten the walls, besides imparting an elevating and educational influence. Mr. and Mrs. Melville Beachcroft were present, and reference was made to the jubilee of the School next year, and the mode of celebrating the event.

REVIVAL AT ROCHESTER, N.Y.

ROCHESTER is a city of 150,000 people in the western part of the state of New York. It is near the shore of Lake Ontario, on the opposite side from Toronto. Perhaps in no other place, aside from Oberlin, Ohio, did the late Chas. G. Finney, see such large results of his revival labours as in this city. In 1830 he held meetings for many weeks in Rochester. The city was deeply stirred, and a great change made in its moral state and after-history. The great majority of the leading men and women of the city were converted. Mr. Finney, having been a lawyer, had special power in reaching the consciences of the lawyers of the city, and leading them to Christ.

The greatness of the work at that time attracted so much attention among ministers and Christians in the state of New York, New England, and other parts, that the very fame of it was the means of spreading the greatest revival of religion that this country had known up to that time.

In 1842, Finney again held revival meetings in Rochester, and many were converted, particularly among professional men and their families. Several of the lawyers that were at this time converted became ministers. In 1855, Finney held his last revival meeting in Rochester. One who attended his meetings said to me:—"For four months he preached daily to the people, speaking on the average an hour and a-half at a time." Like Finney's other revivals here, it commenced and made its first progress among the higher classes of society, so that opposition was overcome, and every thing made favourable to the general extension of the work of salvation. It extended and increased until it seemed as if the whole city would be converted. From here the revival flame extended into the general revival over the whole country till 1859.

During the past weeks men have said to me:—"Rochester has not been so stirred religiously since Finney preached here in 1855, as it has this past winter and spring." In February, Drs. Wharton and Barron held daily meetings, afternoon and evening. The two evangelists were well mated. The largest churches were thronged with earnest listeners, some 1300 who signed cards, saying that they desired henceforth to lead a Christian life. But the best work was, perhaps, in stirring up ministers and church-members to greater earnestness and devotion.

In April, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, and the singing evangelist, P. P. Bilhorn, were here for two weeks. In some respects Dr. Wharton had been a John the Baptist, and this prepared the way for the great blessing with which God crowned Mr. Chapman's meetings. On the last Sunday of the latter's stay, there must have been at least 500 seekers. The unusually large membership of the churches with which the evangelist worked were also greatly stirred to seek a deeper spiritual life.

In May, Rev. Chas. H. Yatman, who has a national reputation as a heaven-blessed soul-winner, came to Rochester. He refused to hold meetings in any church, asking that a large hall in the centre of the city be rented for his meetings, which was done. Mr. Yatman's three weeks of meetings were in power and demonstration of the Spirit; hundreds were converted, and large numbers were reached that could not have been induced to enter a church.

The cap-stone has been placed on this series of evangelistic meetings by the Lord sending his servant, Mr. D. L. Moody, here for a day's meeting this week. Mr. Moody spoke for an hour and a-half in the Central Presbyterian Church to over 2000 people in the afternoon on the subject of "The Bible." The church was full, and had it held twice or thrice as many, it would probably have been full. The very sight of Mr. Moody, with his earnest words and testimony, is the best antidote I know of to unbelieving criticism. Judging by my own feeling, the audience must have been greatly encouraged to follow earnest and systematic study of the Written Word.

In the evening Mr. Moody spoke on the need of the Holy Spirit for service. Hundreds went away from the church after all standing room was crowded, expressing disappointment that they could not even see the evangelist. Before his sermon he asked for help in a work which he is now pushing forward, to supply Bibles, Testaments, and Christian literature to prisoners throughout the United States. He stated that there are 750,000 persons confined in the prisons and jails of this country, and that probably 500,000 of them were young men. During his recent visit to Texas he has had his attention called in a special manner to the sufferings of the prisoners, particularly in the south and west of this country. Mr. Moody's sermon, as all who know him need not to be told, was an evidence of the great truth which he preached.

Mr. D. B. Towner and Mr. Moody, jun., were with him. The evangelist looked as though in the best of spirits and health. May God spare his life for many years to come, to hold up Jesus Christ as the light of the world! ALBERT NORTON.

"THAT GOLDEN LIGHT."

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

"I AM not sure that I altogether approve; you see there is always room for difference of opinion about Christian work; still I grant that it is astonishing that such numbers of men regularly attend that kind of meeting."

Thus spake one who had for long been known as a worker, to a friend who asked him to go and see the reputed Thursday evening meeting for men, which had for years been conducted by a lady.

"But are we permitted to judge, Raleigh? Does not our Lord's rebuke to Peter hold a meaning for us, 'What is that to thee? follow thou Me.' I'm thinking we'd better see to it our own motives are right, and leave all explanations of others' conduct till we stand in the full light of eternity."

The intervening hour soon passed, as they walked together discussing (rather than doing) Christ's work, and ere they expected it, they were met by the many coming to the Hall near by, for the service.

Without pressing his opinions further, Raleigh followed his companion, who had made up his mind to go in. Sitting in a secluded corner, it was easy to watch the audience, and criticise the speaker, whose cultured voice held all in ready attention. To his surprise there was no maudlin sentimental talk, but more downright, earnest practical teaching from God's Word than he had heard for many a day. The listeners were stalwart and intelligent men, and when at the close they sang the words, "Crown Him Lord of all," it was evident they were learning there that nothing must come between the soul and Christ, everything in heart and home, and life and business, must serve to worship and crown Him King. Raleigh heard the announcements of other meetings for men, women, and children, and wondered at the absence of all excitement, as nearly two hundred men went out apparently elevated in purpose and ennobled in character. Parting from Major Henley, he said, "Well! well! I can only say I don't understand it, and to see the trouble we have to beat up our people, and supply our entertainments and attractions to keep them: it requires explanation. I must think it over. Good night."

It was sunset hour, and the room Raleigh sat alone in faced the west. The hills beyond the garden were tinged with roseate beauty, and as he gazed he was drawn into solemn reflection. The sun was dipping into golden light that cast a warmth of glow all around. His eyes, fixed on the glory, seemed to see more than in other sunsets, for God has his own times and ways for speaking to the soul that is willing to hear, and it was an hour of glad surprises and deep heart-searching. He seemed away from the busy world, and on the mountain where heaven and earth approach, and

JESUS ALONE IS SEEN.

All his mistaken motives, his failures, his little opinions, and meaner judgments, shrunk into contempt, and ashamed he cried, "Search me, O God, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting," and it was as if God took him, and showed him a needy world, and bade him bathe his soul in his eternal love, and go forth to bless, not criticise, to save, not waste precious years in forming opinions, and following narrow lines of service. And, as the last bright beam faded, leaving only the afterglow to speak, he heard his Saviour's words anew, "I must work the works of Him that sent Me while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

The effect of such times could not be told, nor the results estimated, but well might he thank God for the sacred power that came through that golden light, where he saw his mistakes, and was filled with the spirit of love and service.

Years of fruitful living followed, and Raleigh, with his chosen friend the Major, was taking recreation by the sea. Other Christians were there seeking rest for further happy toil, and pleasant meetings were arranged between the workers, and, ere leaving, a consecration hour was asked for. To this meeting a goodly company of both sexes went, all one in Christ Jesus, and she was there who had, with devoted love to her Master, spoken to those men in the hall, and others from the same town.

A stranger led the service, and for its keynote took the words, "For me to live is Christ." "Any lower motive must be for ever banished," he said, "and whatever rises within—be it in form of opinions, or judgment of others, or fear of being thought over-religious—to all these we say, 'Get thee behind me, Satan.' Jesus must be all in all, for life is short, and our Master says, 'Go work to-day.'" All felt and knew the Lord to be near, and at the time for going forth, one trembling cripple man, unheeded by any before-limped with difficulty to the front, and said in fal, tering tones from a full heart, "The people laugh at me, and few will notice me, a poor wreck of a body; but such as it is, if He can use it, I give it up to his service, and soul and body I resign, 'just for the love of Jesus.'"

They had seen and pitied him often on the beach, and had offered help, but no one would have dreamed to see him there, with his wretched appearance and meagre attire. A silence fell over all, and tears dimmed many eyes, as they heard his thrilling words and saw his flashing eye, a living illustration as he was of all who would be truly Christ's, for self-abasement and conscious helplessness are necessary ere the soul in sincere humility is ready to own Him "all in all."

Once more they lingered, and taking the cripple's words, it was Raleigh who rose and said, "Let us thank God for this man's example, and examine ourselves in this solemn hour, and pray that every motive, thought, and desire that is not wholly pure and good be taken from us now, and all our service from henceforth be done 'just for the love of Jesus.'"

It was the last evening of their stay, and Major Henley and Raleigh were on the cliffs watching the sun set over the sea, and talking of the golden light in which he had beheld his responsibilities, when Mildred Lawson came along that way. It was of her Raleigh had once intended to ask explanations of all her unusual work, and the secret of her power, but telling her of this, he said, "God can use a burning bush, a heavy trial; or a glowing sunset in which to talk to the soul, and after my foolish and disparaging words about your work, He came to me in the golden light of sundown, and told me not to trouble how others worked, but see to it I was fit to serve Him also. Since then I have trembled to utter a word of criticism, and I adore the love that can allow us to share in his blessed work anywhere and any way."

And they each agreed in the testimony that all devout souls consent to, that every one who lives the Christ life, and understands what real spiritual work means, has somehow seen the golden light of eternal realities come very near when the Saviour took their little faith, and weak love, and feeble desires into his hand, and multiplying them, gave back in strength, in zeal, in quickened purpose, to feed hungry souls. Then will they gladly deny self, and willingly follow wherever He shall lead, not choosing their work, but doing it with humble hearts "just for love of Jesus."

Oh let this love constrain us,
To give our hearts to Thee;
Let nothing henceforth pain us,
But that which paineth Thee.
Our joy, our one endeavour,
Through suffering, conflict, shame,
To serve Thee, gracious Saviour,
And magnify thy Name.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION, COLLINGWOOD-STREET, NEW CUT.—The eighteenth anniversary of this Mission was held on June 10, the meeting being presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny. Mr. R. K. Causton, M.P., having expressed his hearty sympathy with the work, a brief report for the past year was rendered, from which it appeared that 310 indoor services and 422 outdoor meetings were held, besides Bible classes, temperance, and other gatherings. Mr. Denny has accepted the office of president, which has been vacant since the death of the late Mr. Spurgeon. The year closed with a deficit of £123, and about £80 due for rent. The meeting was addressed by Messrs. J. Pearce, T. Young, J. Ashton, and others.

VISIT TO THE TIBETAN MISSION.

By J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

It was a hot and weary ride from Darjeeling to Kalimpong—up hill and down dale to an extent undreamt of even in the hilliest districts of our islands—and when, after a steep and zigzag climb of some thousands of feet, the substantial kirk of the Church of Scotland Mission loomed before me, the sight of so European a building out there almost took my remaining breath away. After a lengthy search through the village, I found in the church vestry the party in quest of whom I had come, studying Tibetan. Under the guidance of Mr. Polhill-Turner, practical headway is being made in the language with a native lama or priest for teacher.

The hearty grips of welcome from each member of the group were quite a treat, and soon the class was adjourned for lunch. It did one good, too, to see the way in which the flourishing Scotch Mission is befriending the band, whose temporary quarters are its well-tilled field. I wish that space would allow me to tell of its most encouraging work in Kalimpong and the villages round its schools and hospital; but my present purpose is in relation to Miss Annie Taylor's earnest appeal.

Miss Taylor herself is still to the front at Gnatong, some twenty miles further on as the crow flies, but some five-and-forty, or three days' climb, by the winding road. Apart from her work among natives, she is the only chaplain for the British garrison. Her zeal and courage need no commendation, and no one need fear that her labour will be in vain. Having found the administration of a mission composed chiefly of men a more difficult matter than was anticipated, Miss Taylor is now asking for one or two ladies to take their stand by her side and prepare to push forward among the women. It was a great disappointment to find that time would not permit me to pay this noble pioneer a visit, but I take the opportunity of earnestly commending her and her work to the prayers and support of those who have not the privilege of being with her.

Meanwhile, the party which has come out as a result of her appeals is settled for the summer at Kalimpong, in British Bhootan, there to study and wait for guidance. Some think Tibet is likely to be opened soon, but at present the promise of this is very slight. So far only the little wedge of Sikkim is open, and here there are several groups of Scandinavian workers. The population of this district is estimated at about 30,000, of whom perhaps about 5000, scattered about, are Tibetans. Nepaul and Bhootan, on either side, though under British influence, may only be visited by special permission, which is never granted to stay in the villages. So, in the face of closed Tibet and a very limited scope at the door, it is a serious question whether the Mission would not be acting wisely in moving after the summer to the Chinese side, where there are perhaps a million Tibetans over the frontier.

I found the party in a modest house, still growing above their heads, with the skilled assistance of some of their number, and among them, Phuntstiog, a striking Tibetan Christian, one of the converts at the Scotch mission, who, as well as their regular teacher, is coaching them in pronunciation. When I spoke of plans for the future, Mr. Polhill-Turner said, "If you mention our mission anywhere, will you ask the earnest prayers of God's people that we may be guided whether to remain here or go round by the Chinese frontier. As far as we can see, this will be our wisest step in autumn if the country is not opened by that time; for there is not sufficient work to keep us here after we have made a start on the language, in comparison with the crying needs elsewhere. But I fear that if we get to work at Chinese, too, our men will remain among the Chinese on the border. If any go, those who have difficulty in learning Chinese—which would be indispensable there—would have to remain here, and our present studies will show which are which. No definite plan of action is, however, yet before us, and God, when He wills, can open the way."

I was interested to learn from the Roman Catholic missionaries at Darjeeling of the sustained but unsuccessful efforts of Père Desgoudins to enter Tibet. For ten years or more he has been working on a Tibetan dictionary, which he is now seeing through the press in Hong Kong. At Gaya, the birth-place of Buddhism, near Patna, I met with Pharmapala, the Buddhist apostle, who went to Chicago. He also had his face set Tibetwards, with a view to reforming the exceedingly corrupt form of Buddhism—rather Lamaism—which prevails there; yet even he cannot obtain admittance from this side, and contemplates an attack viâ China, after a mission through that lethargic empire. In Almora I found Mr. Agnew, an independent worker, arranging to pass to and fro, in native garb, with caravans, a feat he has already successfully performed. In our prayers for Tibet we must not forget the Moravians, so long in the field at various outposts waiting to get in.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH OF ITALY.

The twenty-fourth annual report of the Evangelical Church of Italy opens with statements showing that trials have of late attended the work. In pursuing its missionary course, the Evangelical Church has aimed at maintaining friendly relations with other Christian organisations; and while as at present grieving over distraction and blighted expectations, it has need of the sympathy and prayers of friends of Gospel work in Italy.

The statistics show that there are twenty-six churches and thirty-five stations, with 132 places visited regularly. The ordained ministers number twenty-one, evangelists ten, colporteurs eight. There are teachers and Bible-women, Sunday-schools, and associations for young people. The communicants number 1697, and the adherents 6315. Some of the members know what it is to SUFFER FOR THE CAUSE OF CHRIST.

Thus from Bari it is reported: "Several of our brethren are being sorely tried. Although good workmen, because they belong to our church they are treated as outcasts, and deprived of the means of earning their own and their children's bread. To save themselves from all this persecution, they would only need to give up public testimony of their faith, and nobody would care what their private opinions might be. But they will not consent to hide their light under a bushel; they bravely choose, rather, to bear the cross. Our Church gives several hundred francs annually for the work of the Lord and the relief of the poor; but to me the grandest and most heroic contribution of all is that of these men, who brave hunger and thirst rather than deny their Lord."

From Bologna, Rome, and other centres deeply-interesting reports are given; and as a specimen of the whole we reproduce some extracts from Pastor Fera's letter from Florence, showing that is being made. After mentioning that the converted priest, Pietro Petroni, is continuing his studies with zeal and affection, and stating that Professor G. de Marzo, one of the most celebrated Dante commentators, has joined the Evangelical Church, he writes:—

"One of our new sisters in Christ had been educated in a nunnery, and so was full of papal prejudice and hostility to Protestants. Her brother, a young officer in the army, who had been in the habit of frequenting Evangelical meetings, induced her to accompany him. The gentle heart of Miss B—— was soon brought under the power of the truth, and after thorough study she embraced the Gospel, and was admitted to the church.

"A young workman, a printer, was full of Socialistic ideas, which, however, yielded no satisfaction to his heart. He came to our church in a spirit of mingled prejudice and curiosity, but hungering after truth and righteousness. When he was examined by the elders, he made us all cry with joy as he told us how good God had been to him, how peace had entered his soul, and how grateful he was to the pastor, as the instrument God had chosen to lead him to the Saviour.

"Another young working man, though the son of an Evangelical, being left to himself and without surveillance, had wandered into a life of vice and blasphemy. Somehow he was led to our meetings, and there his eyes were opened; he threw himself at the feet of the Saviour, and is a model Christian.

"Four of our new communicants came from the day and Sunday schools, and other four were converted at the services in connection with the various works of benevolence. We pass over many other interesting facts as to conversion and noble deathbed testimonies in order to tell of the work of grace in the soul of a dear good friend, whom God has recently given us,

PROFESSOR ROSARIO GIAMPORCARI.

He was born in Monopoli, a province of Bari, in 1852, and educated in the Roman Catholic religion. When his University studies were finished, he embraced the military career, but when passing his examinations, in order to enter the school at Modena as a junior officer, he was seized with an affection of the left eye, and obliged to leave the army. After some time spent quietly at home, having a desire to know the true religion, he entered the seminary, put on the clerical costume, passed through the philosophical and theological curriculum, and was ordained priest in 1883. Thereafter two years were spent in the Gregorian University of Rome, and other two in the Marian College at Naples. He was then elected Professor of Philosophy in the Archiepiscopal Seminary of Monopoli, and spiritual director by the Confraternity of the Most Holy Cross. Later on, he was appointed by the Bishop of Monopoli honorary canon of that cathedral, confessor of both sexes, and director of 'The Daughters of Mary.'

"'During this period of clerical life,' says the Professor, 'amid studies and constant preachings that I had obtained from God the pardon of my sins. This constant doubt induced me to lead an indifferent life within and a hypocritical life without. Unable to continue in comfort in this state of contradiction, I went one day, incognito, to Foggia and shortly afterwards saw on the walls of the city, "Conferences on the Sundays of Lent, on Christ and his Church." Moved by curiosity, I went to these. I was at once struck by a touching prayer of the pastor, asking the pardon of the sins of all present, through faith in Jesus Christ alone. From this dated my conversion. I had various conversations with Evangelical ministers, and little by little the light broke in upon my mind; and I believed that we are justified by faith and not by our own works, and that these are required as a fruit of justification and not as the meritorious cause of it. Persuaded of the error of the Romish Church on justification, and thereafter day by day on all the other tenets of her system, I resolved completely to abandon the Papacy.'

I NEVER COULD FEEL SURE

"In March, 1894, the Professor married, and to-day he is working with us as a humble disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ. Signor Giamporcari has a bright intelligence, and everything about him reveals the genuine convert. We pray God shortly to make him the precious instrument of carrying the Gospel of the grace of God to his fellow-countrymen, who are immersed in the darkness of superstition and error, or wrapped in the folds of indifference and unbelief."

Communications regarding the work of the Evangelical Church of Italy may be addressed to Rev. Dr. McDougall, the Scotch Church, Florence.

THE PARIS CITY MISSION.

This interesting mission is pursuing its labours with silent energy, as the annual report, recently issued, proves by its records of grace. It is no light duty to approach the working and lower classes of that city Bible in hand, as there exists a hostile feeling towards it, with utter ignorance of its contents. That this opposition can be overcome by evangelistic effort is now firmly established. Only of late years has Paris been open to the Gospel, but good use has been made of the liberty by the McAll and other missions. Fallow ground has been broken up; mission halls and Bible readings are now well attended, while a steady and increasing demand for the Book itself exists throughout Bellville and other districts where darkness and spiritual death had for generations settled upon the people.

In hundreds of wretched and crowded dwellings the ten missionaries are now welcomed, and their readings and teaching listened to with interest. Signs have followed in the enlightenment and salvation of many souls. To this the report before us gives witness. Throughout there is a simplicity of statement and absence of writing for effect which gives a charm to its testimony. The hon. secretary, Mr. J. M. Weylland, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, London, N.W., will gladly forward a copy of the report to any interested friends.

A TEMPERANCE SOCIETY at Danbury, Connecticut, is composed of young women who have pledged themselves not to marry any man who touches intoxicants. It has a membership of 400.

MISS MASON'S HOUSES OF REST.

The word "rest" is a specially welcome one in London on a broiling day in June; and such a day last week was a suitable occasion for the annual meeting of Miss Mason's Houses of Rest. These Homes have been a channel of rich refreshment, physical and spiritual, to thousands of tired out women workers, for the space of nearly thirty years. The meeting was held this year, not in the Finchley-road Home, but in the more central location of Portman Rooms, Baker-street, where a goodly company gathered to encourage the heart of God's handmaid who superintends this work.

After praise and prayer the chairman, Mr. Seagram, expressed his deep interest in the work in a few suitable sentences. In rising to give an account of her stewardship for the year, Miss Mason remarked that any who were present in the Albert Hall the previous evening might think her little gathering somewhat tame; and yet she could not see why one should not be as enthusiastic over the work at the Homes of Rest as in Temperance work. She mentioned in this connection the very interesting fact that though some ten thousand persons had passed through the Homes during the past twenty-nine years, not a single drop of alcohol had been used, either for medicine or beverage. The Homes are for those who grow "worn and weary" in the Lord's work, but not necessarily "sad." They devote themselves in different capacities to work among the poor, the sick, and the suffering, and they often break down through the strain and stress of work. To all such the Houses at Finchley and Eastbourne are an untold boon. Miss Mason read from letters received that morning from workers who had thankfully shared in the benefits of the Homes in years past, and were again in circumstances of need, requiring to seek some rest and care in these happy retreats. Very pathetic was the appeal of our sister for the middle-aged workers who are apt to be thrown aside in favour of those who are younger. If she were to make provision for all such who applied to her she would need the whole of St. John's Wood. The Aged Workers' Home has fourteen rooms, nine of which are occupied. Each aged sister has a furnished room to herself, with firing. During the past year 883 tired workers have had a season of rest, recreation, and spiritual stimulus. Miss Mason said that though the existing debt on the property had happily been paid off, there were still many needs in relation to the work. The Homes are greatly in need of repair, and of course they have to be maintained throughout the year. Her own work was voluntary, so that all the money subscribed went to the maintenance of the work and the workers who claimed rest and help in the Homes. She did not mean to extend the scope of the Homes. It had been suggested by some that a similar institution for tired-out ministers and other working brethren should be founded. She thought such a place was certainly needed, but she did not feel led to ask money for it. If any one sent her £5000 she would be glad to do the work.

So full was Rev. F. B. Meyer of thanksgiving to God for the mercies of the past, especially in freeing the buildings of debt, that he was constrained to call for the doxology, which the company rose and sang. Referring to the strain on Miss Mason's own health, particularly in weakened eyesight, through the responsibilities of the work, Mr. Meyer said that no one can save others and save himself at the same time. Christian workers as well as other people ought to take proper rest—certainly one day in seven; now the burden of debt collecting was removed from Miss Mason's shoulders she must take better care of herself. The power of united prayer, as illustrated by some facts in the report, was delightfully expounded by Mr. Meyer, and he commended Lady Henry Somerset's suggestion that at noontide each day all Christians should pray for their fellow-workers. It is a grand thought that if this idea were carried out the cycle of prayer going up to God would never cease day or night. A choice little address followed from Rev. Henry Sharpe, who pleaded that the fresh glow of consecration in youth should be kept up through the time of consolidation, on to the consummation of life's work.

Then Dr. Monro Gibson supported Mr. Meyer's suggestion, and even amplified it in asking Miss Mason, after twenty-nine years of hard work for others, to take a year of comparative rest herself, in order to further service. Not only in connection with the Houses of Rest, but in public testimony for the Gospel, for the power of prayer and the reality of faith, as well as in the association of temperance with the Gospel, Miss Mason has done good work for the Christian Church. The echoes of the great Temperance Congress seemed to be ringing also in Dr. Gibson's mind; without entering into the woman's question, many points of which were still open, he said that one thing was settled—that it is her privilege and call to do what she can for the Lord Jesus and for the advancement of his kingdom.

The collection being taken, Pastor Fuller Gooch gave the closing address. He regarded Miss Mason's work as having an unique claim on God's children, (1) because it makes provision for so many of "the Lord's poor relations" (as Miss Mason has put it in her report); (2) it promotes true union among all sections of Christians; and (3) it aims at the deepening of the spiritual life of the inmates of the Homes and other believers. Mr. Gooch added some strong words of approbation for the idea of the Home of Rest for aged ministers, which he knew to be greatly needed.

Miss Ada Rose sang two songs, and the afternoon's engagements were altogether of an instructive and stimulating kind.

THE SHAFTESBURY INSTITUTE.

WOMEN'S NIGHT-SHELTER.

How often it happens that trials are only God's choicest blessings in disguise! "Unto the upright, there ariseth light in the darkness." So it has proved in the work of the Shaftesbury Institute Night Shelter, which of late has been submitted to the electric search-light of public scrutiny, and has been fully vindicated from the false charges brought against it.

Probably many readers of The Christian have seen in some newspaper the report of an inquest on the body of an infant who died in the Institute Night Shelter. At the inquest severe strictures were made as to the sanitary condition of the Shelter and its management. This report was copied into most of the London and several of the country papers. It contained statements entirely false, e.g., "that there was only one sink and one towel; that the inmates were all huddled together, lying on one continuous mattress; that the Shelter was run for personal profit, bringing in £200 a year."

A disclaimer by Lord Kinnaird from personal knowledge of the work has already been noticed in your columns. Just as the Shelter matron was relating to me what had taken place at the inquest, a procession of twelve men, headed by a policeman and vestry official, entered the Shelter door. "We are jurymen," they said, "and we have listened to an account of this place, but as it was given by persons who had never seen it, we have got an order to inspect it for ourselves." To which I replied I was only too pleased to show the work to anyone who would take the trouble to come. In a letter to The Daily Telegraph the foreman of the jury writes:—"On entering, we found ourselves in the larger dormitory, containing about 5000 cubic feet, two stoves, and plenty of light. The air was exceptionally fresh, and the floor very clean. The mattresses were all single ones, filled with alva, and covered in waterproof. These and the floor were just being washed in disinfectant. There were six women employed in scrubbing, which was their regular daily work. The other rooms were smaller. The children upstairs (in the crèche) were playing happily enough on the floor, which was covered with linoleum, and their sleeping room had very pretty iron cots; the quilts, etc., were cleaner than you would find in many middle-class houses. There were seventeen wash-hand-basins fixed." The writer concludes by saying the object is evidently to lead some of these poor wanderers to think of higher things, and he hopes that many may be led to go and see it for themselves. This letter is signed by the foreman of the jury and some of his co-jurors.

The objects of the Shelter are twofold. First, we desire to help any woman who can earn a little, but not sufficient to maintain a home of her own. "But should not such be compelled to go to the workhouse?" say some. The best reply I could give is the testimony of one of the inmates, with whom I had a most interesting conversation a few days ago. As the women pay their own way, and are not paupers, living on charity, we cannot demand to know their history, but with a little tact and kindness they will readily give it.

This woman was fifty-one years of age, she told me, and I could see in a moment that she was much superior to the others; not in her attire, for that could not have been more ragged, but in her manner, her accent, and ability to express herself. It was some time before I could gain her confidence, but, believing she had something to tell, I urged that she should do so. "I am a baronet's daughter," she said, and at length she confided to me the name. Her mother, Lady ——, I am acquainted with. Drink has brought her down to what she is. She tells me she earns a fair living by selling shoe laces to working men. She uses the twopenny Shelter, and speaks highly in its praise.

Finding she could speak from the standpoint of the rich, as well as the poor, I put some questions to her. "Wide is the gulf between them," she went on to say, "and the kindness of the poor to one another is wonderful. But one of the gains of this Shelter is that it brings ladies into direct touch with the poor. What a boon after a hard day's work, often walking many miles, to return and find a warm welcome, a kind word, a clean Shelter, for which we have only to pay 2d., instead of running up a heavy debt to a hard landlord, or going to a women's common lodging-house, where we meet the lowest and most degraded. The evil of the workhouse is the utter hopelessness of the future. Why should we be forced into the workhouse, a burden to others and to ourselves, where we have to work without pay, and are practically prisoners. Indeed, we are far worse than prisoners, for they get paid for their work, and if they do a long sentence, when they come out, a nice little sum is handed to them, whereas the poor go into the workhouse paupers, and come out paupers. Also one is subjected to companionship of the most degraded, cursing and swearing and language not fit to be heard are unchecked. But living in the Shelter we have our freedom, the companionship of a friend or relation, and the enjoyment of the beautiful flowers and grass in the parks."

We are often asked whether we receive the same woman night after night. When a young girl enters the Shelter for the first time her case is carefully enquired into. If she has run away from her home, we communicate with her parents; or if she is a suitable case for a Home, and she is willing to go, we either draft her into our own, or make arrangements for her to go to another. But in the case of middle-aged women, many can only earn 9d. or 10d. by flower-selling or match-selling, and they are beyond the age when they could better themselves so as to have a room of their own.

But there is another object; indeed, the primary aim is the spiritual good of the inmates. Prayers are conducted daily by one of our deaconesses, when God's Word is explained very simply, and we have united prayer on Sunday mornings, when all the Homes meet and our hall is full. Many of the women attend our Mission Hall service on Sunday evenings. The attendance at these meetings is entirely voluntary, yet, not only do they attend, but many of them learn a text from the Bible and repeat it along with the workers.

We have a very valuable outlet from the shelter for those who are too old for the Girls' Home, and, indeed, for most homes. Our "Women's Labour Home" has been the means of giving to not a few middle-aged women a fresh start in life. This Home receives eight women without restriction as to age; these are employed as cleaners and washers, and they give labour in return for board, lodging, and clothing.

There are a large number of women who, from lack of reference, are unable to obtain situations. They may have been servants in large houses, and been married and left widows. After the lapse of years they cannot trace their mistresses. Sometimes we are able to do so; but, if not, we test them, and it is in their own power to earn a character. In several instances we have been able to find good places, where the women are earning £20 and £22 of wages annually.

What has been written adverse to the work cannot but hurt it for a time, for many have not seen the disclaimers. We trust, therefore, that Christian friends will not allow us to suffer, but will send us special help in a time of need. £500 is wanted to meet present claims. We cordially invite friends to come and see the work for themselves.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 30.—JUDE.

The Faith once Delivered to the Saints (1-4).—Called, beloved, and kept—such is the threefold designation of God's saints, and to them there is a threefold benediction of mercy, peace, and love. Let us put in our claim for these. (3) Salvation is common to all men, as air, water, food, but it needs an individual appropriation by faith. (4) Note that phrase of the R.V., "the only Master." There is only one Being who is worthy of receiving the homage of the soul. The ultimate test of his followers is purity and holiness of life.

Examples for our Warning (5-16).—In all God's past dealings there has been a clear discrimination between the true and the false. Of Israel many perished in the wilderness; of the angels, some were reprobate, and await their doom; of the old world, Sodom and her sister cities were overwhelmed. (8) The characteristics, therefore, of the false teachers needed careful noting, lest, through following them, these converts should be involved in their doom. Sensuality, railing words, the love of filthy lucre—these are their marks; and their judgment, as even Enoch foretold, is sure.

The Believer's Attitude in Dark and Difficult Times (17-25).—We must bear in mind the sacred teachings of Scripture, to warn and guide us. We must keep ourselves in the stream of God's love, which can only be achieved by the careful upbuilding in faith, the perpetual prayer, the expectant outlook here referred to. We must also do our utmost to rescue souls as brands from the burning. (24) Amid all the perils and difficulties of the Christian life we may be kept. There is keeping power in Jesus for the weakest and most tempted; not only kept from falling, but from stumbling. Meditate often on the exceeding joy with which you will be received at last into the presence of God, and let that animate and inspire as the night grows towards dawn.

MONDAY, JULY 1.—REV. I.

The Revelation of Jesus Christ (1-3).—In his last words to his Church, He lifts the veil for a moment, that we may understand something of the mystery of iniquity and its ultimate overthrow by light and love. God the Father gave this to Jesus in his representative capacity as the Head of his Church, He to his angel, the angel to John, and John to his fellow-servants. There is an especial blessing attached to those that read, hear, and keep these words.

Benedictions and Doxologies (4-7).—The Triune God dispenses grace and peace. The Father in his dateless existence, the Spirit in his sevenfold gifts, and the Saviour, who is placed last, that the sacred writer may further dilate on his first advent as the Saviour, and on his second as the Messiah. Ask thyself, reader, if thou hast been loosed from thy sins through his blood? (R.V.)

The Portraiture of Christ (8-20).—There must be tribulation before there can be the kingdom, and the kingdom is won by suffering patience. All these are in Jesus for us. (10) Before each series of seven, we have an introductory vision. This, which precedes the seven letters to the Churches, portrays the characteristic features of Christ that are to serve as the basis for the admonitions and instructions which follow. (13) Amid the candlesticks, because He is with us to the end of the age. They need snuffing, trimming, supplying with oil. His dress combines the king and the priest. (14) All emblems of purity. (17) He does not hesitate to appropriate the words which the Almighty had uttered in the eighth verse. It is not robbery for Him to be equal with God. Yet how tenderly He lays his hand on his prostrate disciple. It was as though He said, "All that I was when I was dying on the cross, I am still. The love that filled my heart then fills it still. Write as beneath the direct impulse of that love which can never grow old."

TUESDAY, JULY 2.—REV. II.

Ephesus (1-7).—He knows us intimately, but loves us better than He knows. How gladly He enumerates all that can be said in our favour. But all our attainments and virtues are cancelled, in his judgment, by waning love. And whatever else we possess—of orthodoxy, and activity, and patience, it will not avail to ward off from us the inevitable removal of our candlestick. (6) The Nicolaitans, who took their name probably from their leader, were perhaps a sect which countenanced lascivious practices under the cover of Christianity. (7) Those that love will know life in its richest manifestations.

Smyrna (8-11).—Throughout this epistle there is not one word of rebuke. In this it stands alone. There must be inevitable persecution. It could not be otherwise in such a world. Satan would do his best to destroy the infant Church. Notice how distinctly persecution is attributed to his malign agency. But his power is limited—ten days. (10) Faithful, that is all He asks. To stand at our post, like the sentry at the gates of Pompeii, even to death. In this case also, death would be the stepping-stone to life. Life is the crown of those who fear not death.

Pergamos (12-17).—What a reward for this obscure martyr, of whom no historian takes note, but whom the Master designates as "my faithful one." Such recognition might well nerve the most timid to heroism. (14) It would appear that Balaam sought to compass the overthrow of Israel, by leading them into impurity, and so breaking the connection between God's people and Himself. (17) These are Jewish symbols, borrowed from the Tabernacle. The white stone probably refers to the Urim and Thummim, on which the holy characters were engraved. Each believer may have the stone of judgment.

Thyatira (18-29).—In Jezebel the influence of the world is personified. Let us watch and pray against the fascinations of Madame Bubble. Those that overcome reign with Christ. The imagery of the reward is borrowed from the days of the Kings.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3.—REV. III.

Sardis (1-6).—Let us not gauge our true position by the favourable name given by our neighbours and friends. They may be grievously deceived. However bad our Sardis may be, it is possible to keep our garments clean; and those who love purity so ardently here shall be pure for ever yonder.

Philadelphia (7-13).—Doors of opportunity and service are opened by Christ for those whose habit is to close the door of the closet in private fellowship, and who have given good proof of their undeviating attachment to his cause. (10) Notice the interchange of these words, "Thou hast kept," "I will keep." It reminds of 2 Tim. i. 12-14. (12) A sculptured column, bearing the sacred name of God, such is the conception of the steadfastness, beauty, and dedication to holy purposes, which shall fall to the lot of those who overcome in the great fight against the evil of the world.

Laodicea (14-22).—Better cold than lukewarm. The lukewarm was boiling once, and is now cooling. Where there is least wool, there is most cry. "Thou sayest." Whenever people begin to talk of their attainments, beware of them. (18) Wealth, purity, and vision are all in Christ for each of us. We try by being willing to take. (20) Jesus is outside the door, as a travelling merchant-man, He brings thee priceless gifts. He knocks by providence, by the pleadings of his Spirit, and by the voices of his servants. Admit Him, not anxious about providing Him with fit entertainment; He brings his own. Thou shalt sup with Him. Thus thou shalt not fear the dark night.

THURSDAY, JULY 4.—REV. IV.

The Door Opened in Heaven (1-11).—Such doors are ever opening around us, but our eyes are holden. Such voices are constantly urging us to come up into the mount of vision, but we are too enamoured with the valley and plain. (3) God's nature is as light when it shines on earth's richest jewels, which are the product of fire. Probably the nature of God shines more resplendently in and through his association with a world of trial and sorrow. (4) These represent the Church—one half of its Jewish constituents, the other of its Gentile. (5) The Holy Spirit is here in his chosen symbol of fire. (6) The sea of God's Providence, hushed to rest, and mirroring the Divine glory. The living creatures combine in their composite appearance the sentient universe. (8) Heaven's deepest conception of God is his holiness: next to that his dateless eternity. (10) Crowns for the feet of God! What is highest in man is only fit to be cast at His feet. (11) This is the song of creation. All things were brought into being by the direct fiat of the Creator. His will, and choice, and purpose, are the origin and law of all. Therefore, it becomes all things living to adore Him for having graciously permitted them to share in his only blessed life. If thou canst not join that song, ask whether thou art following out his purpose and will in thy creation.

FRIDAY, JULY 5.—REV. V.

The Lamb in the Midst of the Throne (1-7).—This book is probably the roll of Divine decree. It is full of writing, because God's purposes are complete: sealed, because its contents are hidden from the knowledge of the creature till God sees fit to unfold them. Your life, reader, is a sealed scroll, but be thankful that it is in the hands of the Lamb of God. (5) We look for a Lion and behold a Lamb; for One who has prevailed, and behold One who had been slain; for the root of David, and behold his descendant. These anomalies are apparent, not real, and they can only be realised in the unique nature of the Son of God. How blessed it is to know that, amid the thunders, voices, and glory of the throne, there is One who represents us, who loves us infinitely, and who ever lives to make intercession for us!

Heavenly Worship (8-14).—As they had joined in the song of Creation, so here of Redemption. Praise and prayer commingle even there, but our prayers are mingled in the sweet fragrance of our Saviour's merit. It is marvellous that the prayers of some bedridden saint should make heaven more fragrant. (9) The glory of Jesus in the esteem of the heavenly hosts, rests on his agony and death. "Worthy...for Thou wast slain." Note the stress perpetually laid on the blood as purchasing us for God. Our consecration is only a discovering and assuming of our correct position. (11) The heavenly worship is very contagious. It begins with the four living creatures, and spreads till the entire universe is ringing with the praises of Jesus. And whether from the lips of angels or of saints, the work of Calvary is the absorbing theme.

SATURDAY, JULY 6.—REV. VI.

The Opening of the Six Seals (1-8).—Each seal contains in symbol the characteristic feature of its age. The white horse, peace; the red, war; the black, famine; the pale or livid, pestilence; the fifth seal tells of persecution and martyrdom; the sixth of convulsion and terror. The cry of the first four is "Come." Not "Come and see," as in A.V., but simply "Come" as in R.V. This appeal is probably addressed to the Lord, urging Him to hasten his advent. For Him the whole creation of the Church groans and waits. Why tarry his chariot-wheels so long in coming? Each terrible visitation of anguish is another appeal.

The Martyrs (9-11).—The reward of the martyr is purity and rest. In white robes they worship; in peace they await the accomplishment of the Divine purpose. They appeal to Christ as Master (R.V.), they anticipate his action as Judge. Those who suffer in any way for God may be included in that great army of martyrs, which embraces some of the noblest that ever breathed.

The Anguish of the World (12-17).—This is hardly the great judgment, but one of those anticipations of it which have more than once visited humanity. But if at such times men have been seized with so great terror, what will be their fear when the Angel-herald bids them come to judgment! Wouldst thou fly from God, fly to Him, and shelter in the wounds of Christ from the storms of Time and Eternity.

WALWORTH.—The crèche recently opened in East-lane, Walworth, is extensively patronised; so so much so that an enlargement of premises is already required. Such an institution has been long needed in this part of London, where the "woman bread winner" predominates. The local ministers and others wish the superintendent, Mrs. F. Kinghorne, success in her undertaking.

THE CRIMINAL STATISTICS for 1893 are a damper. We are not improving anything like so fast as we thought. No doubt there has been a diminution of the prison population, but it is due to a much greater extent to the greater leniency in inflicting punishment than to any widespread improvement on the part of the criminal classes. The fact appears to be that while the total of the prison population is rapidly diminishing, the number of crimes reported to the police has actually increased. There are fewer prisoners in prison because, for one thing, they are detained for a shorter time. Punishment is now more certain and quicker, but less severe. The report gives no satisfactory opinion as to whether this method is more successful than the old. Its summary is this:—"On the whole, therefore, there is good ground to think the decrease in crime, though not so great as it has been often represented, though by no means comparable for instance to the decrease in prison population, is nevertheless real and substantial."

JULY 7.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.—Exod. xx. 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Luke x. 27.

THE giving of the Law took place about fifty days after the Exodus from Egypt. That event occurred on the fifteenth day of the first month, this at the beginning of the third month (xix. 1). The scene is described as the desert of Sinai (xix. 1, 2). The plain in which the people were encamped is supposed to have been Er Rahah, before Mount Sinai, which is probably the peak Ras-Safsâfeh of Jebel Mousa.

The brief preface (1, 2) presents motives for obedience. These are found, first, in the fact that God gives the Law; second, in the pecular relationship He bears to the people ("thy God"); and third, in the great work He had wrought for them. In the light of New Testament teaching all these acquire new meaning. The typical and imperfect redemption of the Old Testament was in order to obedience. The more perfect redemption revealed in the New Testament has the same object. We are set free in order to serve.

The Golden Text suggests the division of the Law into two tables. "The first relates to piety—our duty to God; the second to equity—our duty to man."—Leighton. The first table includes four commandments; the second, the remaining six. The order in which the two tables occur ought not to be overlooked. Righteousness among men is the outcome of piety to God. He who fails to give God his right place is not likely to fulfil his obligations to men.

The first commandment concerns the object of worship, that it must be God alone. When a boy was asked how he knew that there were not more gods than one, he answered, "Because there is no room for more." To attempt to add another is to imply that He is not sufficient for all the needs of our being. This Law is broken when anything—however little or innocent in itself—is allowed to take the place of God in our heart.

The second concerns the manner of our worship. The New Testament states it in different language (John iv. 24). It forbids the making of any image to help devotion. Every material object placed between the soul and God destroys the spirituality of the worship, and becomes idolatry. Even the brazen serpent became a snare to the Israelites, and needed to be destroyed (2 Kings xviii. 4).

The third forbids the sin of perjury, of profane swearing, of the thoughtless use of the name of God, and of all trifling with sacred things. There is no sin more common than profanity, and none more senseless. It has been described as "the tribute which the servants of Satan pay to their master." Do not some of our seemingly pious expressions, carelessly spoken, violate this command?

The manner in which the fourth is introduced reminds us that the Sabbath was not a Jewish institution. It goes back to the time of man's creation (Gen. ii. 2, 3). It requires that one day in seven be not only a day of rest, but a day of worship. It is the birthright of every man. Christ did not abrogate it, but only removed the rubbish that had been added to it. Does it not require that we keep the Sabbath in such a manner as not to destroy the Sabbath for others?

The fifth is by some included in the first table of the Law, because parents are regarded as representatives of God's authority. To honour them is one way of learning to obey Him. Note the promise attached to this commandment (Eph. vi. 2.) Instances of obedience to this are numerous. "I had rather," said Cowper, referring to his mother's picture, "possess that picture than the richest jewel in the British Crown; for I love her with an affection that her death fifty-two years since has not the least abated."

The sixth reminds us of the sacredness of life. Its best and most searching exposition is found in Matt. v. 21, 22; as the best interpretation of the seventh is in Matt. v. 27, 28. How much of modern pleasure is condemned by such a command!

The eighth, amongst many other applications, touches the modern passion for gambling, condemns the servant who not only steals his master's property, but wastes his master's time, and the master who exacts more than is just.

The ninth guards the reputation of our neighbours, and forbids all forms of slander and evil speaking, and all attempts to impute immoral motives to others.

The tenth deals with a sin of the heart. It touches the root of all sin, which is born of wrong desire. This was the sin by which Paul was condemned (Rom vii. 7). And though it comes last it takes us back to the first, for covetousness is declared to be idolatry (Col. iii. 5.)

TRUE COURAGE.

LET me tell you a story called "True Courage."

One winter, shortly after midnight, two men might have been seen making their way towards the east part of the town of L——. Few words passed between them, until Tim Wilson exclaimed, "I hate this business, and hope this night will see the last of it." Ralph Mason, more hardened in wickedness than his companion, laughed coarsely at Tim's scruples, and began to talk boastfully of their expected plunder. "I haven't watched that little back window for nothing, Tim Wilson. Why should the light burn night after night until long past midnight, and then go out all of a sudden, as if the inmate had been scared, if there was not something stored away? I'm seldom cheated, and it's my opinion that there's a goodly number of 'yellow-boys' inside that little room, and, what's more, it's our business to find them. So keep up your heart, and you'll have a good breakfast for once in your life." Tim's only answer was a deep-drawn sigh that sounded more like a groan.

Soon they reached a large block of houses standing by itself. Close to this was a pretty Wesleyan chapel, surrounded by iron railings. Jumping this railing and also a low adjoining wall, they were upon the scene of action. This light in the houses on the ground-floor was still burning, so the two thieves waited in silence until it was extinguished by the unsuspecting inmate, when Ralph whispered, "Now's your chance; be a man for once in your life, I'll wait here for your signal to follow." With fear and trembling poor Tim quietly proceeded to obey, and was soon within the room in which the supposed treasure was concealed. A bright fire burned in the tiny fireplace, and on looking behind Tim was dismayed at seeing a bed in the farther corner from which a pair of large brown eyes were gazing. Never was he so embarrassed, for he had not intended to use violence, and yet what else must he do now?

The boy, for such he proved to be, was the first to break the silence. Trembling with suppressed emotion, he strove to steady his voice, and asked kindly, "What brings you here at this hour? Surely you do not intend to rob us poor folks!" "Poor or not poor, I want the contents of the little tin box you have here. It's strange to me that some folks have too much money when others have too little," said Tim, sullenly. "Come now, and without more ado, tell me where to find the money; and I'll promise you not to use this," producing, as he spoke, a large pistol.

Charlie Wood shivered at the sight of it; but even as the thought of his danger occurred to him the words "The Lord is thy Keeper" flashed across his mind. This thought gave him fresh courage, and once more he spoke to his unwelcome intruder, saying, "Perhaps you don't know that I am ill. Mother has just left me for the night, and, being deaf, has not heard you enter. We are not rich as you suppose; the money we have in the house belongs to the landlord, who calls to-morrow. I'm sure you do not wish to rob the widow and the fatherless. But I have a florin here that a lady gave me yesterday to get some beef-tea with. You may have it, for it is all the money we can give you." Tim Wilson looked the lad full in the face, and exclaimed angrily, "Why aren't you frightened at me? Don't you know there's another man fiercer than I am waiting outside for my signal to enter?" "I have no reason to be afraid," replied Charlie, calmly, "because I know neither you nor your companion are so fierce as lions, and the same God who delivered Daniel from their power will preserve me from harm."

This answer quite overcame Tim Wilson, and brought back tender memories. Approaching Charlie's bed-side, he took him by the hand, and in a strangely altered voice asked his forgiveness for the wrong he has purposed doing, adding "Some day we may meet again." He would have disappeared, but Charlie detained him until he had accepted his florin. "Drink that glass of milk and put these biscuits into your pocket. Though I've no appetite mother always leaves something beside me, but I'm sure you require food far more than I do." Tim did as the brave boy requested him, and thereafter left the room as quietly as he had entered.

When Ralph Mason became aware of the result of Tim's encounter with the boy, his anger knew no bounds; and while accepting more than his share of the scanty spoil, he denounced Tim for being one of the lowest, meanest cowards in creation. From that night he and Tim Wilson split partnership. Ralph justly earned the title of "jail-bird"; but Tim soon found work, and now lives an honest, industrious life. He is ever grateful to God, who on that memorable night led him to see the error of his ways through the faith and courage of Charlie Wood.

I'm sure you will all agree with me in saying that Charlie acted that night like a brave hero; but, remember, he was enabled to do so because, like Daniel of old, "he believed in his God."

GIPSY SMITH AT NORWOOD.

NOT for many years has the neighbourhood of West Norwood been so stirred as during the mission held by Gipsy Smith from June 16 to 23 in Chatsworth-road Chapel. Much earnest prayer and preparation had been made, and great expectations were entertained, but the blessing has been exceedingly abundant above all that was asked or thought. An earnest prayer meeting on the Saturday ushered in the mission, and three large congregations assembled on Sunday, the evening one nearly filling the building. It was a beautiful sight in the afternoon to see the area of the chapel filled with about six hundred children and young people. Each week night from Monday to Thursday about five hundred persons assembled; and on Friday, when the evangelist gave a chapter from his life story, quite one thousand were present.

Sunday last, the closing day, was indeed a blessed climax. The chapel was filled three times, and in the evening was packed, many being unable to get in. The power of God was manifest in the solemn impression evidently produced, and in the numbers that went into the inquiry-room. During the eight days of the mission about 160 inquirers were spoken with, and most of these gave evidence of true heartfelt decision to trust and serve the Saviour. Christians of other denominations were present in large numbers, sympathising, rejoicing, and assisting, and thus demonstrating the fact of Christian unity. The evangelist was in close touch with the people throughout, and they with him. His eloquent and impressive discourses, delivered with a fiery zeal, came with tremendous force not only upon the unconverted but upon believers too, and many of these have been roused to more devotion and earnestness. Long, too, will linger in the memory and heart the songs so impressively sung by our gipsy friend. The time was all too short, and many wished the services might be continued. This, however, could not be, but we anticipate that the results of the mission will be felt for a long time to come, and indeed that they will run on unceasingly. Words cannot describe the scenes of penitence and contrition on the one hand, and the deep spiritual joy manifested in the countenances of hundreds. To God be all the glory, and the praise of many thankful hearts!

J. L. STANLEY.

THE KINGSDOWN ORPHANAGE celebrates its majority in July. During the twenty-one years 509 orphan children have been cared for; many of them placed out in the world and enabled to help themselves. Among these were several afflicted orphans received at the Home in Broadstairs, where special provision is made for cases of this kind which are not eligible for any other orphanage. The trustees invite their friends to join them in celebrating this coming of age. A devotional meeting will be held on Monday, July 1, at 4 p.m., at the Orphanage, Pemberton-road, Holloway, N., president, Rev. W. H. Barlow, D.D. There will be a garden party, by kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Rackstraw, at Copley Dene, Cholmeley Park, Highgate, N., from 4 to 7 p.m., on Saturday, July 6.

Women and Temperance.

GREAT INTERNATIONAL MEETINGS.

The meetings of last week in connection with the B.W.T.A. and the W.W.C.T.U. were most memorable, and cannot fail to give a strong stimulus to the cause of temperance reform.

THE COUNCIL MEETINGS

of the B.W.T.A., held in the City Temple on the Monday and Thursday, were largely attended, and much practical work was accomplished in addition to the necessary routine business. Lady Henry Somerset was re-elected president, amid great enthusiasm; she has endeared herself in a very remarkable degree to her temperance sisters, not only by her able advocacy of the cause, but by her self-sacrificing devotion and generosity in the furtherance of it. Her presidential address touched on a wide variety of points, but all were lighted up by grace of speech and by overflowing zeal for the upraising of men and women to a richer and nobler life. In closing she fervently prayed that the Christian women of the world might be one in heart and purpose, in high resolve and holy hope, in undaunted courage and undying zeal in the combat for protected homes, for the weak against the strong, for the right against the wrong, and for that concept of Christianity which recognised our duties alike to the bodies and the souls of men and women.

Reports were submitted by the superintendents of the various branches of work, embracing such subjects as evangelism, social purity, Bible lessons, scientific temperance instruction, Brewster Sessions, the Inebriates' Home, etc. With regard to the last, it was stated that the New Farm House in Surrey would probably be opened next month; new departments were formed, including anti-gambling, prison, and police-court work. During the two days of council resolutions were submitted and heartily passed bearing on anti-lynching, criminal law amendment, local veto, Sunday-closing, grocers' licences, police matrons, the Armenian massacres, public amusements, and other related topics. In the course of the council meetings many of the more prominent visitors from America and other lands were introduced and warmly welcomed to the deliberations.

The great public meeting of the B.W.T.A. was on Tuesday evening, when the Queen's Hall was crowded with a brilliant and enthusiastic assemblage. Lady Henry Somerset being much fatigued by the strain of the preceding days, her place in the chair was ably filled by Mrs. Ormiston Chant. She paid a high and much-applauded tribute to the president for the services she had rendered to the cause. Rousing addresses followed from Mrs. Clara Hoffmann, of New York, as to the movement in the States; by Miss Agnes Weston, who described the progress of temperance in the Royal Navy; by Miss Willard, who introduced Mrs. Barker, of Dakota, a lady who has done a great work in that Western State; and by Miss Lilian Phelps, of Canada, who, in a speech of great ability, mingled a historical review of bygone centuries with some impressions gathered during her stay in London. Resolutions were passed in favour of the Local Veto, and a message of condolence and thanks was sent to Lady Henry. Madame Sterling delighted everybody by her expressive and heartfelt song, and the White Ribbon choir contributed to the enjoyment of a wonderfully stimulating evening.

THE W.W.C.T.U.

celebrated its third biennial convention by meetings in Queen's Hall on Wednesday and Thursday, when the proceedings were marked by the same lively interest and zeal that characterised the British meetings. Miss Frances Willard gave her presidential address at the opening session on Wednesday, and a singularly comprehensive and able utterance it was. The topics touched upon were almost legion. The poverty and labour problems; the growing enfranchisement of women; the White Ribbon movement; the pros and cons of prohibition; work of purity in the home and in society; the Armenian and opium questions; the "colour line"; prison reform; the polyglot petition, and many other burning questions were taken up and illuminated by the genius of the speaker, while personal references to fellow workers of both sexes in many lands added to the weight and worth of survey of the year's work, which ought to receive leisured and careful study in Christian homes. We give one short extract from the opening pages of the address, which is all our space will allow:—"Prayer was the foundation of the Women's Temperance Crusade; it was God's Pentecost in the homes of the people. Not more money, but more love, was needed to promote the common joy of all. It was folly to ignore the effects of poverty on evil habits. Only our ignorance of the condition of the industrial classes could account for neglect of the fact that the relentless competition of machinery was grinding into dust by a heavier heel than old-time tyrannies great masses of our population. Poverty was the chief procuring cause of the brutal drinking habits with which whole areas of population were distempered throughout the English-speaking world. Twenty-one years of study and observation had convinced her that poverty was a prime cause of intemperance, and that misery was the mother and hereditary appetite the father of the drink hallucination. If wage-earners and women did but know their power, if they realised that the destinies of the world are absolutely in their hands, and that by combined effort they could soon become an army, drilled and disciplined, they would soon discover a sense of safety and the possibility of victory. Christianity first made the home possible, and had supplied to the world those conditions which rendered organisation the supreme duty of the world's mothers and sisters, daughters and wives, if we were to have 'sweeter manners, purer laws.'"

Many matters of great interest came before the Conference, and the voices were heard of numerous leaders in the cause. One very pathetic item in the programme was the memorial service for friends who had been "promoted" to the higher sphere of service during the year. Among those called away were Mrs. Woodbridge, of Ohio; Mrs. Williams, of Montreal; Prebendary Grier; Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, and Mr. N. Stearns, of New York. Miss Weston again reported on the naval work; Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., was heartily thanked for his courageous action on the Opium Commission; the work in Denmark and South Africa was described; fraternal delegates from kindred societies in different parts of Europe, Asia, Africa, and the islands of the sea were welcomed; and a large number of brief speeches were made, chiefly by ladies, but also by well-known gentlemen interested in the spread of total abstinence principles. Madame Sterling's voice, of course, was heard, and some of the blind students from Norwood charmed the audience on Wednesday evening.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress gave a reception at the Mansion House on Thursday afternoon to the foreign delegates; it was largely attended and proved to be an interesting occasion.

THE ALBERT HALL MEETING, on Thursday evening was a fitting crown to the series. It focussed and gave striking expression to the enthusiasm which had been generated during the preceding days. The splendid auditorium was packed in every corner with the largest and most picturesque assembly we have ever seen. Over 12,000 tickets were distributed within its walls. It was a triumph of organisation, and the spectacle was one which must linger long in the memories of all who were present. The great Polyglot Petition by women against the drink traffic, a portion of which was festooned all round the façade of the balcony and box sections of the hall, was made up of thirteen immense rolls, the paper sheets being pasted on linen and measuring several miles in length. It contains over 7,000,000 signatures, which have been adhibited in fifty different languages and in all the important countries of the world. The idea was mooted by Miss Willard some years ago, and was part of the work of Mrs. Leavitt, the first round-the-world missionary of the W.W.C.T.U. It contains some half a million English names.

At the hour of opening the proceedings the leaders of the movement marched in procession to the platform, and were succeeded in due order by delegations from some twenty-five temperance organisations. Following these were groups of representatives in costume of thirty of the principal nationalities of the world, bearing the flags of their respective countries. The picture, as they filed along to different positions on the orchestra, was a particularly imposing one, and illustrated in a very effective way the œcumenical aspect of the temperance movement.

The programme was long, varied, and full of interest. After all had joined in singing the 100th Psalm and in repeating the Lord's prayer, an address of welcome to the foreign friends was given by Lady Henry Somerset, the president of the evening. Her ladyship's voice rang out clearly and musically as she expatiated in glowing terms on the international and world-wide nature of this temperance crusade among women. She eloquently emphasised the fact that in the coming better time man and woman will march side by side in the endeavour to better humanity, having one Master, even Christ. The cause is destined to be victorious because it is the cause of God Himself.

Madame Sterling, with her wonderful voice, filled the great hall with waves of pathetic song. Then Miss Weston once more spoke of temperance triumphs in the Royal Navy, and presented medals to some naval non-commissioned officers for length of testimony as total abstainers. Having to leave early, Canon Wilberforce spoke next. In earnest and well-rounded periods, he told of the growing power of holy women in the great fight for the purity and happiness of the home. From a heart that had often during the past twenty years been well nigh broken with the misery of the race, he welcomed the lady delegates from afar, and bade them God-speed. A resolution expressive of thanks to the Government for introducing the Local Veto Bill was moved by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, seconded by Mr. J. H. Raper, and enthusiastically voted. Miss Willard ably and wittily responded to the welcome extended to the friends from abroad. Referring to a song that had been sung, she said that they had met that night to declare that "Bung shall go." Then the venerable Mother Stewart was introduced by the president; but all that her feelings would permit her to utter were the words, "The Lord be magnified; Hallelujah!"

Next there came extremely eloquent and practical utterances from some of the lady visitors. One of the most gifted of these certainly is Mrs. Hoffman, of New York, who almost electrified the meeting with her powerful words of appeal. She was specially urgent in her invitation to the men of England and of America to put down the cursed traffics in alcohol, opium, and narcotics, so as to give the little ones a chance. If the men will not do it, then in God's name let them abdicate in favour of the women, who will do it. She said that if this was the first women's meeting ever held in the Albert Hall it would not be the last, for they were coming back again in still stronger force. But she was outdone by the next speaker, Mrs. Rounds, of New York, who confessed they were feeling so much at home in England she was not sure they would leave it. The torrent of eloquence flowed on in brief speeches from Miss Phelps, of Canada; Miss Hattie Brown, of Ohio; Miss Yates, of Maine; Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi; and Mrs. Burt, of New York.

As last year, the most effective and pathetic item in the whole evening's programme was the song of the slum children from Somers Town, "There's a shadow on the home," and the response of a band of White Ribbon children, "We are coming to the rescue." These last marched down the hall, and wound a cordon of white ribbon round the group of poor children, amid the resounding and approving plaudits of the vast audience. Resolutions were passed endorsing the polyglot petition, and requesting that it be presented to Her Majesty's Government. Lady Battersea and Lady Harcourt, who were present, sent up to the president a message of greeting and good cheer. Lady Henry Somerset heartily thanked all who had contributed to the success of the great demonstration, and Dr. Newman Hall, having read some verses composed by himself for the occasion, dismissed the assembly with the Benediction.

A large body of the delegates paid a visit to the Priory, Reigate, on Friday afternoon, by the invitation of Lady Henry Somerset, and much enjoyed her generous hospitality. The "final farewell" was taken at a crowded gathering in Exeter Hall on Sunday afternoon, when many good-bye words of heartfelt warmth were spoken. Miss Willard, who presided, intimated that after the return of the party in charge of the polyglot petition from their visits to the northern capitals a meeting would take place in the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

"Mother" Stewart:

ORGANISER OF THE "WHISKY WAR."

One of the most notable figures in the international conclave of Christian-temperance women that met in London last week was the octogenarian lady familiarly known as "Mother Stewart." It was a courageous bit of business on her part to cross the ocean at her advanced age, but during a long life of public service for the uplifting of humanity, she has always acted on the late Dr. Gordon's advice, "Never say 'No' to God." So she obeyed the call to visit our shores for the third time, and among the crowd of enthusiasts that filled the City Temple and the Queen's Hall during recent days, none were more youthful in spirit or more enthusiastic than she. To her other virtues she adds a great esteem for the power and influence of the Press, and when a representative of The Christian craved audience of her at the Queen's Hall one afternoon last week, she consented with a ready courtesy that was both cheering and charming. The following outline of her life's work is condensed from the story as it came warm from her heart and lips.

She was born in the State of Ohio in 1816, so that she is now in her eightieth year. Though American born, she is of Scottish descent, having come of the Guthrie clan. Her branch of the family went over with Cromwell to Londonderry, and thence found their way to the new western world. In the springtime of her days she was strangely led of the Lord into ways and experiences that prepared her for the work that awaited her. She was strongly impressed early in her Christian career that she had a call to the ministry of the Methodist Church, but timidity prevented her from making it known. Later on she accepted the public work that came to her, as a compensation from God Himself for the blighting of her early hopes. She adopted the teaching profession, and some of those who studied under her have recently publicly testified their remembrance of the Temperance instruction received from her more than fifty years ago.

In 1858 she joined the Good Templars, and began to give lectures on the Temperance question. Then came the Civil War, which was such a dark and fearful experience to the nation. For four years she worked in connection with the campaign, chiefly raising supplies, while her husband and two sons were at the front. Her poor health prevented her from being a nurse, but towards the close of the war she visited the northern "boys" stationed in Tennessee. They called her "Mother," and that is how she gained the affectionate appellation that has clung to her ever since. She visited the hospitals, and followed many a poor fellow to his last resting place in the cemetery. When the war closed, it was found that many of these young civilian soldiers had acquired the liquor habit through receiving the daily ration of spirit. She had been ardent in the temperance cause before, but when she found so many of the "dear boys" broken down through the drink she doubled her efforts. About that time her home was moved from Athens, Ohio, to Springfield in the same State, and there she has resided since. She continued her public lectures on the Temperance reform, as well as her private efforts.

At this juncture an incident happened which had a marked influence on her after career. A woman in the city was prosecuting a publican for supplying drink to her husband. The young prosecuting attorney, knowing Mother Stewart's zeal in the cause, induced her, after some demur, to consent to make the appeal to the jury; such a thing was permissible in the inferior court. The Justice trying the case was an old Methodist friend of her own, and that gave her courage. Having previously mastered the law of the case, and noted the strongest points in the defence, she began her appeal, and had not spoken five minutes before she knew that the jury were favourable; and the verdict was against the publican.

These facts got noised abroad, far and near, so that her services were in great request, to give counsel or help in similar cases. Meantime, she was doing all she could to wake up the Christian women of her city and State to cope with the increasing evils of the liquor curse. Mass meetings were arranged, and other steps taken to arouse public opinion. Towards the close of 1873 Mrs. Stewart succeeded, by assuming a clever disguise, in personally securing evidence in one case of the flagrant breach of the law against selling liquor on Sunday. The offending publican was heavily fined. While the agitation was in full swing, a well-known Temperance advocate, Dr. Dio Lewis, of New York, visited Ohio. He had seen Christian women in his own State succeed in closing up saloons by visiting them, and praying and speaking with the people who frequented them. Coming to Ohio he first roused the Christian women of Hillsboro' to commence similar action. Then he visited other places, Springfield among the rest. The movement, once begun, spread over the State like prairie fires. Mother Stewart's services as an organizer were in requisition far and near, and she travelled almost night and day in her unwearied endeavour to fan the flame of action against the destructive saloon.

It was in some respects as remarkable a movement as the world has ever known. It was evidently of the Lord, and was maintained simply by prayer and consecration on the part of Christian women. The saloon-keepers recognised the power of the crusade, and in many cases were overwhelmed by it. They would willingly confess the iniquities of the trade. In the State of Ohio alone some two thousand saloons were closed as the outcome of the Whisky War. Nothing could exceed the solemn power of these processions of Christian women as they entered the drinking places, knelt on the dirty floors, and prayed and sang. Strong men were moved to tears at the sight. Large numbers signed the pledge, and were rescued from the curse of the liquor habit.

In the State of Cincinnati, some Christian women crusaders were imprisoned by the authorities. Mother Stewart had visited Pittsburg, Pa., and organised a band of a thousand women there. Some of these were put in prison by order of the Mayor. Another brave sister in the city declared that she was going out into the streets on the same errand, whatever the consequences might be. Others joined her. They marched past the jail where their sisters were shut up, singing:—

All hail the power of Jesu's name.

Those in the jail heard it and took up the strain. As one expressed it, "he heard the doxology sung half a mile long." The sympathising men flocked into the streets, and if the authorities had not released the imprisoned women, the prison-house would have been torn down.

As the movement progressed, local, town, district, and State organisations were formed. Out of these grew the Women's Christian Temperance Union, which is such a power for good in both hemispheres to-day. Impressed by the idea that the help of all the Christian women in the world would be needed in this holy war, Mother Stewart crossed the Atlantic alone, about twenty years ago, to wake up her British sisters. The outcome of her visit to this land, where she was warmly received, was the founding of the B.W.T.A. Some four years ago she again came to our shores as a delegate to the Good Templar gatherings in Edinburgh. Of late years, however, her health has been much impaired, and she has been unable for active public work. Last winter she was very ill, and thought that the time of her departure had come. She gladly hailed the prospect of being with her Lord, under whose banner she had fought so long, but in his gracious providence He raised her up again. The partner of her life was taken from her last January. Now, while she is ready to obey the Master's summons whenever it comes, she is content to remain, glad if she can help "to lift one grain from the mountain of the world's misery, and cast it into the sea of oblivion." Her present visit and her warm-hearted speech will be a fragrant memory for all her fellow workers; and an inspiration to her younger sisters, so many of whom she rejoices to see coming forward that they may carry on the movement for Temperance reform to which she has devoted her life.

WORK AT ASCOT RACES.

For the most part the literature distributed was well received, and in not a few cases by the aristocratic members of the great throng. We had staunch allies in our Salvation Army friends, under Major Cooke, from Oxford, and a host in "Bob Johnson" with his banjo and songs. This "ex-minstrel" was brought to Christ in the mission tent, under Mr. Nix's auspices, at Epsom, in 1893. With him, on Monday evening, I had the privilege of standing to testify to a crowd of companions of his former days, of the wonderful grace of God. Many a hard heart have I seen touched, and tears of genuine feeling flow during the past week through his testimony. We had five meetings on Sunday (16th) in various places, notwithstanding being ordered off the Heath in the afternoon. The opposition upon the race days was not very rough. There were some professed conversions to Christ, and many were the arrows of conviction flying home.

I am glad to say that the prosecution of a gang of roadside gamblers, to which reference was made in your paper last year, has proved successful. Nearly all the expenses for this year have been met. As visitor to the Sunday-schools of East Berks, I can testify to the great harm that is done to the moral welfare of our lovely neighbourhood by this annual carnival.

The Mildmay Conference.

JUNE 25-27.

The thirty-ninth convention of Christians, gathered from under many skies, met at Mildmay Park on Tuesday morning, in the balmiest and sunniest of summer weather, and amid all the customary tokens of interest. At eleven o'clock the chairman, Lord Polwarth, invited the company to sing, as in years past, Mr. Pennefather's hymn—

Jesus, stand among us,
In thy risen power,
Let this time of worship
Be a hallowed hour.

Instead of being led to the Mercy-seat through the voice of the Vicar of Islington, as the custom has been, the chairman himself offered brief prayer, beseeching and claiming God's realised presence throughout the days of conference. Then he read from Isaiah xxv., and opened the speaking by a reference to the shadow of sanctified affliction under which the last Convention was opened, in the then recent death of Sir S. A. Blackwood. But the Lord desires to bring his children out of the valley of mourning up to the mount of joy. Who has a better right to be joyful than the believing children of God? The subject of conference is one to make our hearts glad; let us look away from ourselves and those around us, to Christ in all his fulness and beauty. We have to behold Him in the threefold aspect which has been furnished to us in the programme, as the burden of prophecy, the completion of sacrifice and priesthood, and the approaching manifestation of God's perfect King. Lord Polwarth briefly touched on these three great themes of meditation and contemplation. We need opened minds and hearts to grasp and to receive the truths set forth, so as to help us in our daily life. By beholding our Lord may we be changed into his image, and kept looking for his glorious appearing. The chairman announced that Rev. W. H. Barlow, the vicar of Islington, had been prevented by an accident from being present. In his absence Rev. D. B. Hankin led again in prayer. He entreated that the sun shining so brightly in the heavens above might prove to be a type of the Sun of Righteousness, who shall arise on his Church with healing in his beams.

The opening theme of the Conference, as already hinted, was "Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Burden and Fulfilment of the Prophetic Word." The first address was by

MR. J. G. MACVICKER.

The subject, he said, suggests two points for consideration: (1) what is the prophetic word, and (2) Christ as the fulfilment of it. A prophet is one who acts as the mouth-piece of God, whether his utterance relates to the past the present, or the future. He does not speak at his own will, or utter his own sentiments, but utters the words that God gives him. Many Scriptures, both in the Old and New Testaments, tell us that it was God who spake by the prophets, since the world began. In the early churches there were prophets as distinct from pastors, evangelists, teachers, etc. All spake by the Holy Ghost, but the prophet only revealed fresh truth from God. The whole of the Bible is prophecy, and every truth must be tested by it, for we have no prophets now. The speaker quoted in this connection 2 Tim. iii., "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." He said he very much questioned the alteration of this passage made by the revisers. He would contend that every portion of the Scripture is God-breathed, and therefore profitable. Another passage noted was 2 Peter i. 19, "We have a more sure word of prophecy. . . . knowing this first [as an axiom or first principle] that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." The word "private" is "one's own," so the passage means that no unfolding of prophecy is from men, but that holy men spake from God, being lifted up and carried on of God. The Bible, as it has been lately said, not only contains God's revelation but is a revelation with the limitations of a book. But these limitations do not imply the risk of errors or mistakes. No doubt there were many prophecies that are not here recorded, but what God deemed to be of permanent value He has here preserved to us.

Coming to the second point—Christ as the fulfilment of all prophecy—Mr. MacVicker referred to prophetic words uttered by Enoch and Noah referring to the Coming Christ. "The spirits in prison" of whom Noah speaks, he regarded to mean those souls who were confined in the ark in Noah's own time. The burden of Noah's prophetic testimony was Christ. So with the utterances of Abraham, that grand figure, solitary, portionless, and a wanderer. He rejoiced to see Christ's day, and he saw it. Moses' writings are steeped in Christ; they were all eloquent of that one theme. We may note here how prophetic even are the historic portions of the Bible. Time would fail to trace all the prophetic hints in Job, the Psalms, the Proverbs, and the prophetic writers, who spoke of Christ and the glory that should follow. The Babe of Bethlehem was the Christ of the Old Testament. Thank God a thousand times for the Gospels that have made us so familiar with the Christ. In the Acts, too, we see the Christ at God's right hand, sending down his Spirit, forming a spiritual society of Jews and Gentiles alike, every member of the body having Christ Himself living in him by the Spirit, strangers and pilgrims in the world, and waiting to be caught up to be with Him for ever. As to the Revelation, it also is steeped in Christ—the Coming One, to prepare the earth for his kingdom, and to establish that kingdom among men. The testimony of Jesus from Genesis to Revelation, of a truth, is the spirit of prophecy.

Why is all this? First, God loves his Son and is constantly setting Him forth—He cannot help Himself. Again it is that we may have a fitting object for our love and for our hope; for Christ is coming again to receive us to Himself, the heaven of the heavens. Lastly, we have this revelation of Christ that we may have an object for our imitation. God's law for us now is not merely the ten commandments; it is Christ. Beholding Him we are to be changed into his image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord.

A song of praise followed this clear and helpful exposition. Some notices were given by Capt. Morton, who announced that, in order to commemorate the jubilee of Christ Church, Barnet, the scene of Mr. Pennefather's ministry, another conference would be held there October 8-10. Requests for prayer were read, special reference being made to the suffering Stundists and Armenians. These and other burdens were laid before the throne of grace by Rev. C. A. Fox.

CANON M'CORMICK

was the second speaker, following up the same theme. He read a paper on "Fulfilled Prophecy." After some preliminary thoughts (in which the dictum of Professor Max Müller was quoted, that all the ancient sacred books except the Bible teach salvation by works), the Canon said that the subject of fulfilled prophecy is of great importance because any proof of it is proof of the truth of the Bible. He thought that no one definition of the word "prophecy" was exhaustive. Bible prophecies are more than "forecasts," so far as nations are concerned at any rate. They are detailed and historic in their scope, so that it is a thousand times more difficult not to believe in fulfilled prophecy than to believe in it. Isaiah liii. was cited as an example of this; to all who do not accept its reference to Jesus Christ, it is a perfect puzzle. As selected illustrations of fulfilled prophecy, the speaker referred to the predictions respecting Cyrus, the heathen king, and their wonderful fulfilment in history; to the city of Babylon, the capture and ruin of which were foretold and have been fulfilled to the letter; to the elect Jewish nation, whose condition to-day was long ago described with photographic fidelity; and to the predicted messenger and unique person, Jesus Christ, to whom all Scripture points, and in whom all Scriptural types are fulfilled. Some interpretations of Messianic prophecy may not be convincing, for no man is infallible. But we have Christ's own authority that Moses, the Psalms, and the prophets all pointed to Him, and that all Scripture testifies of Him.

The meeting was closed by another hymn and by prayer. Our report will be continued next week.

THE AWFUL QUESTION OF SIN.

One of the most serious signs of spiritual decadence is the absence of a true, real, and moving sense of the terribleness of sin in the preaching and literature of our day.

In attending various ministries, both in town and country, it is a rare experience to come away with a crushing, heart-humbling sense of sinfulness. Then we have books, intellectual, popular, orthodox, and helpful, but I have yet to find the book, written during the present generation, that has sent me to my knees with the tearful prayer, "God be merciful to me a sinner." May not this, in a large measure, account for the pleasure-loving and law-despising spirit which is so largely on the increase in our midst?

Controversies are held occasionally in our newspapers upon questions of vital importance to life and conduct, and the result shows in a most impressive and painful manner how weak the sense of sin is in the minds of the writers, some of them intelligent and Christian men and women. Discussions are daily held in our workshops and homes, with practically the same result, and the impression left upon the minds of the rising generation is that there is no such a thing as sin. Some actions are proper, some are improper. Some are wise, others are not so wise. Some are orthodox, some are heterodox. Some are fashionable, and others unfashionable.

When it is remembered that in these discussions, excited by the developments of lawlessness in the world around, the advocates of sobriety, and obedience, and righteousness are very generally argued down, scoffed at, and daringly defied by those who are bent on doing evil, the subject assumes an aspect of serious importance. In the course of time the home, the workshop, and the community become dominated by the sentiments of the progressive many; and those who fear God are, for the want of well-grounded and definite conceptions of sin, obliged to sink reluctantly, but helplessly, to the common level.

We are rapidly becoming a Godless nation, and it will not be long before the very last lines of demarcation between good and evil, right and wrong, will be wiped out from our midst. Is this condition of things to continue? Shall our pulpits continue to be silent, and our literature speechless upon subjects such as these? Not only the gross sins, which reveal themselves, but the subtle and insinuating forms which are petted and idolised in all classes of society—sins which defile and corrupt the rulers and the ruled, the preachers and the hearers, the teachers and the learners alike, and which, like a blight, are destroying the life, and strength, and glory of our land.

This awful question of sin must be dealt with sooner or later. If the world is indeed better—if sin has become a thing of the past, if God is well pleased with us, and if we are all en route for heaven, let us know it, let us be assured of it. But if, on the other hand, we are living in a fool's paradise, and walking under the spell of a devil-woven delusion, and going gaily to our destruction, let us know it.

A deep and humbling sense of sin is the foundation of all holiness, and the discovery and putting away of sin is a Divinely appointed necessity in every department of life. The stability of the throne demands it. The safety of our churches demands it. The purity and preservation of our homes demand it. May all the pastors, and members, and families of our churches everywhere, be endued with the power of seeing and feeling the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

REV. DAVID BARON'S TOUR.*

In Budapest there are agents of several missions, who are more especially seeking the salvation of the Jews, who number about 120,000 out of a total population of about 550,000. Besides the Mission to the Jews of the Free Church of Scotland, under the charge of Rev. Andrew Moody, there are now labouring in the same sphere Pastor Gjessing, of Norway, and Pastor Gordon, who represents the friends of Israel in Sweden.

At present perhaps the most hopeful work of the Scotch mission is the schools. Of the 400 children who are daily instructed in the Word of God, about one-half are Jewish. The magnificent schools and mission-house in the Mondgasse have received an addition of another (a fourth) storey, at the cost of over £2000, since my visit here last summer. The addition has made it possible for Miss Moody to open a small boarding "Home" for Jewish girls. At present there are nine inmates, who are being trained and educated for Christ.

My chief object in visiting Budapest this time was to be again, for awhile, with and to strengthen his heart and hands in the Lord. The rabbi celebrated his seventieth birthday in February last, and is continuing in a measure of physical vigour, and in spirit is ever growing in likeness to our Saviour Jesus Christ. Although he has undoubtedly grown much these last two or three years in clearness of knowledge of Christian doctrines, he still clings to the idea that only from within the midst of the synagogue itself can he best accomplish his mission to his people; and there can be no doubt that by his writings and personal intercourse the minds of many of the more educated Jews are being powerfully influenced for Christ. That he is in the true succession of Israel's true prophets and apostles is proved by the opposition and bitter hatred which he encounters from some. Not long ago, one evening, while walking with his wife through one of the busiest thoroughfares of the city, he suddenly received from behind a blow on the head which stunned him. A day or two later, a fanatical Jew, who no doubt was guilty of this cowardly act, boasted to Pastor Gordon that Rabbi Lichtenstein had better take care, for next time he would knock his head off!

The six days in Budapest I was very busy. We arrived on the Saturday. On Sunday morning, by Mr. Moody's request, I conducted the English service in the Scotch Church. In the afternoon we had the pleasure of gathering at the Hebrew Bible-reading presided over by Mr. Moody, at which Rabbi Lichtenstein, Pastor Gordon, and other workers were present; and in the evening Mr. Marienburger addressed the members of the newly-formed Y.M.C.A. in the house of Pastor Mai. On Tuesday we both addressed a large gathering of Jews and Gentiles in the Mission House, Mondgasse, while the rest of the time was filled up with visiting, in personal dealing with Jews and inquirers, and in conference with fellow-workers.

On May 23 we left Budapest for Neusatz-by-Belgrade. On the way we paid a brief visit to at Ulok. This dear friend, whose father and brother are rabbis in office, is one of the most powerful and faithful preachers of the Gospel in this country. He was first instructed and led to Christ by my dear fellow-worker, Rev. C. A. Schönberger. On the way to Neusatz we had a very painful experience. As fellow-travellers in the same carriage with us, we had four wealthy Jews and a rationalistic Lutheran pastor, who turned out even a greater enemy to the truth than the Jews. He denied all the essential Christian doctrines, and told the Jews, twice over, that everyone can be saved in his own way, so long as he is upright, and that Christ is not the Son of God. God have mercy on Hungary! There are about three and a-half millions of "Protestants" in the land, who are a great political force, and might be also a great moral and spiritual power, were it not for the terrible canker of rationalism and infidelity.

At Neusatz we had a very blessed time. Almost from the moment we arrived, Jews began to come to us to listen and to converse. The first morning while we were at breakfast, fifteen Jews collected around us, asking us to tell them our grounds for believing in Christ as the Messiah of Israel and Son of God, and begging for New Testaments, for which some offered to pay. All that day and the following, and till the moment we left the town, it was our privilege to teach, preach, and reason about Christ, with large and small parties of educated Jews, so that we had

SCARCELY TIME TO EAT.

A few Roman Catholics, hearing from Jews that we were distributing New Testaments, also came begging for copies, and we had no heart to refuse them. Indeed, the Lord has been graciously pleased to make us a blessing, directly and indirectly, to not a few Gentiles during this tour.

From Neusatz we went by Danube steamer as far as Orsova, whence we visited Hercules Bad and Temesvar, which is one of the largest cities in Hungary. Some of the missionary experiences by the way, and in these towns, will be memorable, for the Lord seemed really to open the hearts of some to receive his Word. Perhaps the most encouraging time we have had has been in Arad, where we arrived on the morning of May 30. As soon as it was known that we were in the town, Jews began to flock to us, and all that day, till late in the evening, and on the following day, from morning till night, it was our joy, Bible in hand, to preach the Gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ, to men of all classes, amongst them being doctors, advocates, bankers, merchants, and town officials. A large proportion of those who came to our rooms were students; and, mingled with the Jews, especially the first day, were a few Roman Catholics. We were unable to give New Testaments to all who earnestly asked for them; but in this town alone it was our privilege to put into Jews' hands about eighty copies in different languages, besides a large number of Rabbi Lichtenstein's last two pamphlets.

Our experience is that the Jews in Hungary are ripe—more so than those in any other land—for the preaching of the Gospel. The Lord pour upon us the spirit of compassion, and open our eyes to look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest. May the Lord of the harvest send forth into his harvest labourers of the right sort for this peculiar work!

DAVID BARON.

* Mr. Baron has now returned to England. His address is 23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

MISSION TO FRENCH IN LONDON.

The thirty-third anniversary meeting of this Mission, which is in connection with the French Reformed Evangelical Church in Bayswater, under the pastorate of Rev. J. M. H. Du Pontet-de la Harpe, B.D., was recently held in the beautiful grounds of Grove House, Regent's Park. Mdme. Du Pontet-de la Harpe and her daughters presided over the tea, which was served under a marquee.

The mission work is extensive and comprehensive, and has proved a boon not only to foreigners themselves, but also to English families and schools in search of well qualified teachers and reliable servants. The primary object is to bring within the sound of the Gospel as many as possible of the thousands of French-speaking foreigners who land every year on these shores.

The chair was taken by Hon. Henry Noel. The report for the past year was received with approval. The services in the church in Bayswater are well attended, 215 boys and girls attended the schools near Fitzroy-square; 285 governesses availed themselves of the Bienvenue Home in Colville houses, while 446 asked the assistance of the agency connected with it; 430 servant girls and eighteen men servants registered their names at the Société Protestante de Placement in Monmouth-road, Westbourne-grove. The Mission has several minor, but not less useful, agencies at work, among others a Bible-woman, who visits in hospitals, and from house to house. There is a deficit of £114 1s., to which must be added liabilities to the amount of £520 13s. 2d, making a total of £634 14s. 2d. wanted on March 31, 1895, to balance the accounts. As a result of diminished receipts through deaths and other causes, the committee have been compelled to close the Medical Mission, one of the most important agencies of the Mission.

The chairman, Archdeacon Sinclair, Rev. Dr. L. B. White, Rev. W. Roberts, and Dr. Newman Hall spoke in highly appreciative terms of the importance of the work and of the manner in which it is conducted.

MR. SPURGEON'S ORPHANAGE.

Founder's day is always observed at the Stockwell Orphanage with much enthusiasm, affording, as it does, the opportunity for a pleasant outdoor fête and the gathering of many friends from far and near. This event took place on Wednesday week. In the Memorial Hall, opened last year, an interesting exhibition was made of Reformation pictures, while at one end several tables were filled with the needle and wool work of the girls. The special point of interest in this hall was, however, the celebrated Tinworth statue of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, the honoured founder of the Orphanage. This, as a matter of fact, attracted the attention of many friends.

The day being fine, pleasing evolutions of the children, with the singing of various pieces, took place in the open-air on the green in the centre of the village. The Brixton Police Band also played well, while we were delighted to find that Dr. Barnardo had shown his Christian fellowship by sending his Boys' Band to take part.

The chief meeting of the day was held on the lawn, Mr. Martin J. Sutton presiding, supported by many well-known and influential people. The Chairman, in the course of a stirring address, said that he was there as a Protestant Churchman, to do honour to the memory of one whom he regarded as "God's foremost messenger of his day." The facts that Mrs. Hillyard, the lady whose gift of £20,000 first led Mr. Spurgeon to found this orphanage, was a clergyman's wife, and that the majority of the inmates have been the children of Church of England people, were adduced by Mr. Sutton as reasons why he should take a deep interest in this institution. Further, and in addition, there is "no voting," and the supreme aim is to bring the children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. On these considerations he based a strong and earnest plea for liberal aid.

Dr. J. A. Spurgeon submitted a statement, from which it appeared that during the year ending March 31, seventy-seven new cases were admitted, making a total of 1819 orphan children received since the commencement. The entire catholicity of the institution is shown by the fact that this total includes orphans whose parents belonged to all denominations, or to no denomination at all, no less than 706 belonging to the Established Church. London and Greater London supplied 1104 of the number, Bermondsey, Camberwell, Brixton, Lambeth, and Peckham taking the lead as regards numbers. More than half of the children in the institution are members of the Band of Hope with the sanction of their friends, and a band of forty-five Sunday-school teachers attend to instruct the children in classes on Sunday. The new report says that "many of the old boys are now occupying good positions in large houses of business, and not a few are engaged in works of usefulness; a large number are members of Christian churches, and several are ministers of the Word. One of our old boys holds a Professorship in the University of Cambridge. By a good education, and a thorough domestic training in the Homes, we hope to fit our girls for earning their own livelihood in houses of business, in the Civil Service, or as domestics in Christian families." The income for the year, exclusive of £1441 from the Spurgeon Memorial Fund, was £11,129; and the expenditure was £13,006, showing an excess of expenditure over income of £1547. This deficiency causes some anxiety to the trustees, who do not wish either to break in upon their funded capital, or to diminish the number of children received.

Interesting and sympathetic addresses followed by Revs. F. A. C. Lillingston, G. F. Pentecost, D.D., A. Connell, and Alfred Wells.

A similar meeting, presided over by Sir John Barran, M.P., was held in the Memorial Hall, with addresses by Revs. J. W. Ewing, Walter Horne, and W. J. Woods, Alderman F. F. Belsey, and others.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—The committee-room, 20, Berners-street, was again well filled on Thursday, when the last prayer-meeting of the season was held. Rev. W. R. Mowll, who presided, announced several special requests for prayer in connection with the work of the Society, and called attention to the necessity which exists for greater effort to reach the children of this country, it being most important that the young should be taught Scripture truth in relation to Romish error. After a time of prayer, Mr. Mowll closed with a short address on the Epistle to the Ephesians.

THE GLOUCESTER CONVENTION.

Our thirteenth Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life is past, leaving most precious memories behind. How shall we attempt to give a description of this solemn gathering? The attendance was larger than ever, necessitating the use of two halls in the evening. General Hatt Noble presided, and his cheery, earnest remarks gave an excellent tone to the meetings. There were present as speakers, Revs. Dr. J. Elder Cumming, J. B. Figgis, J. Gelson Gregson, Evan H. Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, S. A. Selwyn, Nevile Sherbrooke, F. S. Webster, A. G. Whaley, John Wilkinson, N. P. Buncombe, Messrs. T. A. Bailey, George Clarke, H. Webber, and Mrs. Nikambé. These brethren spoke with great freedom, clearness, and power, and with the manifest unction of the Holy Spirit.

To understand a Convention, you must not only be there, but be in it—in its spirit, as well as in its teaching. There are many ways in which it is possible to miss the point. You may be occupied with the externals, and the accessories, and never get to the kernel. Or, you may be in the attitude of a critic, a judge, and so be left outside in the cold. Or, again, you may be merely a spectator, enjoying a spiritual entertainment with no sense of special responsibility, and receiving no real definite help. It is to be feared that even earnest Christians do not always obtain a blessing which they might, because they are so busy pushing the special mission, or cause, or hobby, which lies nearest to their heart. Should we not best secure the interests of our work by quietly keeping, without distraction, to the one central thought of the Convention? Thank God these conventions are very fruitful in practical results, and we must pray that this fruitfulness may increase and abound.

The spirit of brotherliness, and simple, unaffected love, is a marked feature of the Gloucester Convention. You feel that there is a sweet reality in the fellowship of saints. Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Wesleyans, Baptists, etc., etc., are one happy family, and this oneness of heart was never more manifest than on the present occasion. We have to thank God for much of this spirit, not only at the time of the Convention, but throughout the year also. May we not all do something in this respect, by seeking to understand other Christians, by speaking a kind word for them, by showing practical sympathy with them, and especially by praying for and with them.

The Convention came very appropriately after a united mission recently conducted in the city by Mr. George Clarke. There were, we believe, a goodly number of "new-born babes" desiring to be fed. It was very interesting to observe how many young people attended the early morning prayer-meetings, which were truly "times of refreshing." There was a chorus of one-sentence prayers at these meetings, which seemed to increase in intensity day by day, and it was good to be there. Another feature worth noticing was the parents' prayer-meeting, which was very largely attended. It was well described by one present as a "melting time." Fathers and mothers poured out their hearts to God, many of them with tears, on behalf of their children. There were many confessions of failure, mingled with earnest intercessions. The needs of children in general, including all ages and almost all circumstances, were brought before our Father in heaven; but much of the time besides was spent in praying for individual cases. I must not omit to add that there were thanksgivings offered, as well as prayers, and in some cases for special answers to requests which had been presented at former conventions.

At the close of our great missionary meeting, many gave in their names as candidates for the mission field. We would ask for prayer on behalf of these, as well as for our Young Men's and Young Women's Associations, which it is proposed to start afresh, as a result of the United Mission. God has visited us; He has spoken to us; He has blessed us. It is with full, overflowing hearts that we give forth our glad hallelujah. J. J. Luce.

HOWARD-STREET GOSPEL MISSION, WANDSWORTH-ROAD, S.W.—The members of the Working Girls' Union and Sewing-class held their quarterly tea and the closing meeting of the season, a few days ago, when the prizes for the best needlework and for regular attendance were distributed. The number of children's garments made was over forty, and very good specimens of knitting were shown.

CONFERENCE ON PROPHECY.

The Clapham Convention was held last week (June 18, 19 and 20). Mr. R. C. Morgan occupied the chair on the first day. Rev. H. Brass showed from several passages of Scripture that, as God has said, the Jews must return to their own land, become a national people, and the missionaries to the whole world. Rev. W. Frith gave a very able paper on the Tabernacle as a type of Christ's work. He dwelt upon the various ordinances as illustrative of the work of our Saviour, and showed by many proofs that, although no type ever fully delineated the anti-type, Moses was a type of Christ. Rev. W. Fuller Gooch followed, speaking of the many Antichrists that should precede the coming of Christ. They are even now in the world, endeavouring to upset the work of true and earnest Christians by following them in all points except the divinity of Christ, which they totally and utterly deny. Rev. H. G. Thwaites dwelt upon the appearances of Christ, past, present, and future; to Jacob when the angel (as was supposed) wrestled with him; to Abram, to the three children in the fire, and at the transfiguration of Jesus. Mrs. Thoumaian gave a most touching account of the awful persecutions that Armenian Christians undergo because they will not deny Christ. Mr. Thoumaian was to have spoken, but illness prevented his being present.

The second day was opened with an address by Gen. Sir R. Phayre on "The Apostle Paul as a preacher of the Kingdom of God and the Gospel of his grace" (Acts xx. 24, 25). Our marching orders being, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," it becomes of the first importance to make sure that we understand what that Gospel is. We cannot declare it unless we know it. This Gospel is fully set forth by the Apostle Paul in his farewell address to the Ephesians, as well as in his letter to the Roman Christians and church at Corinth. Having dwelt at some length on the modern attempts to set up "another Gospel, which is not another," making special and regretful reference to the utterances of certain bishops and other men of high ecclesiastical standing, the speaker concluded with an earnest exhortation to preach the Gospel, and that only, as the one remedy for the sins and sorrows of men.

Mr. James Sprunt followed with an address on "The Coming of the Lord: Why, how, and when should we expect Him." Here are three questions which are of importance to all believers. Why do we expect Jesus to return? Simply because He Himself said so—see John xiv. 3; Rev. xx. 7, 12, 20—statements which should settle the question once for all in the mind of every believer in Christ. Next, How do we expect Him? As Acts i. 11 informs us, we look for Him to come exactly as He went. It is the "same Jesus," and it is in "like manner" as He went, so shall He come personally even as He went, and visibly (that is to believers), even as He parted from them. Lastly, When do we expect Him? We know neither the day nor hour; but we are bidden to wait, look. For his own part the speaker believed it might occur at any moment—though other students of God's Word took a different view on this point. Whether it be so or not, all agree in "waiting for the Son from heaven."

In the afternoon a thoughtful and solemn address was given by Rev. A. Wilkes on "The Judgments," bringing out clearly God's "strange work" of judgment as yet to be accomplished in a rebellious world, on Antichrist himself, and all who reject and oppose the Christ of God, and obey not the Gospel; Rev. E. Brewer following with a Bible-reading on the "Marriage of the Lamb," and events connected therewith.

Dr. M'Killiam, speaking in the evening on "The Parousia Cloud—The Shekinah Glory," showed from many Old Testament passages, specially in Genesis and Exodus, that the "cloud" was significant of the presence of the Lord in the Tabernacle. The great cloud associated with the Parousia, for which we are looking, has as one of its accompaniments, the flashing forth of the indignation of God against Antichrist and his host; and this is clearly typified in the flashing forth of wrath from the cloud in Lev. x. 2. As we go onward in Old Testament history we find the cloud, or the Shekinah, departing from the Temple and from Israel because of sin. In Luke ix. 34 we see this cloud once more, when there is a shadowing forth of the coming kingdom. "I believe," said the speaker, "that you and I are waiting for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to receive his Church to Himself, at which time we shall be caught up in the clouds; and along with our blessed Lord entering fully into his glory, we shall shine forth in the resplendent likeness of the Lord Himself, and thus shall we become, with Him, the light of multitudes; that is to say, we are going to be with Him in the great Parousia Cloud." In connection with this, Rev. iv.; Heb. xii. 1, 22-25; ix. 11; Zech. xiv. 6; and Isa. lx. 1 were cited and expounded.

Rev. John Urquhart spoke on "The Messianic Hope, as set forth in the Psalms." There is no book more profoundly human than the Book of Psalms—the deepest thoughts and longings of man's heart are brought out—and yet the reader finds there is more than man here. In illustration Mr. Urquhart expounded Psalms lxxxviii. to xcviii., showing the close connection and sequence, the mournful glance at chastisement and rejection, and the intense yearning for, glowing hope of, a glorious Deliverer yet to come.

The last day of the Conference was devoted to addresses by Rev. J. Gossett Tanner on "The Fallen Cherub of Ezekiel," Mr. C. Russell Hurditch on "Four Songs in Heaven," Rev. J. Wilkinson on "The Re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine," and the blessings to attend the neighbouring nations. Rev. G. D. Hooper also gave a Bible reading on Luke xxi. In the evening the Convention closed with a united Communion service, conducted by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch.

COLWYN BAY CONVENTION.

A five-days' Holiness Convention, convened by Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Crossley, of Star Hall, Manchester, was held at Colwyn Bay last week, and never has it been our privilege to attend a series of meetings in which the Divine presence was more manifest. The seven o'clock prayer-meetings were devoted almost entirely to prayer for missionaries and evangelistic enterprise in the foreign field. The half-past ten meetings were divided between prayer, personal testimony, and short Scripture messages. Some of the testimonies were very striking and inspiring, and in the Scripture messages there was often a depth of spiritual teaching which threw new and vivid light on the possibilities of a life lived in the Spirit of God. The chief features of the afternoon and evening meetings were the addresses and the number who definitely surrendered themselves to God at the close of every meeting. The addresses were practical and very searching.

Throughout the Convention great prominence was given to these three subjects:—(1) The need and possibility of being cleansed from inward sin, as well as from outward transgressions. (2) The need and promise of a personal baptism of the Holy Spirit for every child of God. (3) The nature and conditions of prevailing prayer. Some deep teaching was received on this subject, and many felt that this was the distinguishing feature of the Convention.

At the praise meeting (which had to be limited to one hour) about forty testified to the blessing they had received; and we could not but feel that there was a ring of genuineness in most of the testimonies. The foundation of all blessing from God to man was shown to be the Divine love; and the natural and inevitable outcome of the Divine life in man was shown to be love to our fellows. Thos. Lloyd.

THE HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, Soho-square, W., founded in 1842, supplies a need keenly felt among the suffering poor. During last year 566 in-patients were admitted, while 5068 out-patients received attention. The income from all sources was £7498, which was a good deal less than the expenditure.

DRURY LANE WORKING GIRLS' HOUSE.—The tenth annual report states that the present house, 31, Stanhope-street, Drury-lane, is more convenient than the old Home; and as it accommodates six or eight more inmates, increased support is required to keep things going. The servants' registry has proved very successful, the sewing club also. The recreation class, which is held on Monday evenings, under the superintendence of Lady and Miss Grantham, is most popular. The Sunday class is very full. The girls who are in service near enough to attend, enjoy spending their "Sunday out" at the Home. On Bank Holidays kind friends invite them to spend their holiday in the country. Miss Penning is the resident matron of the House.

CONVENTS OR PRISONS?

There are many indications that Italy is recoiling from devotion to the Pope. One is found in the following extract from L'Italie, a daily newspaper published in Rome, which has been in the habit of speaking with deference of Papal institutions:

"The dark, rigid, ferocious rules which, in the depth of the barbarism of the Middle Ages, the most unbridled religious fanaticism could impose on sickly minds, exist still in the full blaze of our nineteenth century. Our laws for the suppression of religious corporations have been powerless to conquer them. Experience proves, on the contrary, that opposition to the religious or social idea raises to the rank of martyrs the pretended persecuted ones, and nothing is more favourable to the promulgation of an idea than the true or supposed martyrdom of its promoters. Thus, even in our days, individuals perfectly free, not according to the formula of Schopenhauer, but in this sense that they virtually possess the faculty of choice, elect a kind of life, and subject themselves to rules, in comparison with which the life and rules of our penal establishments are decidedly preferable.

"In fact, the severest penalty enforced by our laws is that of solitary confinement. Now, these persons, like the Benedictine nuns of Banco, deliberately condemn themselves to perpetual seclusion. This penalty, in exceptional cases, is still further aggravated by the imposition of the cellular régime. The Benedictines live in separate cells. In houses of correction the enforcement of silence is considered an additional punishment; and the Benedictines are subjected to the law of silence. They only exchange a few words at specified hours of the day, to repeat forms of prayer always the same. In penitentiaries a number takes the place of a person's name. The monk exchanges his name for another, and by this simple detail breaks all family ties.

"Convicts have their head shaved, monks the same, and on the day of profession of faith nuns voluntarily lose their hair. What modern society generally considers a mark of infamy is looked upon in monasteries as an admirable proof of abnegation, with this difference, that persons, strangers to the incarcerated, may gain admission to prisons; that there exist visiting committees; that prisoners may appeal, protest, make their voices heard, and that they have an infirmary for times of sickness. In convents, on the contrary, the rules of seclusion are extremely rigorous; no stranger has any right to enter. No appeal is admitted. Often there is no infirmary, and it is only in exceptionally serious cases that a doctor is called in, by the Bishop's permission and the indulgence of 'His Holiness.' Torture and compulsory fasting are abolished, but the sisters have still hair-cloth, flagellations, and voluntary fasts.

"This hectic monstrosity by which sweet and innocent creatures are subjected, even if it were by their own free will, to an existence worse than that of the most infamous criminals, is absolutely repugnant to the moral conscience of our times. In these surroundings, with such a kind of life, with enforced celibacy, disturbing the most natural physical functions, with austere and intolerable rules, with ideas innate and acquired, there supervene deep physiological perturbations, giving rise to the strangest and most unexpected morbid phenomena, which, however, rarely overpass the boundaries of these enclosures.

"The seclusion of the convent; its high walls embrowned by time, furnished with gratings and dark blinds like those of prison windows, guarantee the interior of the cloister from all indiscretion, especially as these monasteries are generally at a distance from other dwellings, and in most inaccessible places. Besides, the tacit agreement which exists among the members of these corporations, and the interest they have to let nothing transpire outside, are elements more than sufficient to induce them to maintain even thick and impenetrable the darkness which reigns around their dungeons. Facts of an abnormal nature are required to turn the eyes of society into these recesses; but when they once do penetrate, nothing can hinder the most profound emotion and reflection."

MR. BROADHURST, M.P., presided over a meeting at the House of Commons of the Tied-House League, which is being formed to promote legislation for making an end of tied houses.

LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE.

Dear Sir,—Now that the second session of the College is drawing to a close, it may be well to give some account of the progress of the work during the past year and of the prospects for the future. In October last nineteen men entered the College, embracing representatives of the London Missionary Society, Church Missionary Society, China Inland Mission, Swedish Foreign Missionary Society, Cape Dutch Reformed Church, Tibetan Mission, and others, including several former students of Harley College, who are destined for various mission-fields. The same programme has been carried out as was arranged for the first year, and again various hospitals have afforded opportunities for practical work to the students. At the same time the work at the Medical Mission, 224, High-street, Shadwell, E., has been greatly developed, and has proved a valuable auxiliary to the College.

Two important changes have taken place just lately which afford a proof of the progress of the work. 1. It was found that the premises, No. 16, Mornington-road, Bow, were altogether too small for the growing numbers. Suitable premises have been obtained, consisting of two houses, Nos. 31 and 33, Hamfrith-road, Stratford, E., and the transference of the College to its new locality took place at the beginning of May. Ample accommodation is now provided for sixteen resident students. Although the College is now rather farther from London, it is nearer to the West Ham Hospital, where so much work has been done in the past, and is more conveniently situated in many other respects.

2. The other important development is this extension of the work of the Medical Mission. The mission is known to many as Dr. Barnardo's East-end Medical Mission. It retains its connection with Dr. Barnardo's work, but is under the direction of the Council of Livingstone College. Until quite recently the Principal undertook the entire charge of the medical work, with the exception of some kind assistance given by Dr. McReddie and Mr. Eccles. But it was evident that the medical mission could not be satisfactorily worked without the presence of a resident medical man, who could visit the patients in their homes and undertake other branches of the work. At the present time such a medical man has been secured, and steps are being taken to make the mission increasingly useful.

This development cannot take place without considerable expense, and friends of medical mission work are asked to contribute towards this object. There is no other general medical mission for the large and poor district in which this is situated, and I feel sure there are many who would help if only they knew the great importance of the work both for the poor of Shadwell and also for the students of Livingstone College. Funds are also needed for furnishing and other expenses connected with the enlargement of the College.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Mr. J. B. Wookey and his band of boys are at present on a visit to Ireland, and it is gratifying to observe that wherever they appear deep sympathy is aroused on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's work. A series of meetings in Belfast was brought to a close on Tuesday night, when a monster demonstration was held in the Ulster Hall. The meeting was organised by Mr. D. A. Black, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., and was a splendid success.

THE LONDON MEDICAL MISSION has issued an Occasional Report showing how the work is being steadily continued among the sick and destitute poor. Many delightful incidents are given, such as that of a Swiss waiter with consumption, who seemed utterly indifferent to the Gospel Message. He was admitted to the Consumptive Hospital, and on his return home was again visited by us. His attitude was now quite changed. The face of the dying man beamed with joy, as he told us that he had found Christ as his Saviour, exclaiming, "Doctor, you tried to cure my body, but neither you nor the doctors in the hospital could do that; but, praise the Lord, you have saved my soul. Your words, doctor, came to me in the hospital, and I told the man in the bed next to me how it is a finished work what Jesus did for us; and he is saved too, and my wife also. So we are all bound for glory." Besides the mission work, a plea is made for the convalescent cottage and the holiday home. Address, Dr. Latchford, 33, Short's Gardens, Endell-street, St. Giles, W.C.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

The second anniversary of the opening of the Institute for Seamen was celebrated on Thursday last at the headquarters, 215-17, St. George-street, London Docks. Mr. Robert Miller, of Bayswater, presided.

Rev. G. J. Hill (Secretary) gave an outline of the work, stating that during the year 1,220 meetings, embracing English, German, Scandinavian services, lime-light lectures, concerts, temperance, and other gatherings, had taken place. The Society was hampered by debt, and as 1896 would be the jubilee year, it was proposed to make a special effort to raise £5000 to pay off the liability on the Institute, and place the mission in a sound financial position.

The Chairman commended the work, speaking of the triviality of all that was done for seamen. He maintained that the debt on the building ought to be a small matter considering the claims the sailor had on the community. Mr. J. W. Benn, M.P., speaking from what he had seen of the Mission, gave it his cordial support, and placed at the service of Mr. and Mrs. Hill any influence he might have to aid them in their work. Mr. Robert Wales and Mr. and Mrs. Maynard also gave very helpful addresses; and a letter was read from Admiral Grant, C.B. (who would have been present but for the serious ailment confining him to his room), on the deserving character of the work, which, steering clear of providing frivolous amusement, aims to benefit spiritually the large body of seamen to be found in the docks and on shore in its immediate vicinity.

SANDWICH MEN.

We thank God that his blessing has been with us at the Bessbrook Home; in his name we have gone forward and enlarged our borders. Early in February a second Home was opened with superior accommodation, at a charge of sixpence a night in place of fourpence. Fifteen of the Christian men at the Home at once volunteered to move in and pay the additional cost, and there are now thirty-four men in the house, nearly all of whom are Christians. The total number in the two Homes is raised to eighty-eight.

We are now arranging a "summer camp" at the seaside for July, and it gives us much pleasure to think that our trustworthy and reliable ones will now have an opportunity of going in parties of twelve or fourteen at a time for a week's holiday by the sea. Help towards this object will be very gladly received at 39, Queen's-square, W.C., as also gifts of old clothes and periodicals, which have been much valued in the past. G. Maynard.

IPSWICH YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE MISSION is the outcome of evangelistic meetings, started some twenty-five years ago. It is undenominational, the speakers belonging to all sections of the Church. Many young people have been blessed, and a large number are now members of the Children's Scripture Union. There is also a large Band of Hope. Active, open-air, tract, and other evangelistic work is carried on, also a Daily Prayer Union, and Christian and Disciple Bands—the latter the out-and-out members. A native evangelist in China is supported by the Mission, in connection with the C.I.M. Should any feel led to organise similar work, a plan of the service may be had of the superintendent of the mission, Ipswich.

ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGE MISSION.—This year already, it has been our privilege to hold ninety-five mission services in various parts, and we have had abundant proof of God's goodness in blessing to souls. Last month we made our seventeenth annual visit to the Herefordshire May fairs, and during ten days we visited various villages, travelling upwards of 150 miles, scattering 20,000 Gospel books and tracts, and selling Bibles, Testaments, and other books. In May we commenced our summer tent work at the village of Pencraig; from there we moved on to Glewstone, and in both places great interest was awakened. On June 9 we pitched a second tent in Ross; this is a large tent, accommodating upwards of 400 persons, and night after night it is being well filled with the very class we are seeking to reach. If the Lord provides the means, we hope to visit the following places, whence the cry comes, "Come over and help us":—Monmouth, Mitcheldean, Winchcombe, Whitchurch, Llangrove, Coleford. John Coates.

THOSE TOFFEE BALLS!

I really did not know at the time why I made such a purchase. I was on my way one Saturday evening with a few provisions for a needy family in Harrow Green—a poor district in the far east of London—and passing a sweet-stuff shop in the high-road, I looked in at the window, and soon found myself in lawful possession of a half-pound of toffee balls. They had a mission, however, as well as myself.

My knock at the cottage door was answered by a big girl, of whom I asked if Mrs. So-and-so was in—the mother of some of our scholars. She recognised me, replied that the woman was not in, and called her own mother to speak to me. When the kitchen door was opened, I saw half-a-dozen little heads in the further apartment, and said to the maid, "I see there are some children in the kitchen; pass this bag of sweets round," and handed her the toffee balls.

Meantime, the mother had roused the husband of the person I called to see, and I had some conversation with him at the front door. And when I called for my bag of sweets, the paper bag was returned, minus the toffee balls! There was general laughter when I expressed surprise, and I was determined to turn this little bit of fun to good account. Passing through the bare passage into the kitchen, I playfully referred to the toffee balls, which were still being enjoyed by the youngsters, and it was not long before I was sitting in their midst, and the man with whom I had been conversing had followed me into the kitchen.

"Now, couldn't we have a hymn together?" I asked. "Something you have learnt at the 'Welcome.'" And the children's eyes sparkled with delight at the idea. We sang "Jesus bids us shine," and "I think when I read," much to the joy of all in the room. And by the time we had finished the second hymn, I had turned up the tenth of John in my Bible, and read it to the company, explaining to the little ones the tender care of the Shepherd and the intense love of Jesus towards the sheep and the lambs He came to save. I was listened to most attentively; and have since been welcomed by the same family, who have appreciated these little services in their poverty-stricken home, to which I was introduced by those toffee balls.

This is but one visit out of very many which I have paid to the poor people at Harrow Green, and I must confess that everywhere I go the people receive me most gladly, and enter quite heartily into the little homely kitchen services which have been held in this way. The "Welcome" Mission (of which I have the privilege of being superintendent) has been carried on for the past twelve years in a disused public-house, and has long since outgrown the premises, which are in every sense most unsuitable for aggressive Christian effort. Still, much blessing has attended the labours of the busy workers, who, with all their difficulties, have devoted themselves to the proclamation of the Gospel of Christ to the children and young people who have crowded in from week to week.

A new hall is about to be erected at the rear of the present building, at a cost of £750, and the renovation of the existing premises, which will be utilised as class-rooms, will cost £95, making a total outlay of £845. Towards this amount the sum of £280 has been subscribed or promised, and we confidently rely on the Lord's stewards to aid us in raising the balance of £565. The helpers are, with very few exceptions, working men and women, the people are very poor, and we are compelled to seek the help of those who are interested in the preaching of the Gospel to the poor. The Mission is warmly commended by the local ministers, Revs. Colmer B. Symes, B.A., John Bradford, and J. Martyn Lobb being amongst the vice-presidents.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The annual synod of this church met in Trinity Church, Eccles, near Manchester, on June 18, 19, and 20, under the presidency of Bishop Eldridge. A public meeting was held, and addresses given on "The Origin and Doctrines of, and Need for, the Reformed Church."

A PLEA FOR GOVERNESSES.—Under this title a report has been issued of the fund for the aid of aged, destitute, and invalid governesses, giving touching details of those helped. Full details may be had of the hon. secretaries, Misses Fuller, Hillsboro, Maidenhead.

A CRIPPLES' HOLIDAY HOME.

Mr. C. L. Boyer, in his work in connection with the Drift Children's Mission and Home Cripples' Band, has been able to bring gladness into the hearts and lives of many of London's poorest and least cared for waifs and strays. During the last year he has taken hundreds of these neglected little ones for a day's outing in Epping Forest, and a good many have enjoyed a few days' stay at the seaside. The need has been greatly felt, however, for a holiday home specially for the cripples, with about 570 of whom Mr. Boyer keeps himself constantly in touch.

Last Thursday saw the opening of such a Home at Margate, close to the sea. A warmly sympathetic party of friends went down from London to be present at the opening ceremony, travelling by the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company's quick route. These, with a goodly number of local friends first gathered in the Congregational Church, Union Crescent, where a dedicatory service was held, and some interesting particulars of Mr. Boyer's work were given by several speakers, including Rev. D. M. Cameron, Rev. Mr. James, Alderman Raydon, Mr. J. F. Shorey, and Mrs. Arthur Stannard. The Mayor of Margate (Ald. Wootton) afterwards declared the Home open for the reception of the crippled children, whom the Mission does so much to help and cheer.

A large house in Cecil-square, comfortably furnished and pleasantly situated, had been adapted for the purposes of the Home, and accommodation is provided for about thirty children at a time. Most of the beds have been paid for and named by the subscribers, but there are still some beds to be subscribed for, each one costing £2. The small sum of ten shillings will give one of the little London cripples a fortnight's change of air at their Holiday Home. One of the greatest treats that one can witness is to come across a party of these little ones on the sands at Margate. Do they enjoy themselves? Listen to them singing one of the happy songs Mr. Boyer has taught them, and look at their bright faces, and you will not need to ask them if they appreciate what is done for them through this Mission.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

On Wednesday last week, by kind permission of Louisa, Lady Ashburton, a meeting was held at Kent House, Knightsbridge, on behalf of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, the Archdeacon of London presiding. The attendance, chiefly of ladies, was very good, the Countess Compton, president, being among those present.

Rev. B. Baring Gould, who has recently returned from a visit to the missions in China and Japan, after opening the meeting with prayer, referred to the pleasant fraternal relations which have ever existed between this Society and the Church Missionary Society. He drew an affecting picture of the condition of women in those countries, and bore a strong testimony to the work of the missionary ladies sent out by the Society, of which he had so recently been an eye-witness, urging the importance of multiplying their numbers.

Miss Webb, the secretary, gave some additional particulars of the Society's work in China and Japan, and a brief sketch of that in India, Persia, and the Holy Land. Miss Doubble, from Bethlehem, now at home on furlough, spoke of the boarding school and the day school at that station, and of the labours of the Bible-women employed there. Miss Lambert, from Foochow, also at home on furlough, gave an account of the boarding school, day schools, and visiting work carried on by Miss Bushell and herself, and told of several instances of blessing upon their labours, the fruit of which is now abundantly to be seen. She earnestly appealed for more workers, and invited those who may be unable to give personal service in the mission field to provide for the maintenance of substitutes for themselves.

Archdeacon Sinclair, in a speech of much power and interest, solemnly urged the claims of the Society upon the sympathy and support of all who are interested in the work of mission to the women of the East, specially pleading for the steady support of annual subscriptions. After prayer had been offered by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, the meeting concluded with the Benediction. Afterwards many of the ladies inspected a number of Chinese curiosities exhibited by Miss Lambert.

OUTLINE BIBLE STUDIES.

II.—CANDLES OF SCRIPTURE.

1. The Candle of the Lord: Conscience.—Prov. xx. 27; Ps. xviii. 28. Conscience is the candle of the Lord fixed in every breast, and is the natural light which makes us sensible of right and wrong. But it must be enlightened by the Holy Spirit, and guided by the Word of God, or else it is not a sure guide to salvation and life. When the Holy Spirit enlightens conscience, then there is conviction of sin; sense of danger, and an earnest cry for help (Acts xvi. 30).

2. The Candle of Grace: Love.—Luke xv. 8. This candle of grace lights us to salvation and joy.

It is a search light to seek the lost (Luke xix. 10).

It is a Divine light to find the helpless (Ezek. xxxiv. 16).

It is a warm light to welcome the found one (Luke xv. 22).

3. The Candle of Testimony: Life.—Matt. v. 15. When we are saved we become the candles for the Lord.

A candle lit for the right purpose (v. 14; Phil. ii. 15).

A candle put in the right place (v. 15).

A candle shining for God's glory (v. 16).

4. The Candle Put Out: Death.—Job. xviii. 6. The light of nature and the spark of reason may do for this world, but will never light us to the other world in safety, and death will come and put it all out. This is no light for the soul, and when death comes it is often too late to get Divine light (Matt. xxv. 8; Luke xiii. 25, 26).

5. The Candle Outshone: Glory.—Rev. xxii. 5. There is a bright, glorious future for God's people. No night of darkness. No night of sorrow, and no night of death (Rev. xx. 1-5.) C. Edwards.

DUBLIN VISITING MEDICAL MISSION.

This Mission, which is now three years old, is already doing a far greater work than even the most sanguine supporter ever anticipated. The past winter's work increased to such an extent that our premises proved too small, but our Heavenly Father opened our way, and we have added the adjoining house to the Mission premises, thus obtaining room for a second doctor, with whom we hope to enter upon the coming winter's work. We have seen many blessed conversions, but our hearts go out in deep longings that the Gospel seed might bring forth a great harvest of weary souls who have heard of Jesus and his love during the three years the Mission has been opened.

Since March 1, 4150 attendances have been registered at the dispensaries, and about 380 patients have been visited by the doctor and nurse in their homes. Last July there was some opposition, and the people were warned not to enter the mission, but this year they have been let alone, as nothing would keep them from attending.

We are much in need of funds, having had to spend a large sum to put our new house into repair, besides which we have already lost many subscribers through death. Pray for us. Our wants are many and great, and at times we scarcely feel able to keep pace with the work, which has grown heavy, but for this latter we can only praise our God, and believe that He who has thus opened our way will supply all our need out of his riches.

SWEDEN AND MISSIONS.

Mr. J. Holmgren, of Stockholm, desires to state that in our report of his recent address at Aldersgate-street meeting regarding Swedish interests in the China Mission, several misstatements have crept in.

The facts are these. In 1887 the Swedish Mission in China was formed, and it has now in China twenty-one missionaries. This Mission is associated with the C.I.M. In 1890 the Holiness Union began work in China. This Mission, which has about eight or ten missionaries, is also connected with the C.I.M. The same year the Swedish Missionary Union and the Swedish Baptist Mission took up work in China. These Societies have some twenty workers in China, but they are not connected with the C.I.M. In 1891 fifty Swedes were sent out from America, who are supported from small Scandinavian congregations in that land. These brethren are also connected with the C.I.M. Forty-five workers have been sent out from Sweden, who are in connection with the International Alliance of New York, and are supported by that Association.

Letters to the Editor.

A CALL TO MORE PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—Might I remind your readers of the United Circle of Prayer, suggested for the first day of every month, viz., that privately or in gatherings believers plead with our gracious Father for—

(1) Full and whole-hearted consecration of all who name Christ's name to Him.

(2) Increased manifestation of the Spirit's power in convicting men of sin, and conversion of souls to Christ.

The hours suggested are 7 a.m., noon, and evening. It is suggested also that as the Early Church fasted (Acts xiii. 2-3, 1 Cor. vii. 5) some might do likewise. The circle will begin; may many hearts join in fervent trustful prayer.—Yours in a living Saviour, JOHN O. WEST.

St. Matthew's, Birmingham.

A SHOCKING SPECTACLE.

DEAR SIR,—Your attention has no doubt been drawn to the performances of Rubinstein's opera, "Christ," which have been given in the Opera House here, and have attracted a good deal of notice, the various parts being taken by prominent German actors and actresses. I am glad to say that the Kirchenblatt, a paper which expresses the views of the Evangelical Lutheran clergy here, has strongly opposed these performances. The principal events in our Lord's life are all represented: his birth, baptism, temptation, the raising of the widow's son at Nain, the last supper, Gethsemane, and the crucifixion. Our blessed Lord is necessarily the chief personage in all these scenes. The crucifixion is, I believe, not really presented, but is rather implied by a distant view of Calvary.

That the sacred person of our Lord and the scenes of his earthly life should be presented by worldly people, in a place of worldly amusement, must be unspeakably painful to all true believers; and I trust that, should any attempt be made to produce this work in England, a united protest will be raised by all Christian churches.—Yours faithfully, GEO. S. FENTON.

"THE WORSHIP OF ANGELS."

DEAR SIR,—In your "Notes" of 13th inst., where you say "It is greatly to be regretted that the teaching of truth is too often sacrificed to the pleasant sound in musical productions," you touch upon a subject of grave importance and very far-reaching in practice. True, as to one of the instances you quote, we may well believe that neither the singer nor the audience had the least thought, at the time, of "Angel Worship" in connection with the song "Angels ever bright and fair," but it is right that the connection should be pointed out, and when this is done it becomes us to weigh the matter well for future guidance in these things, lest we be found to be unintentionally sinning against God. Eve "being deceived was in the transgression" as well as Adam, who "was not deceived"; therefore sin is sin, whether we are conscious of it or not.

In this particular instance, the song being in the form of a prayer to angels, is just as really angel-worship as a hymn to Mary is Mariolatry, and if so, surely it is wrong to sing or listen to such, even although we may only be allowing ourselves to be charmed with the music.

But, as I say, the question is far-reaching and of grave importance. During all the world's history, the fine arts, as they are called—music, poetry, painting, and sculpture—have been used to a grievous extent for the beatification of "the worship of demons," and even Christians have too often fallen into the snare. Many reformers, like John Knox and our Puritan forefathers, perceived the evil, and fought stoutly against it, for which they have been stigmatised by the world as Goths, Vandals, and iconoclasts. We, it may be, do not stigmatise them, but do we follow their steps? Do we see the truth as they saw it?

'Tis first the true and then the beautiful,
Not first the beautiful and then the true,

as Dr. H. Bonar wrote in his hymn upon "Divine Order." How often are Christians so taken with the sensuous beauty of the music, the song, or the picture, that they overlook or ignore the idolatrous meaning of the subject! How many, for instance, there are who would not have a crucifix in their house, and yet hesitate not to display pictures of the madonna and child, of satyrs, nymphs and fauns, or statues of heathen gods, as Venus and Adonis! True, these are not worshipped, they are merely intended for ornament, but can it be pleasing to the holy God, who hates every thought of idolatry, that we, his children, should adorn our homes with symbols, however beautiful they may seem to us, of that which has always been an abomination in his sight?

Again, how often through music and song does false teaching enter into, and even pervade, the atmosphere of Christian homes. It is only a charming song with entrancing music, the parents may think, and deem it impossible that their children can be affected by the sentiments. But is it so? May not this very thing be in a great measure the cause of much of the worldliness of thought and spirit which many Christian parents grieve to see in their children?

I should like to suggest two subjects for consideration in connection with this matter. First, is it right to take pleasure in anything that represents or symbolises idolatrous thoughts or customs, even though there may be no idolatrous intents in our minds? Second, is not this the very way by which Satan beguiles unstable souls, by throwing a glamour over a false religion, and making the untrue appear to be the true?

May we who are God's children ponder this matter, and lay it before the Lord, and may we have grace to do that which is right.—Yours truly,

ICONOCLAST.

"INTERPRETATION OF PROPHECY."

WE have received copy of a letter from Dr. McKilliam, editor of The Morning Star, to Mr. G. H. Pember, explaining that he was not personally responsible for the title prefixed in that journal to the extracts from Mr. Pember's paper. Also that the title was by no means intended to imply that Futurists arrogate to themselves "Divine wisdom," while charging those who differ from them with "human folly."

NEW TABERNACLE AT WOOLWICH.

MANY know of the remarkable work being carried on among the artisans of Woolwich by Rev. John Wilson. The very success has involved responsibilities, the most pressing of which is the absolute need for a new and much larger place of worship. The present chapel seats 650, and has for years been utterly inadequate, the members alone being numerous enough to fill it twice over, for the latest returns show a membership of 1216. For three and a-half years the Drill Hall has been hired for Sunday afternoons and evenings; the attendance throughout has averaged 1600 at each service. The people have long felt that they must "arise and build." Great difficulty has been experienced in finding a site, but now a very suitable spot having been secured near the Royal Arsenal gates, it is proposed to build a tabernacle to seat 2000, with schools for 1200, at a cost, including site, of about £11,000. Towards that amount they have in cash and promises £2700.

Large and enthusiastic meetings were held on Thursday last, when the memorial stones of the new Tabernacle were laid by Messrs. T. A. Denny, W. C. Edmonds, F. L. Edwards, and Dr. J. A. Spurgeon. The evening meeting in the Drill Hall was full of interest. Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, opened with a sympathetic address. The pastor, Rev. John Wilson, said that the new building had been a necessity for many years. He recounted the history of the work at Woolwich, originated by Mr. Murphy, helped by a number of students from Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College. They hired a small chapel in Charles-street, and purchased it for £150. Soon the chapel grew too small, and, as the building at Parson's-hill was changing hands, they took it over with a debt of £1000 upon it. With some exertion that was cleared off, and £700 was spent in erecting a gallery; but Parson's-hill also got insufficient for their needs, and they had to take temporary refuge in the Drill Hall, for which they had paid £800 in rent. Their number had reached 1200, and the number of communicants was utterly beyond the resources of Parson's-hill. The other speakers included Revs. R. Odery, D. Moore, T. Greenwood, and W. Hamilton, also Mr. R. T. Smith.

HELP FOR BRAZIL.—Mr. Fanstone, who is now at home seeking to increase interest in the Lord's work in Brazil, has issued another "Occasional paper," giving details of Messrs. McCall and Joyce's work at Pernambuco, Mr. Law at Garanhuns, Misses Melville and Vigor, and Mr. Kingston. Mr. Fanstone may be addressed: Campo Verde, Tipperlinn, Edinburgh.

MR. W. R. LANE AT TROWBRIDGE.

MR. LANE has held in this town a fortnight's mission, June 9 to 23. Several of the ministers connected with various churches accepted an invitation to unite with the Y.M.C.A., and a guarantee fund was raised for the purpose. Mr. Lane commenced his meetings on the Sunday in the Town Hall, and continued in St. James' Hall during the week. His afternoon addresses on "The Christian life" were much appreciated by a large number of Christians. To particularise any of his evening discourses would be invidious—they were all sound and to the point, and delivered with exceptional power. Mr. Lane had words for Christians, for churchgoers, and nominal Christians, while he pressed home the Gospel message to the unbeliever. Undoubtedly many were pricked to the heart.

The second Sunday was a memorable occasion. In response to a house-to-house visitation, by which means nearly 3000 invitations, signed by local ministers, were distributed, a remarkable gathering (probably 1500 persons) assembled at an open-air service, held in the Town Hall Gardens, by special permission, in the afternoon. Mr. Lane based a powerful discourse on the character of Herod, entitled the "One besetting sin." Men, he said, might be willing to part with other—perhaps with every other—sin, but this was not enough, as one besetting, over-mastering sin, whatever it might be, would eventually work out their utter wreck and ruin. In the evening the Town Hall Assembly Room was packed in every part, about 800 being present, while many were unable to obtain admission. The text was Pilate's question, "What shall I do, then, with Jesus?" (Matthew xxvii. 22) .On both occasions the singing was led by a united choir, assisted by the Y.M.C.A. band. The week following showed a marked improvement in the attendance, and many who do not attend places of worship were gathered in. Preceding each evening meeting, there was a short open-air service, generally conducted by Mr. Lane, who won the hearts of all by the energy he displayed.

On Wednesday, 19th, Mr. Lane having an engagement in London, the service was taken by Rev. A. C. D. Ryder (rector of Trowbridge) and Rev. A. J. Pearse (Congregational), neither of whom have been in the town very long. The former gentleman, who gave the address on "Rest," has gained for himself golden opinions for the hearty manner in which he has thrown himself into the work of the mission.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Lane addressed himself more particularly to women, and in the evening spoke to men on "The Curse of Manhood." The latter was the largest meeting of men known to have met together outside of politics, and the solemn address made many impressions. On Friday, Mr. Lane's last evening, the hall was crowded by about 500 people, and there was a number of local ministers present. The missioner gave the story of his own conversion while in the Guards, the relation of which was made the opportunity of many personal applications and home thrusts. About 200 subsequently remained to the after meeting, and many stood up as an open confession that they had been led to accept Christ as their Saviour during the mission, or were desirous of so doing, amongst the latter being several of the better class. On Sunday there was a good attendance at the final meeting in the Town Hall. Mr. J. P. Haden conducted, and Mr. W. H. Seagram attended, and gave an impressive address on Paul's assertion, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," etc. At the after-meeting many who had been pricked to the heart during the fortnight made a definite surrender. The visit of Mr. Lane will long be remembered, but though we may never know here the extent of the blessing received we shall know hereafter.

CHAS. CAREY, Hon. Sec. Y.M.C.A.

A QUIET DAY AT JORDANS.

A QUIET day for meditation upon the Word of God and the strengthening of believers is to be held at Jordans Meeting House on July 11. The special subject suggested for consideration is "The Power and Faithfulness of God" as illustrated in the book of Exodus. Meetings will be held at eleven and three. Luncheon (2s.) will be served in a tent, and light refreshments also provided. Conveyances will leave Rickmansworth Station (Metropolitan Railway) at 9.42 a.m., and return in time to catch the 7.19 p.m. up train in the evening. The place of meeting is about seven miles from Rickmansworth, and may also be reached from Woburn Green Station on the G.W.R. Friends intending to be present should communicate with Mr. Colin Taylor, The Bury Cottage, Rickmansworth, so that proper accommodation may be provided.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Over a hundred members have been enrolled in the new Association at Gloucester, which is meeting with very hearty encouragement and support.

Last Thursday the Dublin Association gave a hearty welcome to their general secretary, Mr. William A. Boyd, on his return from the Springfield and Hartfort Conventions.

Professor Barde, of Geneva, who was a conspicuous figure at the Jubilee celebration, was in Scotland last week, and preached and spoke in London on Sunday.

A member of the Jerusalem Y.M.C.A., at present in England, reports that Association work in that city is progressing well. It is now in two sections—the Anglo-Hebrew and the Arabic.

A good example of enthusiasm is afforded by the fact that two members of the Tunbridge Wells Association cycled to London on Founder's Day, attended the various meetings, and returned home that night.

The annual district conference of the Associations for the Dumfries and Galloway district was held at Langholm on June 20. The reports showed an increase of forty-six in the membership, the number of associates being the same as last year.

The Edinburgh district annual conference was held at Edinburgh, June 22. A paper of much interest was read by Mr. Thom, of Kirkcaldy, on "The Law of the Kingdom of God in Social, Commercial, and Spiritual Life." It gave rise to a profitable discussion.

The late hon. sec. of the Colombo Y.M.C.A., Mr. Richards, has returned to this country, and gives a most encouraging account of the work of the Association, which has recently taken premises of its own, and has throughout the past 12 months made considerable progress.

Rev. Charles A. Sadleir, an old member of the Winnipeg Association is now making a short stay in this country prior to going as a missionary to the Araucanian Indians in South Chili. This is, we understand, a pioneer work, undertaken by Mr. Sadleir at the instance of the South American Missionary Society.

The report of the Islington and Highbury Association is a record of vigorous, earnest, resultful work. The Bible class reports fifty average attendance; the Gospel, open-air and other evangelistic efforts have been well maintained. The missionary interest is kept well to the front, several of the members having lately gone into the mission field.

In connection with the youths' department of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. a capital work is being carried on. Many lads have recently been won for the Lord Jesus Christ. Dr. Harry Guinness has kindly consented to conduct a fortnight's mission under the auspices of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. in September next, on behalf of which prayer is very earnestly requested.

A well-attended and very interesting gathering of the North Metropolitan District Union took place on Saturday, June 15, at Mr. S. G. Sheppard's place near Potter's Bar. The afternoon was devoted to recreation. In the evening, after tea, a conference was held, and the following subjects were considered: 1. "How to Extend the Influence of the Y.M.C.A.—(a) By the members themselves; (b) by other means." 2. "The Organisation of Departmental Work in the Y.M.C.A." Papers were read by Messrs. Godfrey, of Tottenham, and A. C. Crane, of Finsbury Park, and a very lively and vigorous discussion ensued.

The annual summer meeting of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Association was held last week at Jesmond Dene. The secretary (Mr. Henry Armstrong) gave an account of the many departments, recounting something of their religious work, beginning with a devotional meeting on Sunday mornings; the afternoon Bible-class with an average attendance of 250; the pleasant Sunday afternoon meetings in the Art Gallery, with an attendance averaging fully 500; lodging-house visitation by members, and large meetings held on Sunday nights in the People's Palace, attended by from 1,100 to 1,200 people. The spread of evening educational classes had affected their attendances, and altogether they were afraid they should have a deficit to report this year of £150 or £200. They had not had sufficiently good premises to cope with the work in Newcastle. For three years they had been trying to get over the difficulty of their position, and now they had secured the premises adjoining their own, and hoped to be able to set on foot a scheme for a new building which would cover the site of the old building as well as that of the other premises which friends had purchased.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—Sir George Williams again entertained women of the Strand and locality in Exeter Hall last week. He was one of the first to arrive, and the last to leave the meeting, working heartily all the time with the many friends of the Society who were present.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Scottish Y.W.C.A. Council are arranging to hold a conference at Strathpeffer on July 12, and 13. It is hoped that Hon. Emily Kinnaird, Mrs. Armitstead, Miss Murray Gartshore, Mrs. W. M. Oatts, Miss Brown Douglas, and other workers will be present.

The annual sale of work on behalf of the funds of Princess House, 106 and 108, Brompton-road, has just been held. The sale was opened on Thursday by the Lady Mary Glyn, and on Friday by Miss Morley. A sum of £80 was realised for the good work going on at the institute and home.

The last workers' conference for the present was held on Thursday, 20th, at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street. The Hon. Mrs. Waller presided, and the work of the Y.W.C.A. in India was the subject of the addresses. Sister Lucy, from Ceylon, told of four Bible-classes, chiefly for Eurasians. Miss Nisbet spoke of work in out-of-the-way places in India, such as railway junctions, etc. An Indian Princess, the Karwarani Horman Singh, testified to the good done by the Y.W.C.A. in India, and said she was seeking to start branches at Simla and Lucknow. Mrs. Orgain and the Hon. E. Kinnaird spoke of work in Madras and Bombay.

The annual meetings of the Ipswich Branch were held last week in the Council Chamber of the Town Hall. In the afternoon the chair was taken by Mr. J. H. Holmes-White. Miss Ardill, District-Referee for London, spoke of the work of the association at home and abroad. The large evening meeting was presided over by Mr. C. H. Cowell. Miss Ardill spoke on the Association, its "Getting and Giving Side," and afterwards gave an evangelistic address. Canon Garrett is president, and the great success of the branch is largely due to the personal interest and untiring labours of the Hon. Sec., Miss Eva Garrett. An endeavour is being made to raise £2000 for the purchase of "Gainsborough House" as an institute and boarding house, and towards this sum £500 has already been secured.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

In connection with the Fresh Air Fortnight scheme of the Glasgow Evangelistic Association, another home was opened on June 22 at Maybole. It is named "Ashgrove Home for City Children," and has been gifted by two sisters, themselves devoted workers for Christ. Lord and Lady Ailsa, Lord and Lady Overtoun, Mr. Alex Mackeith, and other friends of the children took part in the formal opening.

An address on "Town and Country Work in Summer" was given on the 17th inst. at the Glasgow noon meeting, by Rev. J. Telfer, dealing with methods of work and incentives to activity during the long days and holiday times. The speaker expressed his conviction that country districts were more hopeful for evangelistic effort at present than towns, the stolid indifference of the masses of people in cities not having yet reached country populations. He advocated Christian service by personal conversations and by visits to isolated cottages and hamlets, as well as by open-air meetings and similar methods. In our large cities it had become a grave question for all Christians how to stay the tide of Sunday holiday-making, which was so enormously on the increase.

IRISH NOTES.

Much regret is felt in Waterford and the south of Ireland at the death of Commander Saunders, R.N., who, during his sojourn of nearly six years in Waterford, identified himself with every Christian and philanthropic work.

The Irish Methodist Conference has been in session during the past eight or nine days in Belfast, under the presidency of Rev. Walford Green, of London. The membership returns showed a net increase of 224 members, and all the departments of the Church had been well maintained.

In the south of Ireland much sorrow is felt at the death of Rev. W. F. Maunsell, rector of Kildimo, co. Limerick, who has passed away after a brief illness. Deceased was the oldest minister in the diocese of Limerick, having been ordained in 1843, and he was very popular with all creeds and classes.

ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.—At St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Sunday night, there was a special appeal on behalf of the funds of this college, and a choir of mixed voices from amongst the pupils took part in the musical service. Rev. F. Relton, curate of Chelsea, who was the preacher, founded an eloquent discourse upon "Hope," and spoke of the advantages that had accrued to those bereft of sight by the education given by Dr. Campbell.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Presidents of the seven sections of Methodism have signed a strong manifesto in favour of the Local Veto Bill.

The death is announced of Mr. William Bunting, of Colchester, a temperance worker, who had been an abstainer for fifty-six years.

Amongst other tokens that temperance is beginning to engage the serious attention of French reformers, at Nimes a "League against the Progress of Alcohol" has been formed.

The Mayor of Southport (Alderman Dr. Wood) has undertaken to pay the cost of a plébiscite of the town, to obtain the votes of the population for prohibition and for reduction of licences, as proposed in the Local Veto Bill.

An appeal to clergymen, ministers, and church officers for the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper has recently been issued by the Women's Total Abstinence Union. The Union holds its autumn meetings at Sheffield, Sept. 30 to Oct. 2.

A cruise to the northern capitals takes place in August next, when a series of public receptions will be arranged in St. Petersburg and other capitals. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard hope to travel by the steamer, to present the Polyglot petition to the Governments at Christiania, Stockholm, Copenhagen, and St. Petersburg.

The Railway Temperance Union held the other day a fête at Wembley Park, at which Mr. M. MacInnes, M.P., remarked that to all men who were engaged in callings in which the lives and safety of the public were concerned, temperance was indispensable. On the great Atlantic liners not a drop of intoxicating drink was touched by the crew.

The Band of Hope Union reports a membership of 2,538,789, which with other juvenile temperance organisations gives a total of 2,737, 394 youthful teetotalers. The report of the school scheme states that the temperance lectures are still being delivered in day-schools, and the effort is regarded by many as the most promising branch of temperance propaganda.

Mr. John Morley, replying the other day to a deputation of licensed victuallers, said he believed it was a fact that the Duke of Westminster had closed thirty-seven public-houses out of forty-eight on his estates. The Government wished that the people should have the power of limiting or prohibiting public-houses in their midst much as an individual owner of an estate had.

Canada is awake to the evils of intemperance. We learn that the Dominion House of Commons has passed a resolution in favour of "prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor, except for scientific, medicinal, and sacramental purposes." An amendment was, however, also carried, providing that no attempt be made to give legislative effect to the resolution until the opinion of the Imperial Council has been obtained as to the right of the Dominion to enact such a law.

The Earl of Kimberley, replying to a request that he would receive a deputation from the United Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of the Native Races by the Liquor Traffic, said that while the Government is fully alive to the importance of the subject, it has no reason to believe that other Powers would be prepared to revise the tariff system agreed to at Brussels, before the year 1898, when the term of six years, specified in the Act for the purposes of revision, will expire; but the Committee may be satisfied that advantage will be taken of any earlier opportunity that might occur for calling attention to the subject, with the view of dealing with the evils which the traffic causes to the native populations.

"LUX," the weekly Christian Evidence paper, founded by the late E. J. Celestine Edwards, is now edited by Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, who has long been a valiant champion of the truth as against error, ignorance, and superstition. Last week's issue proposed the question, "Is Lux to live or die?" It seems that the undertaking is sadly embarrassed by debt. Copies of the paper, and particulars of present need, may be had by addressing the Editor of Lux, 18, Paternoster-row, E.C.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For Gospel meetings to be conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, at the Hall-by-the-Sea, every Sunday, from June 30 to July 28.—For blessing on the annual visit of Mr. J. J. Browne (L.C.M.) to the Potteries during the wakes at Burslem from 29th inst., for four days. Many open-air and indoor meetings will be held.—For much blessing to result from a convention for the promotion of Christian unity and holiness, to be held in a tent at Melksham, Wilts, July 10.—For one who is passing under affliction and trouble, that he may be sustained under it, and soon delivered out of it.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Newton Jones has conducted a mission at Ryecroft Congregational Church, Walsall. The school numbers about 900. The meetings have been well attended, and the inquiry room has been filled by the scholars. Some have decided for Christ. Teachers and others bear testimony to renewed spiritual life. Mr. Jones will hold services for young people on the sands at Lowestoft from July 15 to August 3.

Ballinasloe, Ireland.—Messrs. Carleton and Miskimmin, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, has been conducting a six weeks' mission here in a wooden hall. The interest from the beginning to the close of the meetings grew and deepened nightly. So much so that it was decided to continue the services a week longer than the time originally fixed. At the closing meeting Mr. Carleton spoke with much power, and the Holy Spirit has blessed the Word to the salvation of souls. Many have professed in Christ, and believers have been helped. H. B.

Hackney Wick.—A seven days' Gospel temperance mission has been held at the Jubilee Hall, Hackney Wick, by Mr. James Lowings. Considering the sceptical darkness which surrounds this neighbourhood, the meetings were well attended, and resulted in blessing, the Spirit of God moving among the people. A number professed to have found the Lord to the joy of their souls. Twenty pledges were taken, and many Christians have been renewed in spirit and confirmed in strength. The prayers of God's people are asked for the workers at this hall, situated among so much unbelief.

Mr. Clement Palser has come to Knoxville, Iowa, from Chicago, where God had been most graciously blessing his preaching to the conversion of numbers of souls. He has been holding special services in our church during the past three weeks. In spite of the heat, the church has been crowded, and God is very graciously blessing his ministry. Mr. Palser's Bible-readings are greatly valued and have created a deep interest, which has extended to Christians and ministers of all denominations. We thank God for this visit, which we hope may be extended for some weeks. We shall value the prayers of Christians in England that the interest thus awakened may be deepened and continued. W. A. McKee.

Mr. W. Harry Dawe, of Sermon Lane Mission, has closed a fourteen days' mission in the Tolbooth Hall, Glasgow. From the first blessing has been granted and souls saved. The daily Bible readings have been greatly appreciated. The majority of those who have come out for Christ are men. Amongst these a music-hall singer came to the hall one night, and, to use his own words, was "knocked flat." He entered the enquiry-room, and was led to the Saviour. Two nights after he brought his wife, and she too is now rejoicing in Jesus. On Saturday night he sang for Jesus in the Tolbooth Hall. This is a go-ahead mission, conducted by the brothers Anderson, of the Polytechnic. All the workers are alive to their responsibility, and working together they see good fruit of their labours.

Mr. Henry Thorne has arranged to conduct special services at Margate, Derby, Bristol, Plymouth, Aberdeen, Glasgow, etc., and is now completing his autumn and winter programme. Friends desiring to arrange for missions in connection with churches or societies should apply to Mr. James Pearse, Exeter Hall, London.

BRAZIL.—Pastor Salomon L. Ginsburg writes from Campos, State of Rio:—"The Lord has at last enabled us to buy a nice lot for building. It is situated in the centre of the city, opposite the new market, on a big square. It has cost £200, but it is worth the money. Now we need £1000 to build a neat little chapel. Who will help the cause of Christ in this dark, neglected region? Last month I baptized twenty-eight candidates, and this month four more; altogether this year we have thirty-six additions, and many are preparing to make their profession of faith. Our great obstacle has been the lack of a hall large enough to hold the many who wish to learn of Jesus and his love. Brethren, pray for us and help us."

AMRITSAR, N. INDIA.—Miss S. S. Hewlett, of the St. Catherine's Hospital, Amritsar, writes:—"We feel led to make an earnest appeal for more lady workers. There is here a large and growing institution, with wide open doors all round, with scope for nursing the sick, studying medicine to a modest extent, tending delicate children unfit for ordinary orphanage life, influencing and teaching young native workers in training, leading on, and developing Bible-women, instructing inquirers and converts, and joining in promising and fruitful work among the blind. Ladies can also have here exceptionally good opportunities for studying the vernaculars. Those who can come at their own charges can obtain full particulars from us; while any who could not wholly or even in part do that, should not be deterred from responding if they feel this a call."

PERSONALIA.

Miss Louisa Procter is now in London, and will be happy to tell of the progress of work at Schwifat, Mount Lebanon, Beyrout, Syria, as opportunities afford. Address, 78, Mildmay-park, N.

Mrs. Amanda Smith hopes to sail for America on Saturday next (29th). Her farewell address will be given on Friday evening, at 8 p.m., at the Bayswater Y.M.C.A., 172, Queen's-road, W.

Dr. Parker entered on the twenty-sixth year of his ministry last Sunday. At the morning service he informed his congregation that he had decided to relinquish the fixed yearly sum hitherto paid to him in favour of such absolutely free-will offerings—whether much or little—as the general congregation might feel moved to make.

Dr. W. Gunn.—After a furlough of about fifteen months at home, during which he has been engaged giving information regarding work in the New Hebrides, this missionary returns to the islands, leaving London July 12. He will now have charge of Aneityum, where a new language has to be acquired, and will also continue the work in Futuna.

Miss Riddiford, one of the passengers thrown from the char-a-banc overturned at Beachy Head on Monday, June 10, received severe injury to her knee and shock, but was able to return to London on Friday last. She was for many years a worker at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, but is now matron of one of the reformatory homes, Parsons Green.

Mr. G. Rapkin, known to many of our readers as having assisted Rev. James Neil in his lectures on Palestine life and scenery as confirmatory of Holy Scripture, is organising a Gospel mission in the Foresters' Hall, Margate. The meetings begin on Sunday, July 6, and include an afternoon Bible-class. Friends desiring to communicate with Mr. Rapkin may address, Elliott's Hotel, Hawley-street, Margate.

EVIAN LES BAINS, FRANCE.

The workers in this place have much cause to thank God and take courage. The Gospel Temperance and other meetings have been well attended, and care for the sick, and visiting among the poor has been carried on with much blessing during the past year. At present the need of a small house where the sick can be received and cared for is greatly felt. There is no Protestant hospital, or refuge for the aged, or for young girls to be rescued from a life of sin, and trained for a better, in all Haute Savoie, except the small mission hospital at Thonon les Bains.

Last winter, at one time, there was a sick girl three hours away in a hopeless condition imploring help; in another village, one and a-half hour away, a woman requiring constant care and nursing; and half an-hour away, a woman who was given up by all neighbours, but nursed back to life by five weeks of incessant watching. These could all have been brought under the Gospel influence, and loving care given to the nearest one, if only there had been the possibility of having them all under one roof. Going from village to village involves an immense expenditure of time, strength, and money, and the constant care which these sick ones require simply cannot be given.

In one family visited by the nurse, three little children died, in another family, at the same time, a sick husband and a little scalded child lay in bed together. The women have very little idea of nursing, and often have they said, "It is your care that has saved my child's life." How we do long, if it be God's will, to have a small and modest cottage hospital, where we can receive and care for these sad cases. It is thought that £100 will open and keep it for one year.

Full particulars and reports of the work will gladly be sent, on application to the Misses Wellington, 15, Melrose-place, Clifton, Bristol.

BREMEN.—A correspondent writes:—"During my frequent visits to this place and Bremerhaven, I have been struck with the absence of provision for the spiritual welfare of the many British seamen visiting these ports. For the last three or four years I have been in the habit of visiting the docks, principally in Bremerhaven, on the Lord's Day, distributing tracts and speaking to the men. I recently found that there was a meeting (in German) held on Sunday afternoon, in a room near the docks, for seamen. The hire of room, etc., is borne by some Christian friends, and the missionary, Herr Mousee, is also engaged in colportage work amongst the working classes in the town of Bremerhaven and neighbourhood. He can also speak English, and has visited some of the British ships and steamers. Christian friends who may be visiting these parts during the summer may easily find work for the Master, and their help to those already engaged will be very welcome."

OBITUARY.

MISS EMILY MURRAY.

The death is announced of Miss Emily Murray, of St. Clare, Upper Walmer, sister of Miss Charlotte Murray, the well-known poetess, and herself a writer of verses. While living in the expectation of the Lord's return she was ready and willing to depart. She suffered much from physical infirmity.

LADY SMITH.

The death is announced of Lady Smith, of 30, Berkeley-square, W., at the advanced age of 93. She was the daughter of Mr. F. Pinney, of Somerton Erleigh, Somerset, and in 1828 married Sir John James Smith, Bart. Her loss will be keenly felt by many, and her generous help will be missed by a large circle of Christian workers and mission agencies. We hope shortly to give a portrait and sketch of the lamented lady.

MR. GEORGE SMITH, COALVILLE.

This worker, whose name is so well known in connection with gipsy, canal, and brickfield children, passed away at his residence, Crick, Rugby, on Friday evening last, in his sixty-fifth year, leaving a widow and six children. He was unconscious for twenty-four hours previous to his death, and passed away very peacefully. For the last five or six months he has been a great sufferer, as he has been affected with cancer of the liver. He was seen in the lobby of the House of Commons as recently as five weeks ago attending to his Movable Dwellings Bill for the registration, sanitation, and education of the gipsy and van people. He always thought of others before himself, and sacrificed almost everything he possessed to carry on his work for the brickfield and canal children's and gipsy children's education.

GIPSY W. SMITH, ASHTEAD.

This evangelist was engaged to take a fortnight's mission at the tent, 550, King's-road, Chelsea. The opening service commenced June 9. Being unwell and under the doctor's care, he could not take Sunday meetings, but he came Monday, and took the evening meeting, though weak. He also took it again on Tuesday evening. He was worse on Wednesday, and got gradually worse, and at times suffered great pain. From the first the doctor had every hope he would pull through, but on Tuesday last week there was a sudden change for the worse. He gradually sank, and breathed his last at 11 a.m., death being the result of an internal malady. He was conscious up to the last. A few minutes before he died his wife asked, "Is Jesus peace?" He answered "Home." His last words were, "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus"; then he fell asleep. J. A.

The suddenness of the death occasioned a feeling of awe among those who had attended the mission; and subsequent meetings conducted by Mr. W. Hodson were largely attended. Mr. Smith was converted in 1880, and his one sorrow was that he had only a wrecked physical constitution to devote to the Saviour's service. All who knew him esteemed him for his exemplary life and devoted labours.

FIGUERAS EVANGELICAL MISSION.

The new medical mission building is finished. It is necessary that the full amount of the contract, £500, be paid without delay, so that nothing be owing to our Roman Catholic master-builder and workmen. Our builder, is, of course, a Roman Catholic, and before undertaking the work was obliged to ask permission from his priest, who, on giving it, said, "The Protestants will pay you better, and more promptly than our own people." We are, therefore, the more anxious to keep up our reputation. At present, however, our banker writes us that our funds are exhausted.

The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Dr. Macwhirter Dunbar, Clapham Common, S.W.—Yours sincerely Emily Lopez Rodriguez.

Figueras, Gerona, Spain.

THE FLORENCE PROTESTANT ORPHANAGE FOR GIRLS provides a refuge for the orphans of Protestant Italians, and enables colporteurs and missionaries to secure a good education for their daughters on very moderate terms. Want of adequate support cripples the work to a serious degree, and last year it was needful to reduce the number of the children to thirty-eight, whereas in previous years forty-eight have been received. The recent earthquakes in Florence so injured the building that it is important that the repairs should be effected without delay. The treasurer of the Ladies' Committee in London, Miss Reynett, 3, Cranley-place, Onslow-square, S.W., writes that in case funds do not come in for this special purpose, it may be needful to forego for this year the children's seaside outing. This would be a very regrettable necessity.

The Book World.

DR. A. A. BONAR'S REMINISCENCES.

Reminiscences of Andrew A. Bonar, D.D., edited by his daughter Majory, is a beautiful book. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The pages abound in instructive incidents and godly counsels which all may read with profit; the pastoral experiences and manse memories will have special attractions for those who discharge ministerial duties. While the Memoir of McCheyne continues to be a spiritual classic, there must be a keen interest in the personality of its revered author; and this admirable volume and Dr. Bonar's "Diary" afford a good idea of the man and his faith and practice. There are many beautiful letters, some of them highly characteristic, and then a selection of sermons and addresses of peculiar interest and worth. The volume opens with an excellent portrait of Dr. Bonar at the age of eighty.

VIKINGS OF TO-DAY.

In this fascinating volume Dr. W. T. Grenfell, of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, tells the story of a heroic enterprise in the "land of desolation, hard, relentless, unsympathetic, and cruel," carrying the Gospel message and the ministry of healing to "men trying to hold their own among fogs and icebergs, against hostile surroundings, and to earn a living in defiance of dreary odds." The writer gives a general account of the country and people of Labrador — so little known — and summarises the efforts of the Mission to brighten the lives of these brave toilers of the North. The numerous and excellent pictures are from photographs taken in Labrador—an area, by the way, as large as the British Isles, France, and Austria—and stated to be "one of the most uninviting spots on earth." But, as the brave old missionary is reported to have said of a fever-haunted region, "There are men there, and we must go in Christ's name to them." The circumstances under which these men and women live and labour are clearly described, while the working and evil effects of the truck system are explained. How the Mission ships found their way to this people; how brave young doctors and two heroic nursing sisters have ministered to the sick, while telling the sweet story of the Gospel to those to whom it is all so new and strange, are here told simply and in a way which must stir every reader, and win many fresh friends to this Mission. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

A SCOTTISH THEOLOGIAN.

The late Dr. John Cairns was in all senses a massive man—in physical build, in mental stature, and in spiritual attainment. His Life and Letters, recently prepared by Dr. A. R. McEwen, of Glasgow, is a noble and worthy record of a life of rare devotion to duty and unselfish service rendered to Christ and his Church. Among the many and conspicuous gifts of the late Principal Cairns was that of letter writing. This talent he freely exercised throughout his life, to high ends and under a deep sense of responsibility. A large portion of this bulky volume is taken up with extracts from these letters, and very delightful, inspiring reading they afford. They show how a man may perpetuate his influence and serve his generation after he is gone. The biographer has done his work in a manner beyond praise. The lowly origin of the great Scottish pastor and professor, his sturdy incorruptible character, his high culture wedded to singular humility and lowliness of mind, his vigorous defences of the Orthodox faith, and his unselfish, devoted life—all these are told in a way that will give this biography a high and permanent place in the class of literature to which it belongs. It is to be regretted that a man of such capacious mental equipment and such clear vision did not produce any literary work adequate to his powers. All the more, posterity will prize this delightful chronicle of his life-work, which ought to be in the library of every young man who values rectitude of character, nobility of aim, sweetness of disposition, and undeviating fidelity to conscience. May John Cairns have many successors in the land that gave him birth. (15s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Ministering Children.—This well-known tale, dedicated to childhood, by Maria Louisa Charlesworth, is now in its 276th thousand, and cheap editions have been issued. (Paper covers 1s., cloth 1s. 6d. Seeley & Co.)

Ben Hur: A tale of the time of our Lord. By L. Wallace. There are serious objections to this kind of writing. The pages, however, evince erudition as well as demonstrate a fertile imagination on the part of the author. (2s. Partridge.)

The Wild Flowers Drawing and Painting Book, is the title of a useful series (4d. each), published by Messrs. Cassell. Each of the six parts gives drawings of twelve plants, with instructions for painting by F. Edward Hulme, F.L.S., F.S.A.

Friendly Greetings, Vol. XXX. (Religious Tract Society). The half-yearly volume of this well-known illustrated monthly will be welcomed in many homes. The Gospel is set forth in incident and narrative, accompanied by bright pictures, which will gain a hearing for the truths it contains. (2s. 6d.)

"Little Folks" Midsummer Volume. This volume (a charming gift-book) has six coloured plates as well as many other pictures. The letterpress is entertaining and instructive; and it is not difficult to account for the growing popularity of the publication. (3s. 6d. and 5s. Cassell & Co.)

Charles Eversley's Choice. By the late Emma J. Worboise (1s. 6d. J. Clarke & Co.) This story, which is said to be a true one, tells how a noble choice for God and conscience, made in the face of great temptation, was rewarded, and how an opposite choice worked out its due result. An excellent little book for youths.

The Reformation in England is the sixth "Present Day Primer" of the Religious Tract Society. (1s.) It is from the pen of Mr. W. H. Beckett, the author of a larger work on the same subject. The book should prove of real service to young students, as a comprehensive introduction to an important subject.

The Furled Banner. By Heather Grey (E. Stock). The story of a noble young life, consecrated to missionary service, withheld by too fond parents, and then suddenly cut short. We do not know that God is pleased often thus to deal with those who hold back their dear ones, but, apart from this, there is much to stir the heart in the devotion of one who goes as "substitute."

The Bible Hymnal, compiled by Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, has now been issued with music, edited by Edward J. Sturges, organist of St. James's, Hatcham. The tunes seem to have been selected with care from the best sources. They also include many new compositions, several of which are likely to become general favourites. (3s. 6d. net. R. W. Hunter, Edinburgh.)

Founders and Presidents of the Bible Society, by Henry Morris, is a very instructive outline of the rise and progress of a great Christian agency. Clapham worthies have a place among the founders; while the presidents of whom sketches are given, are Lord Teignmouth, Lord Bexley, and the Earl of Shaftesbury. The volume is amply illustrated (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

The Girl's Own Paper Extra Summer Number contains a complete story, entitled "Adelaide's Reward," by A New Writer, and several attractive sketches and useful articles, fully illustrated. The Boy's Own Extra opens with "Stuck in the Mud," by Ascott R. Hope, and has contributions by David Ker, Herbert Russell, and other favourite writers. (6d. each. Religious Tract Society.)

Picture Books for the Nursery.—The Religious Tract Society has issued a series of very bright books for little folks:—Our Little Dots' Playtime Pictures, Our Little Dots' Pets, Pretty Pictures for our Little Dots, and Pictures and Rhymes for Our Little Dots. Each comprises eighty pages of pictures, coloured and plain, with rhymes and stories in simple words and large type. (In handsome coloured cover, 1s. each.)

Memorials on a Short Life, edited by the Bishop of Stepney (T. Fisher Unwin). This brief biographical sketch of the late Mr. W. F. A. Gaussen, is a most interesting memorial of one who showed much literary promise, but was cut off at an early age. Three Russian lectures and a translation of a Russian tale are appended as samples of Mr. Gaussen's work. In his untimely death, England lost a gifted exponent of Sclavonic life and literature.

The Congo for Christ, by John Brown Myers, Association Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, tells the story of the Congo Mission with admirable succinctness. The book is not only a narrative of devoted labour for Christ, but a powerful constructive appeal for prayer and work for Africa. While giving special attention to the operations of the B.M.S., Mr. Myers does not overlook other agencies; and his work, at once compendious and up-to-date, supplies a distinct need in missionary literature. (1s. 6d. Partridge.)

Pioneer Life and Work in New Guinea. By James Chalmers. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) His earlier volumes of missionary sketches being out of print, Mr. Chalmers describes, in this handsome work, his varied and heroic movements and labours from 1877 to 1894. Since visiting England eight years ago, Mr. Chalmers has explored along the shores of the Gulf of Papua, and has penetrated much further up the great Fly River than any other European, and these journeyings he has pursued entirely unarmed. This volume not only contains the substance of his previous books, but describes his latest and most adventurous travels. Mr. Chalmers is a model pioneer missionary, at once persevering and patient, shrewd and winning, and his book will occupy high rank among records of its kind. The many illustrations include excellent portraits of the author and Dr. W. G. Lawes, of Port Moresby.

The Lord's Prayer for Believers: Thoughts on St. John xvii. By Rev. Marcus Rainsford, B.A., minister of Belgrave Chapel. (5s. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) This volume of expositions has for some time been out of print; the fourth edition, carefully revised and remodelled, will doubtless be welcome to many Christian people. The pages have special value as opening up one of the most precious portions of Holy Scripture; and they have a peculiar interest, owing to the personality of their author. Mr. Rainsford treats the great intercessory prayer of our Lord with remarkable freshness and force, ever bringing forward other Scriptures in its elucidation. From the opening clause, "These words spake Jesus," to the last, "I in them" (surely very significant expressions, alike in place and order) the chapter is expounded, the volume extending to 480 pages. Those who are content to let Holy Writ explain itself, and who give due weight to the teachings of spiritual experience, will read this volume with pleasure and profit.

Songs in the Night is a series of assorted leaflets, suitable for enclosure in letters or general distribution. (4d., the packet of twenty-five. Partridge.)

Fruitful in Every Good Work; and An Unanswerable Question. Two useful booklets by Canon Christopher (W. Hunt & Co.), well adapted for wide circulation.

"Good" and "Bad" Boys is the title of a tract which the parents of "unpromising" boys might read with advantage. (Copies free, from Warren, Hall, and Lovitt, 88, Camden-road, N.W.)

The World's Saturday Night; or, Nearing the End of the Age, is the text of a lecture given by W. Percy Hicks at the Clapham Y.M.C.A. (1d. "Christian Herald" Office.)

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons are issuing their usual serial entitled Foreign Languages Made Easy. The June part (3d.) introduces the study of French, German, Spanish, and Italian.

For Thy Name's Sake: Considerations based upon God's revelation of Himself to Moses, is an instructive booklet by John Edwin Brigg, vicar of Hepworth, Huddersfield. (1d. Partridge.)

Messrs. Penman & Co. have issued an attractive series of folded cards, each bearing a Gospel message in the very words of Scripture. Each fold is of distinctive tint, and the series is called "Dublin." (1s. per hundred, assorted.)

Messrs. G. Philip & Son have published a very interesting and useful wall-sheet—a map showing the religions of the world, with the stations of the London Missionary Society. Friends of missions will value this publication. (6d.)

Saving Words. By Cheyne Brady. (Partridge. 6d. packet.) These Gospel tracts will be found most useful to tract distributors, setting forth, as they do, the Gospel in terse and telling fashion, and pointing faithfully to the saviour of sinners.

Walks in Belgium, edited by Percy Lindley (30, Fleet-street, E.C.), is an admirably clear and concise guide book to one of our nearest continental neighbour lands. A chapter on the French Ardennes is added in this year's edition. There are new maps and a number of illustrations.

The Graphic Summer Number this year consists of a river story, entitled "A Tale of the Thames." The story has been written by "the lazy minstrel," Mr. J. Ashby-Sterry, and it is profusely illustrated by Mr. W. Hatherell, R.I. Two coloured plates are given away with the number.

THE ATTACK ON CHINESE MISSIONARIES.—Notwithstanding the fact that three distinct telegraph routes exist between Cheng Tu, the capital of Sechuan, where the Christian missions were represented to have been destroyed, and Shanghai, no information can be obtained on the subject. The Viceroys of Kiangsu at Nanking, and of Hoopeh at Woochang, have ordered the Chinese telegraph authorities to absolutely refuse the transit of any messages from and to Cheng Tu.

DR. BARNARDO'S BOYS.—On Monday the Lecture Hall at Aldersgate-street was crowded at the noon hour of prayer by a large party of boys—numbering, it was stated, 204, who are to start this day for Canada. Earnest prayer was made on their behalf, as also for the restoration of Dr. Barnardo himself, now laid aside through ill-health. Rev. W. J. Mayers gave some details as to the progress of the emigration work. When this party starts 7650 boys and girls will have been emigrated, while there are now 5000 in the various Homes. Forty-five of the present party (from the Labour Home) are going to Manitoba to the Farm Colony; forty-five little fellows are to be boarded out; while about a hundred will go out to situations. For all the future of these boys, the speaker asked earnest prayer.

CONSUMPTION, AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.
INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

NINETY-SECOND INTERVIEW,

With Mr. JAMES LEWTHWAITE, 12, Stanley-grove, Sale, Manchester, relative to a Youth.

CASE OF "INCURABLE" CONSUMPTION.

See Appendix to Mr. Congreve's work on "Consumption," page 65.

Mr. Lewthwaite is a well-known merchant at Sale, who has also taken a prominent part in religious work. It was in connection with his Sunday-school that he became acquainted with the young man Hodcroft, who is referred to in the appendix mentioned above.

I called upon Mr. Lewthwaite recently, to make enquiry. "At the time this lad came under Mr. Congreve's treatment" (Mr. Lewthwaite said) "his condition was very bad. He had been ill for a year, showing every symptom of Consumption. He was so thin he was like a shadow, and so weak that he had to be carried to and from his bed. The doctor who attended him said his case was hopeless; no one who knew him thought it possible he could get better. But he did. Under Mr. Congreve's care he gradually recovered, and ultimately got quite well. He is a fine young fellow now, going to his business in Manchester day by day. I see him every week. His parents—and, for the matter of that, everyone—attribute his recovery to Mr. Congreve's treatment."

Like the majority of those who are grateful for lives preserved, Mr. Lewthwaite gave me authority to tell, for the benefit of others, this brief but interesting story.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

TO METAMORPHOSE FAT PERSONS.

We were reading in the Penny Illustrated Paper how to reduce obesity, wherein it says in that very excellent publication: "The corpulent will be glad to learn how to lose two stone in about a month with benefit to health, strength, and muscle, by a comparatively new system. It is a singular fact that the patient, returning quickly to a healthy state, with increased activity of brain, digestive, and other organs, naturally requires more food than hitherto; yet, notwithstanding this, he absolutely loses in weight one to two pounds daily, as the weighing-machine will prove. The book, 'Corpulency, and the Cure,' (256 pages), containing the 'recipe' can be had gratis from Mr. F. C. Russell, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C., by sending cost of postage, 4d." We had the curiosity to send to this specialist, and found to our surprise that he had discovered a simple herbal remedy, most pleasant to the taste, which entirely disposed of the necessity of starving oneself if he wished to be rid of all superfluous matter. An interesting point which goes to prove that the almost magical compound is beyond doubt harmless is that in prescribing it in a tentative way to lean persons, or rather to those who carry no superfluity of fat beyond that which is required as fuel for Nature's furnace, the medicine is absolutely inoperative, attacking only that unhealthy, disease-creating waste accumulation which is the burden of the fat creature's existence. In many cases where people take decoctions reputed to be new medical discoveries to cure some specific disease, they may recover by the action of the medicine, or Nature may have effected her own cure. In the case of corpulency, if a simple remedy undertakes to reduce a person, say 7 lb. in a week, all that one has to do is to get weighed, and thus prove it conclusively. So it is with Mr. Russell's compound, but he asks you to prove it in twenty-four hours only.

The following is an extract from Leeds Times, December 1 1894.

CURIOUS EXPERIMENTS IN CORPULENCY.

A Mr. Russell, author and specialist in obesity, has experimentally tried the effect of administering large doses, to moderate lean persons, of his well-known herbal discovery, which is so marvellously effectual in reducing superfluous fat, with the result that there is not the slightest alteration or diminution of weight recorded, thereby proving conclusively to our minds that it is only the unhealthy adipose waste tissue which is destroyed, for after dispensing a few fluid ounces of his remarkable vegetable compounds he succeeds in destroying the diseased fatty mass at the rate of from 2 lb. to even 12 lb. in seven days. There can be no ambiguity about it, for any person can test this for themselves by standing upon a weighing machine. He explains that all lean persons carry a certain amount of fat necessary for the natural production of heat in the body, but Nature has only stored up her requisite stock in the healthy system, which she most zealously guards, and thus declines to part with an ounce to the persuasions of Mr. Russell's vegetable tonic, however immoderate the dose may be, which testifies abundantly to the fact that it is only a chemical solvent of insalubrious adipose tissue. There is no doubt that the inventor of the composition must have possessed a profound vegetal knowledge in selecting this simple but peculiar combination.

Those who resort to the pernicious products of the mineral kingdom, or even the deleterious sections of the vegetable world, doubtless can decoct something powerful but injurious in its action; such, however, require no laudatory commendation; but Mr. Russell (we herewith append his address: Woburn House, 27, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C., the author of "Corpulency, and the Cure," 256 pages, price 4d. stamps), makes no secret of the simplicity of his treatment, and avers that the decoction can be drunk as a refreshing summer drink, pleasant to the palate, yet having sufficient effect, although perfectly harmless, to remove generally 2 lb. or more in twenty-four hours. We think stout persons would do well to send for his book, which can be obtained through booksellers, or at the address given above.

Poor Jewish Children in Whitechapel, Stepney, and Mile End.
The Jewish Missionaries of the London City Mission wish to give 1000 poor Jewish Children a Day in the Country. The cost will be about £50. In addition, if funds permit, it is desired to send away, for one or two weeks, many of the sick and ailing Jewish children. But for the efforts of the Missionaries these little ones will get no change from the dreary courts and alleys of East London.
For 10s. a child can be sent to the country for two weeks.
Will Readers of THE CHRISTIAN give these little ones a sight of the beautiful country?
Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, or by the Secretary, Mr. G. R. COLE, 8, Bridewell-place, E.C. c5221

Notes and Comments.

THIS year's Mildmay Conference has brought before us the greatness and glory of Christ, linking his earthly with his heavenly ministry, and setting forth his human and Divine offices as they relate to man's redemption and the realisation of God's purposes. Those who attended the Conference were led by earnest brethren to consider the Great Teacher, to glory in the Kinsman-Redeemer, and to celebrate the praise of Him whose right it is to reign. In Christ alone do the offices of Prophet, Priest, and King find perfection and completion; and many helpful thoughts on these glorious functions and their fulfilling Lord will be found in the addresses which we report in our present issue. Some additional notes remain for publication next week; and we are sure that profit will attend a prayerful study of our report.

Those who are calling upon God to revive his work will be struck by the close bearing of Christ's offices upon that work, and the believer's part in it. "Who teacheth like Him" the way of God? By his sacrifice, and by it alone, have we been brought nigh to the Father. Again, to Him is the kingdom and the power and the glory. As we realise these blessed truths, so fundamental in their character, and so far-reaching in their application, we see that hearty delighting in Christ, with perfect submission to Him, is the secret of abiding in God's favour, and the only spirit or frame of mind in which we can hope to have a share in work for God. The Prophet, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; the Priest, girt with the robes of holiness and truth; and the King, full of grace and glory: in all things Christ Jesus the Lord hath the pre-eminence. And as we realise this, and live in the power of communion with Him, we shall be in harmony with God the Father, and become channels of Holy Spirit blessing,—rooted and built up, stablished in the faith, abounding in thanksgiving, and furnished completely unto every good work.

John Wycliffe said that he who studies and teaches the Scriptures "hath nede to live a clene life and be full devout in preiers that the Holy Spirit, author of wisdom and cunnynge, dresse him for his work and suffer him not to err." This is true of scholars who write on Biblical questions, as well as of preachers and Sunday-school teachers and missionaries. Prayer is better than grammar for a good understanding of that Book which is such a unique collection of history, biography, prayers, psalms, and letters.

Mrs. Josephine Butler has expressed some helpful thoughts on boldness in prayer :—

Our young children come to us fearlessly with questions on every imaginable subject, embracing often the most profound and difficult. They are not afraid to express their boldest surmises or wishes, believing that the father or mother will inform, correct, and enlighten. And we, earthly parents, being evil, know how to bear with our children's questions. We are not angry with them for their boldness. Our Heavenly Father is not less magnanimous towards us. Why, then, should his children ever hold back the freest expression before Him of difficulties and perplexities entering into the unseen, which may have been a life-long burden, even a secret terror to them, unspoken and unconfessed?

We have repeatedly called attention to the fact that one of the greatest dangers of our times is the handing over of the education of our children to the sacerdotalist. The prize for which the priest is struggling is the school; he is working ceaselessly to get hold of public money, and use it, independent of public control, for denominational ends, ostensibly, of course, to teach Christianity. The coming election is a grand chance for him. He will have no objection to attention being loudly called to any and every subject except education, for that will enable him to go on quietly and unobserved with his work. While others are making a noise and raising the dust he can seize the school. Let our friends be on their guard; the danger is real.

We learn from an authoritative source that Cardinal Vaughan has, in view of the forthcoming election, sent down instructions to the priests in the English constituencies to proclaim from the altar to their flocks the necessity of throwing over Home Rule for the present and supporting only those candidates who will vote for the subsidising of their schools from the rates or taxes. The news indicates one of the chief perils of the present position.

Some party of honest Protestants should be prepared in every constituency to discover the intentions of every candidate on the subject of elementary education.

The Methodist Monthly for July has a paper on "A Romish Seminary in England," which gives an account of Ushaw College, near Durham, an institution now a century old. The writer says that besides many laymen who have been trained in the College, there have been two cardinals, two archbishops, fifteen bishops, and over 800 priests. The present number of students, lay and clerical, is said to be about 600, half of whom are destined for the Church. We also see it announced that great preparations are being made to celebrate the centenary of Maynooth College. The educational institutions of the Romish Church are her most efficient means or spreading her influence, and the growth of them in number and efficiency constitutes one of our greatest dangers.

We once knew a costermonger who was converted late in life through a sermon, the text of which was John iii. 16. He never learned to read, but for him the whole Bible was condensed into that one verse, and he made such effective use of it that he will surely return with rejcicing from the land of the enemy, bringing his sheaves with him.

We also knew a Christian brother who had accepted the idea that much of the New Testament, as well as nearly all the Old, was Jewish. Matthew was essentially Jewish, the other Gospels and the Acts had a Judaic character. Hebrews, James, Peter, and the Revelation, all entirely Jewish. We said to him in those days that all that was left for us who were only Jews inwardly could almost be contained in one of the Bible Society "Portions." Last week we heard of that dear brother's death. He died in darkness. He had given away his Bible to the Jew—its good tidings of great joy, the word of the kingdom, the exceeding great and precious promises—he had nothing left. For, while an unlettered man may find the essence of all Scripture in a single verse, he who knows it all, and by a false exegesis puts the greater part away from him, finds that it is such an organic whole that if he gives away the body the life goes with it.

The Wesleyan Missionary Society, which is hampered with a debt, has decided on raising a sum of £50,000; at least its committee has unanimously agreed to recommend to the Conference that an appeal for that amount shall be made to the Connexion. Help is already coming in. "Promises are made on the distinct understanding that measures shall be adopted to arrest any tendency, through failing income, again to allow accumulation of debt." The present method of managing the funds of the Society is to prepare a budget, with estimates of expenditure; hence, unless the income fails, debt cannot be incurred. These methods may be good as far as they go, and we know they are very popular; but the work of God in foreign lands will not suffer itself to be manipulated altogether in such a way. New fields are opened, new men offer themselves, new needs press, and something must be done. Budgets and estimates are in danger. Whether these new things ought not first to be laid before the churches is a question of the first moment.

Writing on the subject of the Missionary deficit, The Methodist Recorder remarks :—

Of course there are wealthy people in Methodism who could lay down the amount at once, each giving £1000, or £2000, or £5000, without distress to themselves or need of appeal to their poorer neighbours. But many of our most prudent and far-seeing financiers —men who can never be suspected of any unwillingness to give—believe that in a case of this kind it is fitting and wholesome that all the people, even the very poor who can only give mites, should share the burden, so far as it is a burden, and participate in the privilege.

Now on this statement, which we presume is correct, we venture to ask whether there would have been any debt had these rich persons been regularly giving to missionary work according to their ability? The mere fact that our societies are driven beyond their budgets and estimates, get into debt, and then are extricated, shows that professing Christians are not systematically giving as God has given to them. The whole difficulty lies there.

The friendly attitude of many Government officials towards missionary work is a feature of the time. The work in New Guinea, where the L.M.S. has no less than 114 native teachers and fifty-seven students, has received marked commendation from Sir Wm. Macgregor, the Governor of the British portion of the island, who says—

Several years' work of the London Missionary Society has greatly changed the habits of the Lese tribe. A brief glance at the work done by the London Missionary Society from Maiva to Carama was considered to reflect the greatest credit on Rev. James Chalmers. Under the firm discipline practised at Dobu in the schools and services established there very extraordinary progress has been made. Rev. Mr. Abel is encouraging some of the young men in his district to form industrial settlements for the cultivation of cotton and such-like commodities, an attempt that deserves every encouragement the Government can give to it.

It is only twenty years since the missionaries landed among these cannibals, and took possession of their island, in the name of Jesus, by singing on its shore—

> Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
> Doth his successive journeys run.

Rev. J. E. Hanauer, of the London Jews' Society, gives in The Rock some account of a twofold operation which is going on in Palestine, one of depletion, and the other of augmentation. He deems it certain that in a short time there will be a Trans-Jordanic Jewish population. Simultaneously, he says, Syria is being gradually depopulated. Mission-schools are the cause; they take the children and train them in such wise that they find no scope for their learning and attainments at home, and therefore seek new spheres for themselves in America. The Protestants go to the United States, and the Roman Catholics to Mexico and South America. The Government is placing difficulties in the way of this emigration, but Governments can do little to check the tides of population from flowing whither they will.

An Englishman's hatred of compulsion is proverbial: hence the force of such an argument as this :—"He did not see why those who did not want beer should have the power of saying that those who did should not have it." Yet the man who wants the beer and gets it, and thereby becomes a drunkard, and throws himself upon the rates, has to be kept by the man who does not want the beer. The latter is compelled to keep drunken paupers, their wives and children, and also drunken lunatics. The compulsion is at present all on the good sober citizen, and it is on him to the extent of forcing his means from him. Is it not time that there was some hindrance placed in the way of those who use the public-house till they are pauperised? Strange that the brewer who used the words we have quoted above, should have gone on to say that he "was one to see temptations to drink diminished." Why? Because it is dangerous? What other answer is there?

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

The annual summer meeting of the voluntary workers in the seven homes and open-all-night Refuge, was held at Parson's Green, Fulham, on Saturday last. About 200 responded to the invitation. There were on exhibition specimens of needlework, laundry work, dressmaking and cooking by the girls of the Training Home, and a selection of pieces was given by them on a temporary platform erected under the old mulberry tree in the garden. The young women of the Rescue Home adjoining also rendered a selection of pieces. There was also an exhibition of musical drill by the trainers which was witnessed with much approval. A number of prizes for scrubbing, cooking, laundry work, needlework, good conduct, etc., were also distributed, for which the inmates had competed among themselves.

Tea was provided under canvas, and in the evening a large open-air gathering was held in the grounds of the Rescue Home, at which the inmates sang several pieces, and earnest Gospel addresses were delivered by several of the friends present. No doubt a good work is being done by the Homes, and those present on Saturday had an opportunity of seeing for themselves something of the practical teaching imparted. Mr. W. J. Taylor, of 200, Euston-road, London, N.W., will send particulars of the work to any address upon application.

*The Synagogue, not the Temple.

The above is the title of a book written by the late Rev. James Gall. The aim of the book is to show that the Synagogue, not the Temple, was the germ and model of the Christian Church; that the offices of elder and scribe in the synagogue suggested those which were afterwards appointed in the Church; and that the social worship of the synagogue was the pattern for the form of worship in the Christian congregation.

The temple, and the Levitical system connected with it, was wholly typical, and therefore temporary. Its antitype is found in the person and work and offices of Christ, and not in the ordinances and services of the visible Church. The New Testament nowhere hints at the perpetuation of the temple system in the Christian Church. It recognises no sacred persons like the Old Testament priests; no sacred places like Jerusalem and the temple; no sacred times such as those of the Old Testament feasts; no sacred objects like the furniture and the utensils of the temple; no sacred actions such as the numerous ceremonies of Levitical worship. Godliness became a matter of the heart, and so affected equally all believers, and every relationship and duty of life.

For some years the Church consisted solely of Jews, the synagogue continued generally to be their place of meeting, and their worship was the social worship of the synagogue, in which not pastors only, but the members took part, and to which the public were admitted. The Lord's Supper was observed in smaller assemblies meeting in private houses, and often referred to in Scripture as "the Church in thy house."

The Church's decline began when the temple system, with its priesthood and ritualism, began to be substituted for the simplicity and spirituality of the synagogue pattern. Judaising teachers began their work even in the apostles' days. The Jewish Christians had a not unnatural affection for their gorgeous temple services, and were too ready to favour any proposal to graft upon the Christian system something of the Old Testament ritual. In this the Romish apostasy began; and it was completed when ministers became priests, and the people mere spectators of a sacred performance. With an official priesthood there began to be sacred buildings, sacred times, sacred ceremonies, and in these supposed sacred things the people's religion consisted. The result was the decline of true godliness in ordinary life, and the establishment of a priestly despotism over the souls and bodies of men, by which spiritual worship and heart holiness were crushed. Lest all our condemnation should be for others and none for ourselves, we quote a few words from our author that suggest the need of self-examination. "There is not a Protestant church or sect which is not daily growing its own popery, and it is only by continual revivals and reformations that it can escape from an unconscious process of corruption and decay. The church that most glories in its own superiority to other churches is the one that ought to be most jealous of itself."

In our author's judgment it was an equal mistake to make the Jewish commonwealth the model for Christian states. This mistake was made when Constantine professed Christianity, and it was accepted by the Reformers when the power of Rome was destroyed. Its consequences were most disastrous. The civil power was used to enforce religious observance, and the acceptance of a particular religious creed. The distinction between the Church and the world was obliterated. The whole nation was regarded as Christian, the parochial system was founded, each parish was entrusted to the care of a specially appointed minister, and behind the minister was the civil power.

Incalculable injury was done to the Church of God by this mistake. The cruel persecutions by Popery before the Reformation, and by Protestantism afterwards, had their root in this. Godliness was supposed to be promoted by it, but all the Legislature could do was to enforce the outward form of godliness, and to enforce this upon unconverted men was practically "to abolish the Church as a holy people, called out and separated from the world."

Other practical questions are raised by the author, such as the loss of the Baptism of the Holy Ghost resulting from the Church's departure from New Testament methods; the distinction between pastor and evangelist; and the fellowship meetings which were a part of the synagogue services, and were included in the services of the early Church, but abandoned when the pastors became priests. In these and other matters the author expresses opinions in which we generally agree, though some of his statements are open to question. Enough has been said to indicate that the book is thoughtful and suggestive, and that its teaching has a very important bearing upon questions agitating the minds of many to-day.

AMONGST FRENCH POOR.

The plea which was inserted in The Christian of September 27, 1894, for a movable room for Gospel work in the villages near Boulogne, was so liberally responded to that an iron-room, capable of seating fifty-five people, was sent out to Marquise, and opened on the last Sunday in March this year with an overflowing and most attentive audience.

The incidents connected with this little room are deeply interesting. Some years ago a good man in this very place, who had been brought to Christ, began to pray for his wife, who continued a staunch Roman Catholic. He prayed also for his neighbours, and that some real Gospel teaching might be brought to Marquise, which is an utterly Roman Catholic place. He prayed long without receiving any encouragement, his wife assuring him time after time that she would never change her religion. On his death-bed he made one last appeal to her that she would turn to Christ; and he died praying for her. Soon after his death the woman found herself so unpopular as the widow of a Protestant, that her little business dwindled, and she left the place for Boulogne, where she is still residing. Here she came under the influence of the pastor of the Eglise Reformée, and gradually her strong prejudices yielded, and she accepted Christ as her only Saviour. In the light of the new life which now filled her soul, with joy she took up the prayer of her husband that the Gospel might be preached at Marquise.

The answer to these long-continued prayers has come in the faithful labours of M. Mabboux, of the McAll Mission at Boulogne, and in the setting up this iron room in Marquise, where twice a week he gives Gospel addresses, and teaches the children. It does one good to see the earnest faces and quiet attention of these poor people, and to hear their hearty singing of the few hymns they know. And, more than this, several have already given evidence of a change of heart.

Marquise is an interesting old place about twelve miles from Boulogne. Prayer is asked for a continued blessing on the work in the iron room. It does not hold its place without opposition, but already forty names have been enrolled as Protestants, and there are many signs that a deep spiritual work is going on. May God put it into the hearts of Christians to start similar halls in other villages!

Unity v. Uniformity.

All thoughtful minds have at one time or nother dwelt upon this subject, but I am ot aware that it has ever been worked out s it could certainly be developed. It lucidates and throws Heavenly light not only pon many earthly but also upon many spiri- ual subjects.

God's general principle is unity. Man's ecessity compels him to work with unifor- nity. Landscape gardeners, and experts in arious departments where taste and fashion ule, endeavour to overcome uniformity. They mitate God's hand as far as they can in this espect; but their best endeavours are ailures, if we compare them with nature. Every cloud in the sky varies; every branch nd sprig is different; every landscape scene s unique; every sheep, which to an ignorant ye exactly resembles another, is different rom its fellows in numerous respects. Even flock of crows so vary, that the young crow when he arrives at the field, goes at once direct to the spot where his mother feeds. Ve should require large microscopes before ve could detect the thousands of variations hat adorn nature, and annihilate sameness nd mere uniformity.

TO PRODUCE UNITY WITH VARIETY

s a God-like power. Uniformity is man's veapon, and distinguishes the work of man at ll times. The archæologist, when ransacking ncient mounds and heaps, knows that he has ome upon the work of man, and not the work f God, when articles uniformly moulded and onstructed are turned up. Man's power of mitation—man's power of producing exact esemblances, is a very valuable faculty, but t is a faculty that weakness requires. It is ot a God-like power.

GOD'S RELIGION

s distinguished by the same features as dis- inguish nature, and this argument appeals owerfully to the thoughtful man. Man's eligion is remarkable for its uniformity in all ations. The machinery is uniform in every and; the modes, the plans, the outward order s perfect. Priests are all carefully classified; utward display, dress and ordinances, are trictly uniform, and the words used are used ll over the world. Change of form, change f ordinances, change of words, are all un- nown, and the ignorant, seeing the machinery o be so perfect, assume that it must be a God- ent religion. The ordinances were God- ent as in the Jewish tabernacle days, when very outward type had its anti-type in the haracter of Christ, and when every order vas graven as by a pen of steel in the written Word of God. Their exact obedience only ould fulfil the written Word. But in those lays the adversary hated the types because hey were in the Word made imperative; ow the adversary loves types, because they re removed by the Word.

CHRIST REMOVED THE FIGURES,

r literally in the Greek, the parables, which tood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal rites or ceremonies, mposed on them till the time of reformation. The apostles, like our Lord and Saviour, ttended no altars, claimed no earthly priest- hood, performed no Tabernacle services what- ever. They were mighty preachers, but carnal ordinances they enjoined the believers o "touch not, taste not, handle not, seeing hey all perish with the using, after the com- mandments and doctrines of men."

The Jewish sacramentarian was entitled to ask how doctrine, power, and life, could be maintained without an outward and visible formula of symbols. This objection is the natural question that Nicodemus would have asked Paul before he spiritually knew the new birth. How could the Christian walk alone without the types and shadows as crutches to support him? How could absolute uniformity be maintained without outward and visible carnal ordinances?

ABSOLUTE UNIFORMITY is not known in the New Testament, and is not known in nature, either. Variety is God's rule in nature as well as in the New Testa- ment. It is quite true man cannot produce unity without uniformity, and it is quite true that man's religion must have uniformity, sameness, and machinery. God's religion has unity and yet extraordinary variety. The Holy Ghost is the Guide, and Christ the Shep- herd, but both Powers are unseen, and the unconverted cannot imagine the work going on with unity of doctrine under unseen Powers. They know that the promises re- garding the Holy Ghost are manifold; He is to be "Comforter," "Guide," "Reprover," and He is so practically to the youngest saint, but you never can convince a blind man regarding unseen things.

LET HISTORY SPEAK.

The saints were scattered all over the world after Christ's time. The witnesses* were, according to the researches of Sir Isaac Newton, in every part of the known world within seventy years. They had neither high altars nor ceremonial displays. In Rome, in Corinth, in Thessalonica, and the great centres, they had neither cathedrals nor temples. In Rome they met in hidden corners; their love feasts and remembrances of Christ took place in the vaults where the dead were buried after Paul's time. The people were invited to witness no public ceremonies whatever; only the godly knew the places and times of meeting. Saints in every part of the world spoke to their neigh- bours, during the first and second centuries, but the Word was always by the Holy Spirit made powerful. The heathen temples were forsaken gradually, although no temple ser- vices took their place.

By the "foolishness" of mere preaching a tremendous revolution was prepared over the whole known world; and when the mighty carnal empire of old Rome was sinking under the mere preaching of the doctrines in the Epistles, she of Christianity, assumed its name, loaded it with outward heathen ordinances, and prac- tised it with heathen cruelties, combining Christ's name with Mahomet's barbarities.

But the question remains unanswered; How did it come to pass, that the whole known world was moved by mere preaching—mere speaking? The preachers were educated in no religious colleges; were not trained by men to hold the Unity of the Faith, and yet they were in faith so united that vast coun- tries were all brought under the Saviour's name, and the doctrines of the Word of God ruled in Europe and Asia alike. Even coun- tries such as Arabia and Egypt, that after- wards corrupted Christianity, and in the fifth century fell into Mahomet's foul hands, at first heard and admitted Christ's power; and in their worst days Mahomet was obliged to honour Christ nominally before he could seat himself on the throne. They had no unifor- mity in Europe and Asia, but they had extra- ordinary Bible unity—one faith, one spirit; and they shook not only whole cities, but whole countries. God leaves details to be worked out liberally by spiritual men.

FALSE RELIGION BRISTLES WITH DETAILS.

Details are merely the bristles of unifor- mity and man's stiff systematic religion. Details are vital matters when the workers have not the Holy Ghost, his holy liberty, his spiritual power. Man's religion sends forth slaves to work details. God's religion sends forth sons to work principles. Man holds the reins of the flesh, bones, and con- duct. God holds the reins of the heart, and simply says, "Work in my vineyard."

Look at the Reformation in Germany. When it took place in France, under Calvin's spirit, 600,000, it is believed, were bold and true for God's Word. Its opponents boasted they destroyed almost that number before they could rescue France out of Bible hands. It was a grand country ere that—the leader in science, yea, and commerce also. Since that it has first groaned under tyranny, and secondly proved to be a turbulent volcano. Look at the Reformation in England, Scotland, Den- mark, Germany, and Switzerland. No uni- formity was possible; no uniformity was attempted; but the unity was complete in doctrine. Every vital point was perfect, and the work was deep and true. In non-vital points there were all the variations you observe when saints differ in age, knowledge, oppor- tunities, and powers. Freedom demands room for variations; the same variations are seen wherever freedom reigns in the world.

God's witnesses display more variety and less uniformity than is found in any religion. No other religion whatever could give such Godlike liberty, and yet exist and manifest such wondrous power. The varieties among Gospel preachers are a proof that the Holy Ghost made them and kept them, as a hive of bees is kept, all true to the hive, all work- ing, yet flying here and there, never following each other. Christ is their only centre; his word their only word.

The question of unity and uniformity also gives the key, I think, to the variations in our Hebrew and Greek manuscripts.

* The word Protestant is by etymology a most accurate name for God's witnesses, even in Old Testament days, (= "witness for").

BE NOT AFRAID.

When about thee seem to hover
Sorrow and shade,
When the storms are brooding over,
And flow'rets fade,—
Still his thoughts are wreathing round thee,
Who so long with love hath crown'd thee,
Who in mercy sought thee, found thee,
Be not afraid.

He hath helped in days departed,
When darkness came;
Well He knows, oh, patient-hearted!
How weak thy frame.
Thou canst reach Him in thy praying;
Loved of God! his name be saying,
He remains, through time's decaying,
Still, still the same.

Gently will thy Shepherd take thee
On to his fold;
Strength that never can forsake thee
Thy life doth hold.
He will brighten paths before thee,
And be Light around thee, o'er thee,
And the shadow-hours restore thee
In joys untold.

Far away be doubt and fearing!
Stand undismay'd;
Even now thy King is nearing,
Mighty to aid.
Naught of good shalt thou be needing,—
Love Divine is interceding,
Christ Himself for thee is pleading,—
Be not afraid.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 26.

The great hall was crowded on the first evening of the Conference. After a few moments spent in silent devotion, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor led in audible prayer. A hymn was then sung:—

Help us, O Lord, to praise!
Come with a touch of fire.

Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided, read 1 Pet. i. 1-11, and said:—"The great drift of Old Testament prophecy, as we learn from the verse we have just read, is the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. Of course the prophets of old foretold a great many other things, as for instance the casting away of Israel by reason of sin, and the glorious restoration of the future, but the great outstanding topics are these—the sufferings of Christ, and the glory which should follow. In the mind of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ these were the two great themes to occupy the mind and heart of his people; and these were the two great topics which burned in the heart of the apostle Peter, who was, as he reminds us, an eye-witness of the sufferings of Christ, and was one of the three on the Mount with Jesus when they caught a vision of the most excellent glory. It is very interesting to notice that the fiery, impulsive, vehement Peter, who, when the Lord was disclosing the passion He was about to accomplish at Jerusalem, said, "Be it far from Thee, Lord," should have so much to say of the sufferings of Christ. In this Epistle you will find a sevenfold reference to the sufferings of Christ, while you will also find, I think, a sevenfold mention of the sufferings of believers with Christ. Peter seems to have learned the lesson the Master would have him learn. May we all learn that this is not our place or time to reign; that down here we must be willing to take our place with Him in rejection, sore trial, and suffering.

At the close of these opening words, Mr. W. R. Lane led in prayer, and the following address was given:—

Revealing the Father.

By REV. E. A. STUART.

With the tremendous scheme that has been put before us to-day, it would be impossible fully to deal in the few minutes allotted me. We might occupy the whole conference in touching the very margin of thought suggested by such a subject as "Our Lord Jesus Christ, the burden and fulfilment of the prophetic word." I propose, therefore, to limit myself to this one thought—"our Lord Jesus Christ as Prophet, the burden and fulfilment of the prophetic word." You will have Him brought before you to-morrow as Priest, and on the third day as King; to-night, therefore, we will consider Him as Prophet. In the first place let us be very clear what we mean by prophet. Not necessarily a fore-teller, but always a forth-teller. A prophet is one who tells forth what God has told to him, it may either be in regard to the future or the present. The Lord Jesus Christ is the true Prophet, the true forth-teller; and as such He is the burden of the prophetic Word: that is to say, all through the ages man has been looking forward to the coming of one as a forth-teller of what is in the heart of God. Even before we open the Bible we find this longing on the part of man. You remember that Socrates, who pierced as far as an uninspired man could pierce, spoke of one who should come to teach men, and exhorted his disciples to cling to that hope like a man on a raft, till someone should come to teach them more. In another passage he says that it is necessary that a man should arise to teach us how to behave towards God and man. One of his disciples inquired: "When shall that time come; who shall that man be? I will gladly welcome him." It was the cry of mankind for one who could tell forth the things of God.

Now, turning to the Bible, the same deep longing is the constant burden of the Old Testament. You remember how Moses in Deut. xviii. 15 said: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee like unto me; unto Him ye shall hearken." And so all through the Old Testament, man looked for

THE COMING OF THIS FORTH-TELLER.

It is the one constant cry of the people of Israel. It is started again by Micah, "The Lord shall be a light unto me" (vii. 8). Isaiah takes up the same word, "O house of Jacob, come ye, let us walk in the light of the Lord" (ii. 5). He looks forward to a time when God shall teach them his ways, and his word shall go forth from Zion (ii. 3). He realises that God had spoken by prophets to Israel, that the revelation should go forth from Israel to the nations at large; and he longs for the time when from Zion should go forth the word, and all nations should learn the glory of God. But Isaiah found that Israel proved false to their trust. The nation was entrusted with a revelation of God, but did not proclaim that revelation; and therefore a true forth-teller was needed, and there arose before him the figure of the perfect servant of the Lord. When Isaiah found that Israel had disappointed God (to use human language), he saw this word entrusted to a certain remnant, and still further he saw that the one who should suffer martyrdom on account of the truth, and make atonement for the sin of the people, was also to be the great Prophet. Then he saw that the remnant was focussed in one man, on whom, as in chh. xi., lxi. the Spirit of the Lord should come that He might go forth as the Prophet of God.

And passing from Isaiah you find the same burden right down to the end of the prophetic Scriptures. The very last of the prophets, Malachi, speaks of the time when "the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, and the Messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold He cometh, saith the Lord of Hosts." So in Hag. ii. 7, "The desire of all nations shall come." Whether, therefore, you look outside or amongst God's people you find there is this constant burden, "Oh, for a prophet to come and declare to us the whole counsel of God!"

And when the Lord Jesus Christ came, this longing was so intense that on the great forerunner appearing the priests and Pharisees at once asked, "Art thou he that should come? Art thou that prophet?" He told them he was not. Then when the Lord Jesus Christ came, men began to muse and inquire whether this were the prophet. You find in that strange midnight scene, in John iii., when Nicodemus came to Christ, that his first words were, "Rabbi, we know that Thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these miracles that Thou doest, except God be with him." That is to say, he felt Jesus must be the expected prophet. So in the next chapter we find a woman, at the very antipodes, morally and intellectually, from Nicodemus, cherishing the same hope, "Sir, I perceive that Thou art a prophet," and even the people began to realise that "a great prophet is risen up among us, and that God hath visited his people" (Luke vii. 16). So again in John vi. 14, "This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world." This was the verdict of the general multitude. But there were also spiritually-minded men, who saw that the predictions of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Joel, and other prophets awaited fulfilment; and as Jesus Christ looked on these men, He understood their yearning, and He seems to call them when He cried, "If any man thirst, let him come to Me, and drink." This spake He of the Spirit." So again in vii. 40, some say, "Of a truth this is the prophet." Thus the one they were longing for is He who, as prophet, is the burden of the prophetic word.

Now I need not stay to prove He is the Prophet, we all believe that; but let us consider whether He who is the burden of the prophetic word is also its fulfilment. He is, but why? First, because of his dignity: second, because of his humility.

1. Because of his dignity. In Heb. i. 1, we are told that God, who spake in time past by prophets, "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Therefore his revelation is PERFECT REVELATION.

The revelation through the prophets was imperfect, fragmentary, here a little and there a little; but when God speaks through his Son it is a wholly perfect revelation. The Lord Jesus Christ in John iii. speaks to Nicodemus about earthly things which he, as a master in Israel, ought to have understood. He should have known that man, to enter the Kingdom of Heaven, must be born again, and that if anything spiritual is to be received it must be from above. But, while he might be expected to have understood these, there are other things which he could not guess—such as that God should give his own Son; that He should come to be lifted up as the serpent in the wilderness; and that, being lifted up, He should become a blessing to everyone that believeth, that life might be given freely to whosoever will—these are heavenly things requiring an interpreter from God. "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man." Jesus came to reveal these things. Human teachers have tried to reach heaven, and some may have reached a little height and gained some faint adumbration of the truth; but none could reveal God save He who came down from Him. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." It is because He has come from the bosom of the Father, that He is the true Prophet come into the world. Any human teacher I have the right and even the duty to criticise—searching if these things be so—but when the Son of God who has come down from heaven speaks of what He knows, criticism has no place, man is dumb, we have but to hear his voice. When He speaks I dare not criticise. "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." God says "This is absolutely true," and thus we find rest. His dignity attests Him as the fulfilment of the prophetic word.

2. But the second reason that He as the true Prophet is the fulfiller of the Word, is because of his humility. All through, the Gospel of John dwells on that humility. As in ch. xiv. 8-11, Philip says, "Lord, shew us the Father," and Jesus replies that having been so long with Him they ought to have known that "he that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."..."The words which I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works." So again and again He declares that the words He speaks are not his, but the Father's; and that the works He does are not of Himself but of the Father. Thus He emptied Himself; and therefore the revelation He gave of the Father was perfect. For example, I was plagued at one time by a reporter who could write fairly good sermons. He would take notes and produce and print something—very good, but not mine. Then came another who simply took down my words and faithfully rendered them. These were published. They might not be so good as the others, but they were mine. This is a feeble illustration of the way in which the Lord Jesus Christ sets forth the Father. Before He came the channels were not perfect, clean, and clear. Moses, for example, was a very faithful witness; but he was not perfect. You remember on one occasion, in the matter of the rock at Meribah,

HE WAS NOT AMEN TO GOD.

He was told to speak to the rock, and instead he smote it. But the Lord Jesus Christ is the Amen of the Father. Why? Because what He has received, He makes known.

Now the last point is this: What revelation of God has He given to the world? It might be summed up in one word, "Father." He teaches us when we pray to say "Father"; when we come back to say "Father"; when we are in trouble to say "Father": all through it is Father. The world has been very slow to receive the truth, that Jesus came to reveal the Father. I have often said that the history of the world and of individuals is very similar. If you go back in the history of the world you see Abraham and Sarah in their tent, and God is very near to them, like a guardian angel over them. But as the world, growing older, learns fresh revelations of the holiness, majesty, and justice of God, even God's people seem to move further off, and man and God seem to get further and and further apart. God speaks through dreams, through visions, through prophets, and then for centuries there is silence. At last the Lord Jesus Christ comes, and without doing away with any intervening revelation of the majesty, holiness, and justice of God, He yet brings man back to God, by revealing Him as Father; so man learns more of God, while he is drawn nearer to Him. And even so with individuals. Take a little child, how very near God seems to him; so near that he would not be surprised were the curtain to fall aside and the face of God to be seen by him. But as that child oes forth to school he learns more of God, and nore of sin and guilt, and the distance seems to ncrease. At length the child learns from the Lord esus Christ to call God Father, and then God be-omes nearer than ever, although he has learned nore of his holiness and justice than before. Thus the Lord Jesus Christ reveals the Father and eaches us to approach Him as "our Father."

Now, observe what is the influence of this revela-ion. Many have never yet learned it. They have een to the cross of Christ; they rest in his sacri-ce and rejoice in the Holy Ghost. But if you ask f they realise God as their Father, you find it is ittle more to them than an abstract truth. Yet esus Christ is very jealous for it. You see this in ohn xvi. 26, 27. He is telling them He is going way, and He seems about to say, "I pray the 'ather for you," when He appears to draw Himself p: "I say not unto you that I will pray the Father or you, for the Father Himself loveth you." He eaches that He came not to make God love us, ecause God does love us, and He came to reveal hat truth. The Lord Jesus Christ is very jealous f the Father's honour and love.

Now, see how this will influence us in three epartments of life. First in duty. If you and I ould use as our motto these words from the lips f Jesus Christ, how easy duties would become; Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's usiness?" My Father's business—is that what ou and I are doing? All these little things we ry to roll off on other people as not worth our hile, they are our Father's business for us. Then e must be about them, constrained by the law of ove.

Second, see how Jesus deals with sorrow. "The up which my Father hath given Me to drink, hould I not drink it?" It makes all the difference f it comes from the Father. Here is a sick child. The nurses and the doctor have tried but cannot et it to take its medicine, but see, mother comes n and the child takes it from her hand. What nother gives it must be right. So we have to earn to take these sorrows—whatever they may e—from the Father's hand, and all will be well. Many try to say, "Not my will, but thine"; but it is ard, because they have never learned to say, Father," "my Father." Let them learn that ruth from Jesus Christ, and bitter will become weet.

Then, lastly, with regard to difficulties, can you rust your Father? That is the solution of all. Men come to me and say, "How can you explain his or that?" I cannot explain it; but I know ny Father, and I can trust Him. He is at the helm. dare not speak to the man at the wheel; but so ong as He holds the rudder He will steer right.

Thus the Lord Jesus Christ has come as the Prophet, for whom the world has longed, and who is he burden of the whole word of prophecy. We ave seen that He did come as the true Prophet; hat He has given a true and perfect revelation; hat He is the faithful and true witness; that He has evealed the Father; that He has taught us when e pray to say "Father," when we come back to ay "Father," when we are in darkness to say Father." We are not orphans in this world; we ave a Father, and He loves us. Oh, children of God, grasp hold of the Fatherhood of God, and rust Him in all hours of darkness, difficulty, and espair.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson said: One chief thing neglected o-day is the habit of holy meditation, and espe-ially is the lack felt among those who minister in the Word. If those whom we call the laity were to see hat ministers were allowed more leisure, the Church ould be vitalised by the quickening breath of God's Holy Spirit. It seems to have been reserved for a rother from another hemisphere to recall this lost rt, the constant habit of holy meditation. He will ow lead us in prayer and address us.

A Forgotten Truth.

By REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

Let us read part of the three first verses of the rst chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews. "God ..hath in these last days spoken unto us by his on ... when He had by Himself purged our sins, at down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." You see that in these three verses we have the three ffices of Christ. "God hath spoken by his Son"—hat is the prophetic office: "when He had by Him-elf purged our sins"—that is the priestly office; sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on igh"—that is the kingly office. All three; and these three inseparably united, and just in the order in which they are given here. I want this evening, God helping me, to try and gather up what has been said in order to help you and myself to understand better what it is that we have in Jesus Christ as the Prophet.

To this end let us think first of the close connection between these three offices. It is not an accidental thing that there are three offices, and not two or not four. These three meet my every need. Man, as philosophical books show you, has three great faculties: there is the power of knowing, there is the power of seeing, and there is the power of willing. I know; that concerns things outside of me. I have a sense which takes cognizance of them. I know whether it is dark or light. Next, I see; and light or darkness becomes pleasant or unpleasant to me. I see; I am conscious of good or evil. Then I can will. When anything affects me pleasantly, I can long for it, or if not, I may refuse it. These three faculties in the human soul are met by the three-fold work of Christ. My understanding may be all wrong, my power of knowledge may be darkened, my feeling of consciousness brings me to see guilt and condemnation; and then my will may be depraved. Now Christ deals with these. He brings as prophet the light of God into my heart, that is the first thing; and then, when the light comes in and shows me sin, and I see my guilt, He shows me the way of pardon, He shows me the way to God. As a priest He brings me to God; as a prophet He shows me my need—his priestly work is to meet that need. Prophet first and then Priest. Then comes the kingly office. When as Priest He has redeemed, purged, sanctified me, He must rule me, so that we as saints may serve Him. These are the three offices of Christ. Do not look on them as something accidental, but understand how inseparably united they are.

Next try to take hold of the truth that the prophetic office must come first. There is a great tendency to exalt unduly the priestly office above the prophetic, and the kingly office above the prophetic, and thus truth suffers immense damage. Think for a moment. I read in theological works that the priesthood of Christ is of super-eminent importance. I do not believe that. I worship and adore Jesus as my Great High Priest and Redeemer—we cannot think too much of that office—but I do not like the word super-eminent—all three are equal, all are inseparable parts of one unity, of God's great plan. Moses said, "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you, like unto me." First Prophet, then Priest, then later, King. So our Jesus, when on earth, acted three years as a prophet, teaching and speaking before He came to Calvary as priest, and by-and-by with the ascension began his kingship. The prophet must prepare the way. So you see how the Church suffers harm by neglecting the prophetic office of Christ, for the prophetic is the key, the entrance upon the priestly, as the priestly is to the kingly. Think, friends, what is the reason why so many who have strong faith in the priesthood of Christ, and thank God for that faith; but why have they so often to complain that they do not realise its power? I believe in the great living High Priest gone into the holiest of all to open it for me; but why has it no power? Why does it not influence heart and life more? Because you from the teaching of men, from a godly mother or a faithful minister, rather than from Jesus Himself. You do not allow the Heavenly Prophet in his own way to lead you into the mysteries of Divine truth. All down the ages God shows it is needful there must be prophet as well as priest and king; and there is no more practical truth than this. I must have Jesus as prophet, for of Him God said, "Hear Him." Hence every day and every hour my soul rejoices in that great Prophet who will reveal Himself as Jesus, my High Priest, and lead me to his kingship, revealing his mighty power to make me do his will, and live to God's glory. Let us beware of counting this a little thing, and limiting it, as some do, to the future. A prophet is a mouthpiece of God. He does not merely foretell; and the larger work is that of our Lord Jesus as prophet in the fullest sense.

TAKE THAT TRUTH ON TRUST,

One thing more in illustration of the truth that this prophetic office has been neglected. What do we see? We look back on that blessed Reformation—for which we thank God—when the great truth was restored to Christendom that man needs no human intervention between himself and God, that every anxious soul can go straight to God because the Great High Priest, the Mediator, lives for ever. But while that truth has been recalled we do not equally see that we need no intervention of a human prophet. We can have direct teaching by the Holy Ghost, just as we may have direct forgiveness through the blood. Has this truth been maintained as that of the priesthood has been? I trow not. We have not honoured Jesus as prophet as we should have done.

Now we see in the history of Israel the result of this mistake. One great difference between the prophetic office and the priestly and kingly office was that the priestly and kingly were hereditary and institutional, but the prophetic was not. All the children of Aaron were priests—they belonged to the priestly race, however unworthy. Just so with the kingly office. David's sons were the royal house—that was a fixed thing. But the prophets were not a fixed thing. Prophets were raised by God as He had need of them; and He raised whom He would. So when priest and king failed,

THE PROPHET CAME TO RESTORE AND REVIVE.

There was about the prophetic office more liberty than in the priestly or kingly office. Now I believe that our great need at this moment is a clear apprehension of the prophetic office of Christ. As Priest He has finished his atoning work; as King He sits on the throne, but as Prophet we need Him now. Think of the perishing millions of men in ignorance, waiting a heavenly teacher. Think of the blindness and darkness all around. Think of the mistakes of the Church. Think how every time I read one word of that precious Word I must wait on God to ask the Lord, the Divine Prophet, to speak in my ear.

Let us go further and see how Christ exercises this prophetic office. You know how in that last night Christ spoke those beautiful chapters, John xiv. to xvii., and gave the promise of the Spirit. But have you noticed the chief thing He says about the Holy Spirit; what is his work? We think of holiness, sanctification, and power for service; but the Lord Jesus speaks of something else. "He will guide you into all truth." Just as if He had said, He will reveal to you the deep meaning of my crucifixion, my finished work of redemption. I have told you these things, but you do not understand; He will show you their meaning. He will show you what a life of holiness, a life of power is. He will both teach you and enable you for it.

Then Jesus declares that in heaven He will watch over the Church and individual souls, and give all the Divine teaching needed. Alas! is there not too much of our own teaching instead of this Divine teaching? True, true; because we forget the One who teaches. Let me quote from Paul's letter to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. i. and ii. When Christ sent Paul to preach He gave him, we are told, a warning to preach, "not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect." He does not say, "Take care you preach the cross," that is taken for granted, there is no doubt about it; but He says, When you do preach, see that you do not do it with enticing words of man's wisdom. So in the second chapter we have the word "not" eight or ten times in this connection. "I came not in excellency of speech," "not with enticing words," that "your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men," for Christ is the wisdom of God. So in the first chapter we see that God has made Christ Jesus unto us wisdom (as prophet), righteousness (as priest), and sanctification (as king). I ask you, has not Christ as righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, seemed far more precious to you than as wisdom? Ought that so to be? Let us be sure that were we to give up trying to preach with beautiful words of human wisdom, and seek to let the Holy Ghost speak through us, there would be new power in the preaching of the cross.

Thus the Lord Jesus Christ carries on his work by the Holy Ghost, and what is his work? See the old prophets, what was their work? Mainly threefold. God raised up Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the other prophets to testify against the sin of Israel, to "cry aloud and spare not." That is one great burden of their prophecies. But next they had to reveal spiritual truth and the law of God. A prophet had to reveal the true spiritual meaning of the sacrifices, the temple service, of religion itself, and of prayer. And lastly, he had to utter God's promises to give glimpses of the future, some in the near future, some remote, dim, and distant; some concerning coming revival, others concerning the kingdom of Christ, and things yet to come in the far-off ages.

Now friends, has the Church of Christ itself no need of this prophetic work? You know how greatly it does need it: and how He does it;

BY BEING THE MOUTHPIECE OF GOD.

Moses was the mouthpiece of God, so Christ as the Revealer of the God and Father, of life and power, becomes, as it were, his mouthpiece. And what do we need now? Testimony against sin and departure from God. We need some strong fearless voice raised against the coldness, formality, and indifference of many. I heard an old missionary say once, "Would to God He would raise up his ancient prophets in these days!" Is there no cause? Is there nothing that needs rebuke and reproof? Would that every believer and every minister learned to wait for their message from God, ready to be his mouthpiece, dependent only upon Him to give the needed power and faithfulness to testify against sin.

Once again, we need to have the spirituality of religion revealed to us, and this Jesus is ready to do. I said before that when priesthood and kingship had become lax and fallen into decay, the prophet came to call them back and usher in revival. I have said also that these blessed truths of priesthood and kingship do not exercise their due sanctifying power because we do not honour Him as prophet. Oh, brethren, let our hearts be glad to-night that Jesus is able and willing to restore our spiritual perception of truth in all its beauty if we honour Him as prophet. He is able to let the truth of God burn afresh in our hearts, to revive for us its spiritual force, to make its heavenly glory a reality in our life. It is his office as prophet to convince of sin and re-inspire spiritual truth.

And lastly, here there is the promise of the future. He reminds us of these promises and inspires hope. We look on this great London and see millions who never enter a place of worship, who live without God altogether. Some mourn and say, "We can do nothing;" while others are longing and crying, "Wilt Thou not revive us again that we may rejoice in Thee?" If you want joy in Him He can restore hope and buoyancy of spirit, and teach you to trust these difficult things to Him as the God of our salvation.
